22,321. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Crofter and blacksmith.

22,322. Your croft is on the estate of Murkle?—On the estate of Sandside.

22,323. Was your case dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—No.

22,324. You have a written document?—Yes.

22,325. Kindly read it.—'I have been appointed 'at a public meeting of the inhabitants of Sandside to give evidence before the Deer Forest Commission for 'that district of the parish of Reay, in the county of 'Caithness, from the Burn of Isauld on the east to the 'county march on the west, a distance of about four 'miles, and from the Atlantic Ocean on the north for 'about four miles southwards. About the beginning 'of this century this district contained upwards of 'thirty small holdings, with right of pasture over the 'area I have described. In 1804 two were evicted 'from Braekside; in 1808 eight were evicted from 'D'achow; in 1809 eight were evicted from Sartigal, 'Summeran and Achraskar; in 1815 ten were evicted 'from Fresgoe, and in 1820 one from Borlum, all for 'the purpose of the holdings being put under sheep. 'For fourteen of these provision was made by settling 'them in what is called the village of Reay. For eight 'provision was made on other parts of the estate of 'Sandside. The rest were accommodated on other 'neighbouring estates or emigrated to America or 'Australia. The great bulk of this district now forms 'part of the farm of Sandside, but there are still 'twenty-three crofters with holdings of half an acre 'upwards, their gross rent amounting to £112 odds. 'The grazing grounds extend to from 150 to 200 acres 'of links, with a croft added thereto by the present 'proprietor. The grazings are only available in summer 'and harvest.'

22,326. You mention some dates towards the commencement of this century and beyond your own recollection. May I ask how you obtained the information?—I obtained the information from a trustworthy old man who herded the crofters' cattle at that time; a man of the name of Alexander Sutherland.

Thurso.
Hugh Campbell.

22,327. He was a shepherd?—He herded their cattle, and he lived to within a few years ago.

22,328. He is dead now?—Yes, he is dead now.

22,329. Then, in your opinion, is there land within the limits you have mentioned suitable for crofter settlements?—Oh yes, there is plenty of ground outside the farm available for crofter settlements.

22,330. Which farm?—Outside the arable farm of Sandside.

22,331. Is all the land you have been referring us to grazing land?—Yes, it is all sheep grazing land except the crofts.

22,332. And that land, as I understand, was occupied, or parts of it, by these crofters?—Yes.

22,333. You were appointed, I think you mentioned in your paper, at a public meeting?—Yes.

22,334. Now was there a desire evinced at that meeting to have additional land?—Their desires are to have additional land, but still to keep possession of their present holdings.

22,335. Is the desire in the form of getting additional grazing land or getting land for new settlements?—Land for cultivation and with a right to a pasture.

22,336. Do you mean in addition to their present holdings, or as new holdings?—Present holdings; and outrun for their cattle in the winter time, as they are not privileged to have any grazings in the winter time.

22,337. They have no winter grazings?—No, they have no winter grazings in the district I represent.

22,338. How do they manage their stock in the winter?—They just tie them to the chain.

22,339. Has each of them got cattle?—Some have got one, and others have got two cows, and some have three or four.

22,340. Have they any sheep?—Some keep a few on their crofts.

22,341. And have you any horses?—Generally one pony, some have two.

22,342. Have you any stock yourself?—Yes, I have two cows and two horses.

22,343. Do you manage them in winter in the way you have described?—Yes.

22,344. You buy feeding for them?—Buy feeding for them. But one of the ponies is out with the gamekeeper in the shooting lodge, so we just winter one pony and two cows and a calf.

22,345. Which is your nearest village?—Reay.

22,346. And how far is your croft, for instance, from the village of Reay?—It is not a quarter of a mile.

22,347. All the land I think you have mentioned is low-lying, none at a great elevation?—No.

22,348. Is it easily accessible by road?—Yes.

22,349. There are roads throughout?—There is access by roads to all the crofts; there are various roads in the district.

22,350. How long have you been settled there?—I was born there.

22,351. You belong to that locality?—Yes.

22,352. Was your father a crofter there?—My father was a crofter and blacksmith in the village.

22,353. You have succeeded him in that?—Yes.

22,354. May I ask what number of crofters do you represent at present?—Twenty-three.

22,355. Are the holdings, which these tenants occupy, all small?—All small, except one who has from 80 or 90 acres.

22,356. Altogether?—Altogether, pasture and arable.

22,357. How much of that is arable?—As an approximation I would say about 30 or 40 acres arable.

22,358. But I suppose some of them are much smaller?—They are all smaller than that.

22,359. He has the largest?—He has the largest.

22,360. Are some of them very small?—Half an acre.

22,361. There are some as small as that?—Yes.

Thurso. — Hugh Campbell.

22,362. Did these tenants apply under the Crofters Act?—No, they made an amicable settlement with the proprietor.

22,363. The whole of them?—The whole of them.

22,364. And were their rents materially reduced?—They were reduced 3s. on the land and fifty per cent. on the grazings of the links.

22,365. Mr Forsyth.—I wish to put a few questions, first as to the crofters at Reay on the Sandside estate. Can you tell me what size of holdings these people aim at; is it a self-sustained holding that would occupy the whole time and be self-supporting, or a smaller class of holding?—Their wishes are to have self-sustaining crofts, but the condition in which they live in that part of the district is that they are generally employed by the proprietor, most of them say they would be content probably with 30 acre crofts; but they would suppose, to be independent and to work entirely on the croft, that 50 acres would be necessary for the existence of the crofter to live and move and have his being.

22,366. By 60 acres do you mean 60 acres including arable and pasture, the two together?—They said they would wish for pasture,—hill pasture for their cattle in the winter time.

22,367. But do you mean 60 acres arable?—Fifty acres arable, and what would be arranged by a judicial tribunal or by a valuator of hill pasture in connection with their crofts.

22,368. And what rent would you propose for such a farm as that probably,—of course, it can only be approximately,—say 60 acres arable, which is a comparatively large holding, with proportionate pasture?—Their wishes are that that rent should be fixed by a valuator.

22,369. You are not able to state any rent?—No, I am not able to state it; my knowledge of land, being a tradesman, is not so very advanced.

22,370. Then you are of opinion that a holding of that kind naturally would be self-supporting; it would be in fact a small farm?—Yes.

22,371. Then these 60 acres of arable, with proportionate grazing, would probably, as far as one can judge, be quite a considerable farm?—Yes, it would.

22,372. And it would take some capital, would it not, to commence?—It would.

22,373. Have you any ideas as to how the capital for such a holding could be provided?—Some of them are in circumstances to stock, others are not.

22,374. Then, you think some of these people at Reay, on the Sandside property, would be able to start a holding of such a kind?—With very few exceptions.

22,375. There are, I believe, a good many small farms here and there in Caithness?—Yes.

22,376. Do you know many farms of that size?—No, I know them in the west end of the county, but not in the east.

22,377. But about the Reay district?—Yes, I know about it.

22,378. But you don't know this class of farm in the Reay district?—I know them in the Reay district, in the west end of the county, but I have no knowledge as to the east end. The one croft I mentioned is the only approximation.

22,379. You can give no idea of the amount of capital required for such a holding? It appears to me to be considerable.—No, I can give no idea of the amount of capital required.

22,380. You don't propose that all the holdings should be extended to that size, do you?—No.

22,381. Then what size of holding would you propose for men who would work otherwise and make use of the holding as a home and for a cow and so on?—Twenty acres would be quite sufficient, with their employment.

22,382. Twenty acres of arable?—Yes, with an outrun.

22,383. Then, even with 20 acres of arable and grazing, you think that the tenant of such a holding would require to work elsewhere in order to live comfortably?—Yes.

22,384. I am particular on this point, because these ideas are larger in the amount of acreage than have generally come before us. You don't think that a small holding of four or five acres of arable, with some pasture for one or two cows, would be a suitable kind of holding at all, do you?—No, it would not.

Thurso. — Hugh Campbell.

22,385. The holding should be of considerable size, enough for horses' labour, for working the arable land by horses?—Yes.

22,386. Then your 60 acre arable farm would be what I should call a pair horse farm?—Yes, 50 acres would require a pair of horses.

22,387. You aim at simply a pair horse farm?—A pair horse farm; a pair of horses doing nothing else but working on the farm.

22,388. Have you any ideas as to the stock that would be on such a farm in this country, how would it be worked? I am assuming outrun for sheep and cattle in addition to the 60 acres.—Well, as to my knowledge, I would be rather indefinite in giving an idea on that question.

22,389. You could not tell us as to the number of say cross or half-bred lambs or young cattle that could be turned off?—No, I am unable to speak on that point.

22,390. But your conclusion finally is this, that a crofting holding in this county should not have less than 20 acres of arable?—Twenty acres of arable.

22,391. Mr Sutherland.—What district particularly do you speak to; do you speak for the whole parish of Reay?—No, for the district I represent.

22,392. But that is the district of Reay?—The district of Reay, four miles from the sea upwards and four miles from the Isauld Burn to the county march with Sutherland.

22,393. Now, with regard to that definite area you have just now stated, could you give us an idea of how it is occupied at the present time from Isauld Burn westward to the Sutherland boundary?—Mostly by crofters and the links for grazings, and as you go to Drumholistan as part of the sheep farm, and the peat moss.

22,394. Give us an idea how it is distributed among the inhabitants at present?—Sandside farm forms the greater part of the arable land.

22,395. What is the area of Sandside farm?—I am sorry to say I cannot tell you the acreage. I had no access to the estate book.

22,396. Can you give me any idea of the number of families that live in that district you have referred to; are there a hundred families?—No.

22,397. Are there fifty families? (Consults list).—Somewhere about thirty or forty families.

22,398. Where do the bulk of them live?—The bulk of them live in the village of Reay.

22,399. How many families are outside of the village of Reay, have you any idea?—Four in Fresgoe, six in Milton; there will be about fifteen families outside the village.

22,400. How many of these fifteen families that are outside the village of Reay have got land?—The fishermen have got no land, and there are a good many cottars and workers about the village that have got no land,—not a great many—about ten.

22,401. To what figure does that take down your fifteen, taking these off?—There are some cottars that have just small pieces of land. One I know that has not got a quarter of an acre; the fishermen have got no land, but all the rest have got land. I have got twenty-five in my district, and they all have land but three fishermen that live in Fresgoe.

22,402. Now, coming to the village of Reay itself, how many families are there?—That have got no land?

22,403. Altogether?—Twelve.

22,404. How much land have they got between them?—I could not tell you that.

22,405. Have they got 200 acres?—Oh no.

22,406. These twelve families have not 200 acres, you think?—No, the largest crofter in it has nine acres.

22,407. And how is the remainder of the land outside the 200 acres held?—As a sheep farm.

22,408. In the occupation of how many people?—One.

22,409. Do you mean to say then that the whole of that district, with the exception of 200 acres of land, is in one holding? Is that the state of the matter?—Yes.

Thurso. Hugh Campbell.

22,410. Out of the whole district between the county boundary and the Isauld Burn, with the exception of 200 acres, the remainder is one holding, is that the case?—Yes.

22,411. Have you any idea of the acreage of that district you have referred to?—Approximately, I might give an idea.

22,412. Yes, I ask for no more?—As to the arable ground I cannot say, but—

22,413. The whole area?—The whole area is supposed to be about 30,000 acres.

22,414. And of that the twenty-four families have got 200 acres and the remainder is one holding, is that the case?—Yes.

22,415. That is the distribution of land in the district of Reay?—Yes.

22,416. Then you stated, with reference to how that state of matters was brought about, that some of the people who were dispossessed of the land when it was made into a sheep farm were provided for on that same estate and in the same neighbourhood, and that others went abroad. Have you any idea of the proportion of them that went abroad?—The smaller proportion went abroad.

22,417. Was there half, do you think?—One or two, some of them settled upon the neighbouring estates and others went to Shurrery.

22,418. And were there any holdings in Shurrery before then, can you inform us?—I rather think so.

22,419. They were put upon new holdings there, and how did they get on there?—They got on just as people get on generally after evictions, in a rather miserable condition.

22,420. Had they to make new homes?—They had, and to reclaim the bog.

22,421. And did they get any advance of capital to do that?—I am not sure of that.

22,422. Have you ever heard they did?—No, and I never heard they did not.

22,423. And they built houses and reclaimed land from a state of nature, did they?—Yes.

22,424. Then you stated that you got this information,—what you consider reliable information on this point,—from the man who herded their cattle?—In the Reay district.

22,425. How is that land used at present,—I am dealing with the same land, namely, the land the people were dispossesesd of, and which is now in one large holding,—is the rearing of cattle any part of the use to which that land is put at the present time; are cattle grazed upon that land now?—No, the crofters have no cattle there now.

22,426. But the present holder, does he rear cattle?—It is held as a sheep farm.

22,427. Cattle are not on it at all?—No, no crofters have cattle there at all.

22,428. So that land that was formerly devoted to the rearing of cattle is now devoted solely to the rearing of sheep?—Yes.

22,429. That is one of the changes that have taken place through this consolidation into large farms, is it?—Yes.

22,430. And there was some land that was under cultivation before on this large holding?—Yes.

22,431. Is it being cultivated now?—No, it is not cultivated now.

22,432. It is let out of cultivation?—It is let out of cultivation.

22,433. In your opinion, has the arable area on those holdings been largely decreased by the change?—Yes, the arable farms have been decreased by the change; the land is not in rotation now.

22,434. Then, not only was the change from cattle to sheep by the consolidation, but also from arable to waste land?—Arable to waste land.

22,435. That is one of the ways of 'improving' it. Then you state with regard to these holdings that one crofter had from 80 to 90 acres?—Yes, one crofter.

22,436. Is he a crofter?—He is a crofter, his rent does not extend to £30.

22,437. And others, you say, go down to half an acre?—To half an acre.

Thurso. Hugh Campbell

22,438. Then, with regard to the desire that exists in the district of Reay for more land, you said, I think, that those whom you represent here to-day are more anxious to have an extension of their present holdings than to migrate to new places?—Yes.

22,439. Was that desire in your opinion actuated by the fear that they would have to leave behind them the homes they have now?—No, not at all. Some who have good houses wish to retain them, and get land added.

22,440. The half-acre holdings?—No, not half-acre holdings, they have good houses in the village.

22,441. How much land have they there?—The largest crofter will have from nine acres down to half an acre, but there are tradesmen in the village.

22,442. How many of the eighteen families are tradesmen?—Five or six I would suppose in the village of Reay, but there is another township of Milton where farming occupies their time.

22,443. And you think that these people would like rather to get an extension of their present holdings?—Yes.

22,444. Well, is it for pasture, for increasing their pasture land?—Hill pasture for their cattle in the winter time.

22,445. And, in your opinion, there is plenty land adjacent to their holdings for that purpose?—Plenty.

22,446. Where?—There is a park attached to the crofters at a place they call Brackside, and there is plenty of green pasture outside of that.

22,447. Was it formerly under cultivation?—Yes; there is one place, Borlum, has been cultivated in the middle of last century as an arable farm.

22,448. It existed as an arable farm?—In the middle of last century.

22,449. And is it put to that purpose now?—No, it is a grazing farm.

22,450. A separate grazing farm?—Yes.

22,451. Who holds it now?—Mr Innes.

22,452. Is that the tenant of Sandside?—Yes.

22,453. It is in the one large holding?—Yes.

22,454. Which was formerly an arable farm?—Yes, in the middle of last century.

22,455. And that land is contiguous, or not very far away from the people of Milton?—Yes.

22,456. And would it, in your opinion, form a very convenient enlargement of their present holdings?—I think it should, in my opinion.

22,457. And it could be occupied by them to profit, you think?—It could.

22,458. And advantage?—And advantage.

22,459. That is your opinion?—Yes.

22,460. Now the fact that these people of Reay would not require to leave their present holdings would enable them to get an enlargement of holdings with less capital than if they were building new houses altogether?—Yes.

22,461. Did you ever know a crofter becoming a large farmer? Of course, I know perfectly well you don't attach any definite meaning to the word "crofter," but did you ever know a small tenant becoming a large tenant?—No, not a small tenant. Of course, Mr Innes was an innkeeper.

22,462. That is the present tenant of Sandside?—Yes.

22,463. But are there none of the large farmers of Caithness who were very much smaller farmers at one time?—Oh yes.

22,464. Do you know if ever there was any advance of money made to them from public sources to enable them to become larger farmers?—I am not aware of it.

22,465. And it is, in your opinion, somewhat common or not altogether uncommon that small tenants should become large tenants; you have known cases of that, haven't you?—Oh yes, it is quite natural, that, in the scale of life.

22,466. And you think that if one small tenant was enabled to become a large tenant without public advances of capital it should become more general, provided the land were there?—Yes, that is my opinion.

22,467. Now I wish to ask you a question with regard to the state of the large agricultural farms in

Thurso. — Hugh Campbell.

Caithness. Is it your opinion that, on these agricultural farms, the tendency is increasing to allow arable land to run out of cultivation?—That is the tendency.

22,468. Is it very marked of late years? — Very marked of late years.

22,469. What is your opinion of the cause of that? —My opinion of the cause of that is that capital is allowed too much to run in the soil of our country, and my opinion is that the only capital that a poor man possesses is his labour, and he is not allowed to place his labour, as his capital, on the soil of the country; that is my impression.

22,470. Do you think, then, that for the proper use of that land what we now require is to allow human labour to have access to it?—To be more general on God's heritage.

22,471. And is it your opinion that that labour is being excluded more and more every year? — Every year.

22,472. And that that is the reason why the land is allowed to run into a state of nature?—Yes, even the vegetative power is lacking, and the land itself is going back to its natural state.

22,473. And you are of opinion that the best use that could be made of that land is to allow the people access to that land?—Evidently.

22,474. And you are of opinion that they could cultivate it to advantage?—That is my impression.

22,475. Mr Gordon.—You mentioned that you spoke to the portion of the parish of Reay to the west of the Isauld Burn?—Yes.

22,476. Do you confine yourself to that portion of the parish?—Yes.

22,477. I want to put you right as to the extent, you know. You said that the ground you referred to extended back four miles from the south?—Four miles southward from the sea, from the Atlantic Ocean.

22,478. And four miles eastward from the county march. Well, four times four are 16, and 16 square miles are only 10,000 acres, not 30,000?—I beg your pardon.

22,479. You referred to the whole Shurrery farm, I think?—Yes, I did.

22,480. I merely wanted to put you right on that point. Now, how many of the Reay crofters do you think would like to have 50 acres?—Only two, in that part of the Reay village, but in the Milton district there are other two.

22,481. Well, four times 50 is 200. Can you tell me where they would get 200 acres arable land in that quarter?—It could be got about Borlum, but that would affect materially the farm.

22,482. That is to say the 200 acres would have to be taken out of Borlum before you could get that extent?—Yes.

22,483. Would not taking the 200 acres leave other 16 crofters without land?—Yes.

22,484. Now how are we to get that? We must try and reduce these statements to practice?—That problem could not be solved.

22,485. There is the farm of Sandside and the farm of Borlum, but as far as I am aware we are not supposed to take these arable lands. [Mr Sutherland. —Borlum is not arable.]

22,486. Borlum is arable certainly. The difficulty is to get the extent of land within reasonable distance of the crofts, do you see?—Yes.

22,487. Now can you tell us how many of the people get employment from the proprietor there; how many of the 8 crofters? How many crofters are there in Milton, 6 or 8?—Six or 8.

22,488. And there are 14 in Reay, that will be 22; there are 6 tradesmen, that leaves 16 crofters. Now, how many of the 16 crofters get employment from the proprietor?—They are mostly all employed, more or less. There are 3 crofters who get no employment.

22,489. You see that evidently there is a difficulty of getting the land which you suggest should be got; now what would be your opinion of the advisability of giving these 16 crofters additional grazing lands which could be got and which all could participate in? How would that benefit them?—That would benefit them very much; that is their general desire.

Thurso. — Hugh Campbell.

22,490. They have 2 cows just now, most of them? —Their general desire is to get winter grazing for their cattle.

22,491. Now, suppose that the Commission was to recommend all the ground which is available for the grazings, would that not benefit them nearly as much as the arable would which we cannot get for them?—Yes, that would be a benefit to them materially in the present circumstances.

22,492. So that each man, instead of having a great extent of arable land, should have 4 cows instead of 2, assuming that that could be done. Now I want to get your opinion, because although you are not a practical man you know very well what the people want. Now could you tell me what use the people would make of the remainder of the hill ground; what use could be made of that?—The desire of the crofters that I represent at Reay is for additional acreage to their holdings, and an outrun for their cattle, and that would seem to satisfy them at present.

22,493. You don't think they would like to go into a club stock of sheep?—No, I would not.

22,494. Mr Sutherland.—I wish to ask you as to Borlum farm. When do you say it was last cultivated? —The farmer cultivated some ground about two years ago.

22,495. How much of it?—Approximately, I would say about 30 acres.

22,496. Have you any idea of the extent of land that was formerly in cultivation on Borlum farm?— —No.

22,497. What part of it is the acreage you have first mentioned of the whole; is it a third of it?— About a third of it.

22,498. Do you know anything as to the intention of keeping it in rotation?—My impression would be that it was for the purpose of making better grass.

22,499. But before last year, how long was it without cultivation?—It was never cultivated by any farmer that was there, at least since the first of the century; it has not been in cultivation till Mr Innes cultivated it.

22,500. And is it the same crop that he has put in the whole?—Grass is the last crop, corn and turnip.

22,501. A regular rotation?—A regular rotation.

22,502. Last year?—Two years ago he put it in regular rotation.

22,503. But from the beginning of the present century down to last year it was out of cultivation?— Not last year, some four or five years ago. The last park was let out two years ago.

22,504. In this area you have referred to, how many holdings were there before the people were cleared out? —Borlum proper was one arable farm.

22,505. But you said that within this whole area there were thirty small holdings?—Yes, but I am referring to up the Isauld Burn.

22,506. I am referring to the same area all included now in the grazing farm?—Yes.

22,507. You said that before they were cleared out there was provision for thirty holdings?—Yes.

22,508. Are you not of opinion that, where people had thirty holdings before, you could find room for sixteen now?—Those sixteen are not generally upon the crofters' holdings; the crofters' holdings then composed the land up the Burn.

22,509. They are all upon the area of the large farmer now?—Yes, mostly.

22,510. And are you of opinion that arable land of 60 acres could not be found for sixteen families on all that area?—No, I think it could not.

22,511. What do you mean by arable land; is it land at present under cultivation?—Land that could be cultivated.

22,512. Well, what is your standard of arable land? —The number of acres?

22,513. If you were put on Shurrery, for instance, would you call the land under cultivation there arable land, at present under cultivation by the crofters; is it not arable?—Yes.

22,514. Is it not the fact that before they went there it was heather?—Yes, it had been reclaimed from the bog.

22,515. And could they not make arable land there just as well as in Shurrery?—Oh yes, there is a fine clay deposit on some parts of it.

22,516. It is a very fit subject, is it not, for making land of?—I should not like to give my opinion; my knowledge is not very extensive.

22,517. But have you seen land before it was cultivated and after it was cultivated?—Yes.

22,518. And was there a great difference?—A great difference.

22,519. Then with regard to the land that you could get adjacent to the people of Milton, how much stock do you think they would be anxious to get grazing for?—Well, I could not say, as I only spoke personally to them, not at a public meeting.

22,520. But at the present time, how many sheep have they got?—They have no sheep at all.

22,521. And how many cattle have they got?—There is one crofter has three cows, two horses, and some small stock, that is the largest.

22,522. How do they winter these?—There is another crofter that has three or four horses and a corresponding number of cattle.

22,523. How do they graze these cattle?—On the farm.

22,524. On the land?—Yes

22,525. So that practically they have little or no pasture, have they?—The rough bog pasture.

22,526. Bounding with the grazing farm?—Yes.

22,527. Mr Gordon.—Is there a regular farm steading at Borlum?—Yes.*

22,528. So that the farm could be cultivated as it was formerly?—It was cultivated by the late factor, Mr John Patterson, in his time, in the commencement of the century.

22,529. Have the people of Milton any grazing except this rough bog pasture?—They have the grazing of the links.

22,530. Of the green hill?—Yes.

22,531. The Chairman.—Suppose it were found that additional grazing were available, are you of opinion that there is old arable in the neighbourhood of that grazing also available and which could be dealt with as affording arable proportionally to the additional grazing?—No, it could not be dealt with in proportion to the grazing, because there is not enough of ground available for arable cultivation.

22,532. I am speaking of old arable?—No, there is not.

22,533. Then supposing suitable additional grazing could be got, you are of opinion that there is not old arable sufficient to form a proportional extension of the arable holdings?—Borlum is the only arable farm that could be cultivated extensively. The adjoining crofts where the people were settled in the first of the century are not so extensive as to correspond with the hill grazing.

22,534. Well, is there such an amount of old arable as would afford a proportional addition to a certain number of the crofters?—Yes.

22,535. How many crofters might be reasonably satisfied with the available old arable proportional to the extension of grazings which they might receive?—I have not got the mind of the district I represent; what they wanted was a small addition to their present crofts.

22,536. They are desirous not so much of new settlements as additions to their present settlements, either by arable and grazing or by one or other?—Yes.

22,537. You mentioned cottars?—Yes.

22,538. How many cottars are on that property?—Five.

22,539. They have no land?—Estate employment.

22,540. Are they all in estate employment?—Yes.

22,541. Regular?—Regular.

22,542. They live by that?—On the farm and on the estate.

22,543. And they depend on that for their livelihood, do they?—Yes. Thurso. Hugh Campbell.

22,544. Now you mentioned labourers, are there any labourers besides the cottars?—There are one or two labourers.

22,545. You said there were three fishermen at Fresgoe?—Three families.

22,546. Have these fishermen no land at all?—No.

22,547. They live by the sea?—Live by the sea.

22,548. Now have these fishermen living by the sea during the last few years been on the whole as well off or not so well off as their neighbours, the crofters?—They fished somewhat profitably since three years, but not so profitably the last year.

22,549. But during the last say five years upon the whole they have been getting on as well as the crofters or better?—Better.

22,550. And they depend for their livelihood on the sea?—They depend on the sea for their livelihood.

22,551. Are there any other families besides those at Fresgoe depending on the sea for their livelihood in that neighbourhood?—None.

22,552. You mentioned that a number of those you represented live in the village of Reay and in the village of Milton?—Yes.

22,553. Then are their houses separate from the land?—In Milton they adjoin their crofts; in Reay there are several patches of land which the crofters hold that are not joined one to another.

22,554. They don't live upon their holdings, but they live in the village?—Yes.

22,555. And how far is the land they cultivate from their village homes?—It surrounds the village; I would say the farthest away is not a quarter of a mile.

DONALD CAMPBELL, Reayside (81)—examined. Donald Campbell.

22,556. The Chairman.—The next name is Donald Campbell, Reayside, but I have a letter from him in these terms:—'I regret exceedingly that I am 'unable to be present to-day at the sitting of the 'Royal Commission. I have been very unwell for the 'last few days and quite unfit to appear. I herewith 'send my statement in writing.' Now the statement is in these terms:—Evictions from Shurrery in 1838.—Of thirty-one families resident in this township, a few got small holdings in a moss hag, considered unfit for carrying sheep; one or two had temporary arrangements made for them for a year or so; but five-sixths of them at least had to quit the estate, and a considerable number left the country. This township, with its arable land and pasture, was about seven miles in length, and four in breadth. Brubster evictions from 1837.—There were twenty-seven families evicted from this township. Dwellings to accommodate about one half of the evicted were erected in a quagmire which, by way of courtesy, I suppose has since been dubbed a village. Small lots of ground reclaimed from the inhospitable soil around these dismal dwellings by the exertions, and at the expense of the occupants, by-and-bye were added. Not a few of the twenty-seven families had, like their Shurrery neighbours, to seek an asylum in distant countries. Shebster 1839–40.—There were forty-two families evicted from here, and for four no provision at all was made by the estate. They had to exist as they best could elsewhere. From Skaill twenty-eight families were evicted, and I know of no provision made for any of them. From Upper Dounreay twenty-three; from Lower Dounreay seven; and from Lybster nine families were sent adrift without any special provision for them, that I know.

(Signed) Donald Campbell.

DONALD MACKAY, Buldoo, Reay (56)—examined. Donald Mackay.

22,557. The Chairman.—Are you appearing as a delegate?—Yes.

* The delegate has since written explaining that there was a steading at Borlum, but that there is not one now.

Thurso. — Donald Mackay.

22,558. For crofters on the estate of Murkle?—I have a small statement.

22,559. You are appearing as a delegate for crofters on the estate of Murkle?—Yes.

22,560. Are you under the Crofters Act?—No.

22,561. What is your rent?—£15.

22,562. But are you a crofter?—Yes.

22,563. You settled privately with the estate?—I am a leaseholder.

22,564. What is the duration of your lease?—Partly by my own desire and partly offered by the factor, nineteen years.

22,565. And these years are running?—Nearly come to an end.

22,566. When does your lease terminate?—In 1895.

22,567. Can you tell us the size of your holding?—About 15 acres, with some outrun.

22,568. How much of that is arable?—Fifteen acres.

22,569. And what is the extent of the outrun?—I have got the extent from Mr Tait about seventeen years ago, and I was told that it was taken from the Ordnance Survey, but at the time the Ordnance Survey was going on I had some improvements going on, and part of it was not at that time reclaimed that has since been. I am not sure whether that has come into the outrun or whether it is included in the arable.

22,570. Can you give us a general idea of the extent of your outrun according to your own idea?—I should say it is not four acres.

22,571. Now kindly read your statement—'At 'a meeting of crofters held in Reay Public School, 'on the 11th of August, I have been, with four 'others, appointed to give evidence before the Royal 'Commission as to pasture land within the parish of 'Reay. With one exception each have undertaken to 'bring before the notice of the Commission pasture land 'in their respective districts which may be suitable for 'small holdings. That which I wish to bring before 'your attention is the grazings that have been joined 'to the farm of Lower Dounreay on the east side, lying 'between the crofters' land in Buldoo and the seashore, 'bounded on the east by the farm of Wester Borrowston. The extent at present is about 200 acres. 'Before it became part of the farm of Lower Dounreay, 'thirty-four years ago, it was held as common pasture by 'seven tenants of the township of Buldoo, namely, George 'Sutherland, Angus Campbell, John Angus, Wm. 'Henderson, Alex. Cormack, Neil Henderson, and Alex. 'Mackay. There was another small croft in connection 'with a school taught by Mr Donald Macpherson, but 'he did not participate in the common grazing with 'the others, he having his cow grazed—probably by 'paying for it—on the neighbouring sheep pasture. 'With the exception of what formed this small croft, 'and the one occupied by Neil Henderson, the common 'pasture then extended to the Parliamentary road and 'included about 50 acres more than it now does. This 'was cut off when the farm of Lower Dounreay was let 'to the present tenant in 1859 by a ditch and fence 'being put in along the whole length of the pasture 'parallel with the road, at a distance of about 12 'chains. On this two new crofts were formed, occupied 'by tradesmen, and the rest was divided to the two 'tenants already on that side, and to one whose croft—'having since had two other crofts joined to it—was on 'the other side of the road. The same number of 'holdings have thus been kept up. Excluding the last 'holding referred to and the other two possessed by 'tradesmen, the one a farm about 60 acres, arable and 'pasture, and the others between 9 and 10 acres each, 'the extent of the other five is from 7 acres arable, with '5 of outrun, to about 20 acres. Two had their cases 'dealt with by the Crofters Commission upwards of 'three years ago. The one got his rent reduced from '£12 to £8, 5s. and the other from £7 to £5. Two are 'leaseholders, myself and another.'

(Signed) Donald Mackay.

22,572. What is the name of the other leaseholder?—Henry Henderson.

22,573. He holds for a term of years?—The same term of years as I do. Thurso. — Donald Mackay.

22,574. Is that in your own handwriting?—Yes.

22,575. Kindly sign it.

22,576. Some of my colleagues have seen this land, having gone personally over it.

22,577. Mr Sutherland.—You say you are speaking for a public meeting that was held in the schoolhouse?—No, I am speaking for those who occupy the district I represent.

22,578. The district of Buldoo?—Yes.

22,579. How many people are there?—Eight tenants.

22,580. Then you have had adequate means of knowing their opinions on this subject?—Yes.

22,581. You are a County Councillor?—I have been.

22,582. Are you a County Councillor now?—No.

22,583. But, apart from other opportunities, the fact of your having been a County Councillor enables you to know exactly what the opinions of the people are?—I do. I know generally the views of the people.

22,584. So that you speak with authority when you give the opinions of the people you represent here?—Yes.

22,585. You mentioned that you yourself had experience of reclaiming land in Caithness?—Yes, on my own croft.

22,586. How much of it have you yourself made into arable land?—About the half, nearly half.

22,587. Nearly half of the 15 acres?—Yes.

22,588. Over how long did your operations in reclaiming land extend?—It extended perhaps over a period of fifteen years, but at the same time I was a labourer on the neighbouring large farm, and in my spare hours and days I improved the croft.

22,589. Then it would be a croft of 7 acres when you went there first?—It might be above 7 acres.

22,590. A little over 7 acres, and you have made it into one of 15 acres of arable land?—Fifteen, if not more.

22,591. Did you do that without assistance from any person beyond your own labours?—No assistance whatever, except a few hundred tiles I got.

22,592. And this operation of reclaiming land—is it quite common round about you?—Quite common, so far as the extension of their holdings allows them to go.

22,593. Have you ever made any estimate of the amount of land they brought into cultivation in that way in your neighbourhood?—Well, I can't say as to that.

22,594. Have you any reason to suppose that the bulk of the arable land of Caithness was brought into cultivation in the same way as you are doing now?—I believe it has.

22,595. And the operation of reclaiming land is still going on?—Well, not so much in my locality, because they have no land to reclaim.

22,596. The outrun out of which they made the arable is now almost all used up?—Yes.

22,597. And is the amount of land available for reclamation limited now in another way, that is in respect of reclaiming it?—Well, with the exception of the land that I have described, the other portions came in as outrun to the large farms.

22,598. So that it is not you who have got the outrun, it is the large farmers, is it?—It is all in possession of large farmers.

22,599. I think the 200 acres that you referred to, and that you showed us, were before in the occupation of small holders?—As grazing land.

22,600. And now it is where?—Joined to the farm of Lower Dounreay.

22,601. And is there any desire or any indication on the part of the farmer of Lower Dounreay to reclaim that land?—Well, it has all been under the plough about thirty years ago, but it has been laid out as permanent pasture, and remains so.

22,602. Would such land as that require great improvement to make it arable?—Subsoil drains would do it.

22,603. But is that all the improvement it would require?—Yes, that is all, except buildings.

22,604. Do you know why it was taken from the small holders and given to the large holder?—I don't know the reason.

22,605. But as a matter of fact it was?—It was.

22,606. And the result is that you, who are an improving tenant, have now got no land to improve, is that so?—Yes.

22,607. Is there any other place except this 200 acres that you would like to call our attention to as suitable for the purpose we have in view?—Well, there is another delegate here that represents another township in my neighbourhood; he has seen the pasture he is to describe occupied by the tenants at the time it was under cultivation.

22,608. But this part of the pasture you have called our attention to was at one time occupied as a common grazing by several small holders?—By the tenants of Buldoo.

22,609. And in your opinion could it be advantageously given to small holders again?—I see no difficulty whatever; it is adjoining their holdings.

22,610. And there is a desire on the part of the people to get access to it?—There is a general desire on the part of the people in my locality to have it.

22,611. Mr Gordon.—Do you think that these 200 acres could be reclaimed?—About one half, I should say, could be profitably cultivated.

21,612. Which half do you think?—The east part, on the low side next the shore.

22,613. You don't think the top of the hill would be suitable for arable land?—It would come in very suitable as pasture.

22,614. I quite agree with you, but I don't think it would be arable, the rocks are rather near the surface for that I am afraid. Did you build your own houses?—Partly.

22,615. Mr Forsyth.—What class of holding do you propose to put upon this land? Is it simply as an addition to the present holding that you look to these 200 acres or to new holdings?—In my opinion that would be preferable to an extension, because it would not be suitable for the holdings as they are at present divided.

22,616. You think the existing tenants at Buldoo could take up the whole of these 200 acres, Dounreay parks?—As common pasture.

22,617. Would you not extend your arable in that case?—There is no way to extend it, unless new holdings were formed on this pasture.

22,618. Then it is mainly a pasture addition that you want, a certain portion of these 200 acres?—That is the desire of the people whom I represent.

22,619. Could you handle so much pasture with the amount of arable you have got? Would you not have too much? Your holdings are not very large and the extent of pasture is large. Could you see your way to work that profitably along with your present holdings without going farther into arable cultivation?—To work it as arable, do you mean?

22,620. No, to work it as pasture?—Oh yes, most suitably.

22,621. Have you not in contemplation the addition to your arable holdings by taking in some portion, the best portion of it?—Of my present holding, do you mean?

22,622. Yes?—There is nothing to take in.

22,623. You consider the whole of this as pasture land solely?—Yes.

22,624. I am referring to the 200 acres of the Dounreay park. It is for pasture that you are looking to that or a portion of that?—Well, it could be made into holdings, but the desire of the people at the present is for pasture.

22,625. Have you any ideas as to how you would work this land; would you commence sheep on it?—No, I would not. There has never been sheep put on it by the tenants.

22,626. It would be cattle grazing?—Cattle and horses.

22,627. The Chairman.—That land (which I have not seen) is, I understand, at present part of the farm of Lower Dounreay?—Yes.

22,628. Is the land fenced?—Yes.

22,629. And it is all under grass?—All under grass.

22,630. Do you and those whom you represent feel a want of extension of grazing?—Greatly.

22,631. What is the extent of your present grazing?—We have no grazing whatever, except on the crofts.

22,632. None at all?—None at all.

22,633. Now have you some stock?—I have.

22,634. What stock have you?—Two cows, two calves, and two ponies. I don't always keep two ponies.

22,635. You have that at present?—Yes.

22,636. Have each of the crofters you represent some stock?—They have all stock except one of the tradesmen; he has cattle stock, but no horses.

22,637. Do each of these keep their stock entirely upon their own holdings?—They do.

22,638. And buy fodder in winter?—Usually, they do, both summer and winter. I have to do it myself very often, that is feeding stuff; in summer time when the grass fails.

22,639. And you express the opinion that the addition of this land, if it is available,—I don't know at present whether it is or not,—but the addition of this land, if available, would be a very great boon to those whom you represent?—It would.

22,640. You mentioned, I think, in answer to a previous question, that you had reclaimed the arable of your holding?—Yes.

22,641. Did you get assistance from the landlord?—I got about 300, or a few hundred, tiles for subsoil drains.

22,642. Was that the whole?—That was all.

22,643. How does that land you reclaimed compare in quality with the 200 acres we have been speaking of?—It compares pretty well, because the pasture I refer to is part of it good land and so is my holding, and some of it very bad, not worth cultivating.

22,644. Speaking generally, would you say that your land is better than the 200 acres, or of the same quality, or not so good?—I would say it was equal.

22,645. The same kind of land?—Generally.

22,646. Now, would a part of these 200 acres, a section of it, be easily reduced to rotation?—Quite easily.

22,647. And could grow the crops of the district?—Yes.

22,648. Corn, potatoes, barley, and turnips?—Yes.

22,649. Suppose that land available, would the desire of the tenants be to make a section of it arable and the rest grazing, or would it be all dealt with as grazing?—The desire would be to occupy it as grazing.

22,650. The whole of it?—The whole of it under present circumstances, because they could not occupy it otherwise.

22,651. They would not plough up a portion of it?—No, it would not suit.

22,652. Would it not suit you to plough up a bit of it?—No.

22,653. That block of land, as I understood you to say in answer to a question from Mr Sutherland, is the only block of land to which you are now referring?—Yes.

22,654. And another delegate is to tell us about another portion?—Yes.

22,655. Is it your opinion that there is no room with the 200 acres for new settlements?—Well, two holdings could be formed very well.

22,656. Would you be in favour of the formation of such holdings?—I would.

22,657. Or would you be in favour of the whole of that land, if it could be got, being devoted to the crofters who are at present there?—Well, in present circumstances I would be in favour of having it, as we are at present situated, as common pasture.

22,658. An extension of holdings, and no new settlements. You think that would be the better way?—Yes, in present circumstances, but it is not my opinion that it is the best.

22,659. You don't think that is the best?—I don't think it.

Thurso. —— Donald Mackay.

22,660. But you are presently expressing the opinion of those whom you represent?—Yes.

22,661. Was that subject discussed?—Yes, privately talked.

22,662. You had talked about it, and you are telling us the result of your conference?—Yes.

22,663. Mr Peter Keith (representing the Murkle estate).—When the parties of whom you have spoken occupied this part of Lower Dounreay, was it as subtenants under the then tenant Mr Paterson?—It was.

22,664. Then when Mr Paterson left that place in 1859, and when it was given to Mr Miller of Scrabster, was provision made for the then occupants of the pasture of which you have spoken?—None whatever.

22,665. Did they get the farm what is now Wester Borrowston?—They had it for a time by paying rent for it, but not as common pasture.

22,666. When they were removed from Lower Dounreay they were provided with pasture on Wester Borrowston at a fair rent, I suppose?—I could not say as to the rent.

22,667. In any case they were provided with pasture?—Yes. The pasture here referred to extended to about 300 acres, was let from year to year to the crofters in Buldoo and Achreamie, about 30 in number, at a rent of £80. In the course of a few years, the one half of it was joined to the farm of Borrowston, and the other, being utterly insufficient for the requirement of the people as pasture, was then offered to them in allotments, without dwellings—a few chains broad and about a mile long. This offer could not be accepted by anyone, the intention being evidently to bring it into cultivation for the purpose of being let as one farm, which afterwards proved to be the case.

22,668. Then you know the farm of Dounreay very well; there is a very good steading on the farm adapted for its present size, is there not?—I am not sure if there is.

22,669. Don't you know Mr Miller's farm very well, and isn't there a steading?—Yes.

22,670. Isn't there a steading suitable?—The houses are good, but having been built separately at separate times, they are somewhat more complicated than usual. [The Chairman.—Frequent additions you mean?—Yes.]

22,671. It is the style of architecture you are objecting to?—Convenience.

22,672. But is it a sufficiently commodious steading?—The accommodation is supposed to be sufficient.

22,673. Then you speak of the 200 acres having been at one time under cultivation by Mr Miller of Scrabster?—It has not been in cultivation further than being once under the plough, except three fields.

22,674. And you are aware, of course, that Mr Miller is a practical farmer?—I believe he is.

22,675. And if he had found that he could have cultivated that farm to profit, a considerable time ago, he would have done so?—I am not sure. We have to cultivate land very much better than what he has thrown out of cultivation.

22,676. And if it would not pay to cultivate in former times, during the time Mr Miller broke it up, it would be impossible in present times to make it pay as cultivated land, I presume?—Not by crofters.

22,677. The Chairman.—How long is it since this land we are talking of was under the plough?—About thirty years.

22,678. You are able to say, speaking on your responsibility, that there has not been a plough through it for thirty years, is that so?—It is.

22,679. Mr Sutherland.—Was the farm steading, in your opinion, erected for an agricultural farm or for a grazing farm?—It has been erected for an arable farm; Lower Dounreay is a very old farm.

22,680. And this field you complain of is allowed to go out of cultivation?—Yes.

22,681. Then I think you mentioned,—I thought it was a slip of yours at the time,—that Mr Miller let out of cultivation worse land than you occupied; did you mean worse or better?—Better, I meant; it was a slip of mine.

22,682. You are decidedly of opinion that you are cultivating worse land that what has been let out of cultivation here?—Yes, I am. It is in my immediate neighbourhood, I may say adjoining to what I cultivate. Thurso. —— Donald Mackay.

22,683. The Chairman.—I forgot to ask you; you gave evidence before Lord Napier's Commission, I think, in 1883?—Yes.

22,684. And your evidence is reported in vol. iii. at p. 2394. You are the Donald Mackay, crofter, Bulldoo, age 46—it is ten years ago—who gave evidence before Lord Napier?—Yes.

22,685. And you may refer us, I suppose, to the evidence you then gave with regard to this place, at all events as to the matters you deal with in this statement?—So far as my memory will aid me.

22,686. Mr Peter Keith.—He spoke to the reclamations by the crofters. I was going to ask if a very considerable proportion, the great proportion of the arable land on Sir Robert's estate in Reay, has been reclaimed since 1859, and if any of that or almost any has been done by crofters?—Except on one large farm, Upper Dounreay.

22,687. Do you know the extent of that farm?—The extent, I think, is about 1080 acres arable and pasture.

22,688. That 1000 odd acres has been improved, and has any portion of that been done by crofters?—It had been in cultivation by crofters formerly.

22,689. The Chairman.—In old days?—In old days. I may say that I have had a list of 164 evicted crofters, all holding land, supplied to me by Alexander Sutherland, Reay Village, and William Henderson, Achreamie, both old men at the time, above eighty years of age, now dead, and also by Donald Henderson, Achreamie, partly supplied to him by his sister Isabella, also dead. The evictions were begun in the west end of the parish in about 1806, and were carried on till it reached the other end in 1846. Of that there have been on the farm of Lower Dounreay,—which at the time (1837) was a large farm—seven smaller holdings outside its then boundary. The farm now known as Upper Dounreay was wholly occupied by twenty-three separate tenants, and on what is within the bounds of the farm of Skaill at present, including Hallum, there were twenty-seven tenants, and seven in Lybster.

22,690. The Chairman.—And I may say that the evidence here agrees with the evidence I read from Donald Campbell, the old man of eighty-one, who says there were twenty-eight families evicted; you say twenty-seven?—Twenty-seven as far as I could make out. These farms were held at the time by John Paterson, who came into possession in 1837, and they began a system of eviction which was terminated in 1846, when the last one of the sixty-four was cleared off, and four shepherds with their flocks were put on the place. Then in 1859 the farm of Upper Dounreay was let,—what these twenty-three tenants occupied formerly was let to Mr Brown as one holding, and Mr Brown had reclaimed the rest, all that is now arable. That is, I think, what Mr Keith has referred to. That is the only large farm where the tenant has done most of the reclamation.

ROBERT MANSON, Achreamie, Reay (60) —examined. Robert Manson.

22,692. What rent do you pay?—£14.

22,693. Was your case dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—No, I am under lease.

22,694. For a term of years?—Nineteen years.

22,695. And the lease is now current?—Yes.

22,696. What portion of land do you wish to invite our attention to?—Some additional grazing on Skaill and Ballie; I have no outrun.

22,697. There is a place on the map called Achreamie Moss, and there is the village or township of Achreamie. You live in the township, I suppose?—Yes.

22,698. How many crofters are there?—Seventeen or eighteen perhaps, or nineteen, I can't exactly say.

22,699. Under twenty?—Yes.

22,700. And are you appearing as a delegate on their behalf?—Yes.

22,701. Appointed at a meeting?—Yes.

22,702. What claim do they make?—For more pasture, more land.

22,703. Do they also make any claim with regard to arable land?—We are confined very sore, only three and four and five chains in breadth on our lots, and it is very narrow.

22,704. And you have no grazing?—No.

22,705. Have you any hill pasture?—None but what I get from other farmers.

22,706. And you pay them a grazing rent, I suppose?—No, I don't.

22,707. You just get it as a privilege?—Yes.

22,708. Is there land to which you can point us available for the object in view?—Yes.

22,709. Where is it?—There is plenty land on Skaill, where there were twenty-seven tenants now under one farm.

22,710. What is the name of the farm?—The farm of Skaill; I remember twenty-seven holdings there myself, twenty-four, and four on Hallum.

22,711. These are neighbouring farms, are they?—They lived wholly upon their crofts.

22,712. Does the land you refer to march with the Achreamie township?—Yes.

22,713. And is it grazing land?—Yes, we had 400 or 500 acres of grazing land, the hill pasture, in common. That was before the common was divided, before the Government took their claim off. Mr Sinclair of Forss, and Sir Robert Sinclair of Murkle, and the whole of the commons went together at that time in my young days and we had all that for grazing pasture.

22,714. Waste land for grazing?—Yes.

22,715. And after the commons were enclosed and the lands taken up, you had no longer access?—Evictions took place then in Mr John Paterson's day, and we were sent to a by-corner at Achreamie, so the land and pasture and all was taken from us at that time.

22,716. Do you ask our attention to any particular portion of the farm of Skaill?—No, just the grazing.

22,717. You wish us to look at the whole of it. Is it an arable farm or a grazing farm?—It is both grazing and arable.

22,718. What is the extent of the arable?—I could not be sure; it is some hundreds of acres.

22,719. And is Hallum also an arable farm?—Yes.

22,720. I have not seen so much of these neighbouring grounds as my colleagues here, and I would like if you could suggest to us any particular portion of either of these lands which you would like us either to look at or to look at again?—Oh no, if we get some more pasture.

22,721. But you said just now you were a delegate representing a number of the Achreamie crofters?—Yes.

22,722. Did you not converse among yourselves as to particular portions of land which you wished us to consider?—Oh yes, to get some pasture that is following the arable farm of Skaill for pasture for some of our cattle.

22,723. But you didn't fix your attention upon any particular portion?—Well, no.

22,724. Do you each keep stock?—Yes, I keep a few, but I am more obliged to other farmers than I am to my own croft.

22,725. Mr Forsyth.—Is there any grazing land not under rotation near your croft?—Oh yes, hundreds of acres.

22,726. What kind of land?—Good pasture ground; it is under sheep now.

22,727. Is that on Skaill?—Yes.

22,728. Do they ever crop this land you mention?—Oh yes.

22,729. Is there any land then that they don't crop that may be called waste land?—Oh, well, perhaps, there may be some of that amongst pasture land.

22,730. But there is not much land of that kind there, is there?—No.

22,731. Mr Gordon.—I don't think the witness understands. [The Chairman.—Mr Forsyth will put the question again.] Thurso.

22,732. Mr Forsyth.—Is all the land on Skaill farm cultivated?—No. Robert Manson.

22,733. Is there waste land there?—Yes.

22,734. What kind; is there much?—Sheep pasture, about 500 acres.

22,735. Is it fenced?—No. The boundaries of Skaill farm are fenced.

22,736. But this is not land that they crop?—Well, there were four crofters in the sheep pasture.*

22,737. I am not asking about crofters, I am asking whether the farmer of Skaill puts crop into this land which you are talking of, or does he ever plough it?—I am dull of hearing, sir, for one thing.

22,738. Do they plough this land, the farm of Skaill, this land you are speaking of? Has it been ploughed or wrought?—Yes, partly only, the four crofters cultivated it at one time.

22,739. Is it hill pasture?—Yes, and old arable.

22,740. They don't crop it?—No.

22,741. Mr Sutherland.—You stated that you had a right of common grazing before?—Yes.

22,742. And that that common was taken away from you?—Yes.

22,743. Is that the land you are speaking about?—Yes.

22,744. After it was taken away and divided in the way you mentioned, was it made into arable land; was it improved?—No.

22,745. It is now in the same state that it was then?—Yes.

22,746. And has it been so ever since?—Yes.

22,747. And is that the land you wish us to see?—Yes.

22,748. And that is the land that you think would be suitable for pasture for you now?—Yes.

22,749. Whom did you mean by the Government when you said that they got their share?—The Government that is coming in on Stempster ground.

22,750. Crown lands?—Crown lands.

22,751. And what did the Crown do with their share of the common?—They have it in the farm now.

22,752. What is the name of the farm?—Stempster.

22,753. Is the Crown the proprietor of that?—Yes.

22,754. Who is the tenant?—Mr Sinclair, merchant, Thurso.

22,755. Is it a large farm?—There are three or four pair of horses on.

22,756. Did the Crown get its share of the common when the common was divided?—Yes.

22,757. And did you pay rent to the Crown, to the Woods and Forests Department, or whoever managed it before for the grazing?—No.

22,758. They gave you no compensation for taking that away?—No.

22,759. Mr Gordon.—Is that ground that you say was divided what is called the Yellow Moss?—No.

22,760. It is farther to the north east?—Farther to the south east—Bailie ground and Stempster ground.

22,761. Stempster Hill?—Yes, the three grounds, before the marches were put in, were common.

22,762. Is there any hill pasture attached to the farm of Hallum?—Yes.

22,763. Where about?—Achagalla, down by the riverside.

22,764. That is not hill pasture, that is riverside pasture?—Well, that is all the pasture for Hallum.

22,765. The only pasture for Hallum is between the arable lands and the river?—Yes.

22,766. And the hill ground that you referred to, in answer to Mr Forsyth, is the ground upon the Stempster hill that was divided between the Crown and Skaill?—Yes.

22,767. Does any part of that Skaill pasture come down to the township of Achreamie?—The Achreamie and Skaill march.

22,768. It divides your ground from that part?—Yes.

22,769. The Chairman.—When was the common on which Stempster hill stands divided between the Crown

* Manson has since written 'that no part of it was cultivated since the crofters were removed about fifty years ago.'

Thurso.

Robert Manson.

and Hallum?—I think it was in the year 1843 or 1844.

22,770. Was that by a process in the Court of Session?—I am not sure.

22,771. Well, since then has the Crown remained owner of the farm of Stempster hill?—Yes.

22,772. Letting it to a tenant?—Yes.

22,773. Now how far is that from Achreamie?—It will be 1½ miles or 2 miles.

22,774. Is there a road to it?—No road, but in Skaill when we were evicted from it, we had this pasture.

22,775. Now Stempster hill is at present in the possession of Mr Sinclair?—Yes.

22,776. Is that the gentleman who is also or was tenant of the farm of Skelpick in Sutherlandshire?—Yes.

22,777. Now is that entirely a grazing farm?—No.

22,778. Partly arable?—Yes.

22,779. Is there a dwelling-house upon it?—Oh yes.

22,780. Does anybody live in it? Mr Sinclair lives in Thurso, I suppose?—His son lives there, as tenant on the farm.

22,781. Does he live upon the farm?—Yes.

22,782. Then there is a dwelling-house and a steading?—Yes.

22,783. Now do you know the extent of the farm?—No.

22,784. Is there land upon the farm of Stempster that would be available for an extension of grazings to the Achreamie crofters?—Oh yes, or for labouring, good ground.

22,785. Or for cultivation?—Yes.

22,786. Both?—Both. Better than some of the arable that is on the farm.

22,787. You mean there is old arable on Stempster hill or Stempster farm better suited for cultivation than land which is now under crop?—Yes, because there was a good deal that is now a hill and heather that was laboured once.

22,788. And could they labour it, in your opinion, again?—Yes.

22,789. Mr Donald Macrae.—How much arable land is in your present holding?—I am not sure exactly; about 33 or 34 acres that is now arable, but there were only 2½ acres on it.

22,790. That is what I was coming to. You have about 33 acres of arable land in your holding to-day?—Yes.

22,791. How many years have you been occupying this holding?—Well, my father occupied it in the year 1846.

22,792. That is forty-seven years your father and yourself have occupied it?—Yes.

22,793. How many acres of arable land were there when your father began to crop it?—2½ acres.

22,794. So between your father and yourself you reclaimed over 30 acres?—Yes.

22,795. How many of these do you think you reclaimed yourself?—I reclaimed the whole.

22,796. How many years did you take to reclaim these 30 acres?—It took me about nineteen years.

22,797. What was the first rent you paid?—£2.

22,798. And what is the rent under the present lease?—£14.

22,799. You took in 30 acres of old land that was never under crop before; did the landlord give you any help to take in those 30 acres?—No.

22,800. And do you know in this county, land that is waste to-day, that is, land that is used as grazing land to-day, and that is quite as good as the 30 acres that you have taken under crop?—Oh yes, and better. I have 17 acres that there is not 4 inches of soil on but rock.

22,801. And do you know much land in this county that is waste, or pasture land much better and much more suitable for taking under the plough than the land that you have taken under the plough?—I suppose the whole of it, for worse it cannot be, because I was sent to the worst that all the crofters were evicted to the useless land.

22,802. Mr Peter Keith.—Is it the case that the farm of Skaill, in so far as it adjoins your croft, is all under cultivation?—Yes, it is under cultivation now at the point where it adjoins my croft, but there is a road through the township leading to the pasture I have referred to.

Thurso.

Robert Manson.

22,803. And will you point out or explain exactly what pasture land on the farm of Skaill you consider available for holdings?—There is plenty of land.

22,804. Just specify where it is situated, and the extent of it?—Achains, Braeskiall, where the crofters were.*

22,805. That is on Yellow Moss?—Yes, fornent the Yellow Moss to the west.

22,806. How far is that from your present holding at Achreamie?—Perhaps a mile.

22,807. So that it is not suitable for holdings?—Oh no, I don't say for mine.

22,808. Can you give the extent of it?—No.

William Farquhar, Broubster, Reay (45) —examined.

William Farquhar.

22,809. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter or a leaseholder?—I am a leaseholder.

22,810. When does your lease expire?—In 1899.

22,811. Is it a nineteen years' lease?—Nineteen years' lease.

22,812. What rent do you pay?—£7, 10s.

22,813. Tell us, as nearly as you can, the extent of your arable and of your grazing?—The extent of my arable is about 7 acres, but the extent of the grazing I cannot exactly mention.

22,814. Is it less than that?—It is more than that. It may be about 70 or 80 acres, I suppose.

22,815. Are you the sole tenant of the 70 or 80 acres?—Well, yes, but there is a fence to be put up, but it is not up yet.

22,816. Meantime you are the sole tenant?—Yes. There were two tenants with about 140 acres of pasture, one of whom has died, and I have made an arrangement with Mr Tait, the factor, for a part of that pasture, where there is a fence to be put up now.

22,817. You are to get the half, and the other half is to go to somebody else?—It is let to another farmer.

22,818. Do you invite our attention to land in the neighbourhood which you think available?—There is plenty on the grazing farm of Broubster.

22,819. What is the name of the farmer?—It is in the hands of Sir Robert Sinclair.

22,820. And is there no one living upon it?—There are only shepherds living upon it.

22,821. But there is no farm tenant upon it?—No.

22,822. And is it an arable, or a grazing farm, or partly both?—It is a grazing farm.

22,823. Has it a stock upon it?—Yes.

22,824. What is the extent of the farm?—I think it will be about 6000 acres.

22,825. Marching with Broubster village, or near it?—Near to Broubster village.

22,826. Do you say that there is land there available for the extension of your grazing?—Not for the extension of my grazing, but there is plenty land there that is quite available for being occupied as holdings.

22,827. For settlements?—For settlements.

22,828. Are you here as a delegate?—I am here as a delegate.

22,829. From Broubster?—From Broubster.

22,830. And are the tenants, or some of the tenants, of Broubster, desirous of obtaining new settlements?—There is a desire amongst tenants in general for that.

22,831. But confine your attention just now to the Broubster tenants?—Well, there are only two or three in Broubster.

22,832. And do these two or three wish to leave their holdings and get new holdings?—Certainly they do.

22,833. Are their present holdings too small?—They are.

22,834. What is the average size of these tenants' holdings?—There are two joint-tenants, my brother and

* Manson, in correcting the proof of his evidence, states the lands he referred to thus:—'Achins and Braeskiall, having the arable farm of Skaill on the east; Baillie Pasture and Yellow Moss on the south; Shebster and Upper Dounereay from south-west to north-west; and the township of Achremie on the north.'

myself; we live upon the croft which is only 7 acres arable, that we got, that we reclaimed ourselves.

22,835. Is there anybody else that you speak of?—I have heard different people speak about it for enlargement of holdings.

22,836. In Broubster?—Yes, there are other two in Broubster.

22,837. Who are they?—Alexander Swanson and John Mackay.

22,838. And are you representing them?—I am not here specially sent by them to represent them, but I have been appointed to represent that district.

22,839. And in the district is there a strong desire felt to get additional land?—There are not very many, there are only eight or nine crofters in the district.

22,840. And do these crofters all wish new settlements?—No, they do not altogether wish new settlements.

22,841. What is it they wish?—Well, I could not say exactly.

22,842. I think you can if you just attend to my question. Do some of them wish to be transferred to new settlements, and some of them wish extension of grazing?—Well, there are some of them whose opinions I cannot represent, because there are some old people there who live there and wish to live there.

22,843. Who do not wish to be disturbed. How many do you represent?—Well, about three or four, I suppose.

22,844. Well, as to these three or four, are they anxious to flit or anxious to enlarge?—They speak in that form.

22,845. In what form?—That they would like to get holdings larger than those they have got.

22,846. Just tell me the names of those who are anxious to get new holdings larger than the old ones?—There are only two that I can say. There are two or three that I have been speaking to about it. There are two, that is myself and my brother.

22,847. But, except yourself and your brother, you are not able to say definitely that anyone wishes a new holding?—I cannot say definitely.

22,848. But you think, with regard to these others, that they desire to get extended grazing?—To my idea they do. They have spoken about that at different times.

22,849. Confining our attention for a moment to yourself and your brother, you and he, as I understand, want two new holdings?—Two new holdings.

22,850. And you think there is land available in the neighbourhood?—There is plenty of land available in the neighbourhood.

22,851. What extent of arable have you in view?—I have about 20 acres or 25 acres in view.

22,852. And what extent of grazing?—I could not say exactly, that would be as the case might be.

22,853. Suppose you had 25 acres arable, what extent of grazing would you like to apportion to that?—I should say about 200 acres of pasture.

22,854. And what stock would you desire to be able to keep on such a holding?—I would be desirous of keeping Highland stock on it.

22,855. Yes, but what amount of stock; in the first place take cows; how many cows?—I suppose seven or eight cows.

22,856. And their followers?—And their followers.

22,857. Any sheep?—Yes, about forty or fifty sheep.

22,858. Do you mean ewes?—Ewes or hoggs, according to the pasture that would be available.

22,859. And a pair of horses, I suppose?—A pair of horses.

22,860. I must ask you, would you and your brother be prepared to venture upon an undertaking of that kind, a croft of that size and having such a stock in view, without assistance?—With very little assistance.

22,861. Is the assistance so small that you would have no difficulty in obtaining it for yourself?—I cannot say that altogether.

22,862. But, however it might come, the assistance you require would be very little?—It would not be very much.

22,863. Well, I don't ask you particularly about it. But having got such assistance as you require, you would be quite ready to venture upon a holding of that kind, put up the buildings, fence the land, and proceed to its cultivation and to the stocking?—Yes.

22,864. And I suppose you would be able to begin with the stock you have?—So far.

22,865. And the implements?—Yes.

22,866. Your present rent is how much?—£7, 10s.

22,867. And what rent have you in view? I am not asking you to assess the rent of the new holding, but what I would ask you to do is,—you are paying at present a rent of £7, 10s.,—what rent do you think you could undertake to meet, assuming always that you have got value for your money?—My idea of that affair is, I would like the soil to be valued according to its quality by an impartial tribunal of practical agriculturists.

22,868. And such a rent you would be ready to pay?—Such a rent I would be ready to pay.

22,869. Can you point us to any particular portion of the farm you are speaking of which would be suitable for such a holding?—I could point to different parts.

22,870. Well, just mention them?—There is a croft in the landlord's own hands in the meantime.

22,871. What is the name of it?—The common name for it is Tut-Michidh.

22,872. Would that croft meet what you have in view?—About it.

22,873. It is now a part of the farm?—It is along with the farm.

22,874. And forms a part?—It is a part by itself.

22,875. It is worked along with the farm?—Yes.

22,876. Now do you invite attention to any other land except Broubster Farm?—There are different other lands of the same sort round about where I am that I could draw your attention to.

22,877. What lands are these?—[Witness reads statement.] 'The grazings of Broubster and Achvarasdale, 'the property of Sir R. C. Sinclair, and occupied by 'him as a grazing farm, from which carries a Cheviot 'ewe stock of about 1000. There are nine crofters 'and one cottar in Broubster, occupying between 50 to '55 acres of arable land and about 450 acres pasture. 'Shurrery—a portion of the Sandside Estate—the pro-'perty of Mr Pilkington, occupied by Mr Innes as a 'grazing, carries a hirsel of 600 ewes and 800 eild 'sheep. There are five crofters in Shurrery occupying 'about 30 acres arable land and about 240 acres 'pasture. Achater, Carriside, Achie, and Lamsdale, on 'the estate of Forss, in the parish of Reay, was once 'occupied by resident tenants, but has since a number 'of years been let to farmers as sheep runs. All the 'above grazings have been at one time occupied by 'crofters, and I think they could be occupied to advan-'tage in the future, if let out in holdings of say from '20 to 50 acres of arable land, with from 100 to 500 'acres of pasture, as the case might be, the rent to be 'adjusted according to the quality of the soil by an 'impartial tribunal of practical agriculturists. If the 'tenant is in possession of money to stock holdings still 'the better; but if not Government to advance a loan 'of money at as small an interest as possible, the stock 'and buildings to be security.'

(Signed) Wm. Farquhar.

22,878. Mr Sutherland.—I want to fully understand the position of Broubster. Broubster is partly on two estates, is it not,—the village of Broubster?—Not the village of Broubster.

22,879. The crofters' holdings there?—They are upon one side of the river, but the grazing farm is upon the other side of the river.

22,880. They are distinct and separate?—Yes.

22,881. How did so many people come to be in Broubster and so few round about?—The evictions.

22,882. Where did they come from?—From these lands held now as grazings.

22,883. What sort of land was it before these people where put upon it?—Where the village of Broubster is was a swamp.

22,884. Was there any of it reclaimed at all?—Some has been reclaimed.

Thurso. — William Farquhar.

22,885. When they were put there first was there any land under rotation of crops or fit for bearing crops?—Yes, there was.

22,886. Was there much?—I could not say exactly how much.

22,887. Has that area been increased within your memory then?—Yes, it has been increased.

22,888. What was the quality of the land that the people were given to improve there?—It was very poor quality, it was land about their holdings.

22,889. And it is still there?—It is still there.

22,890. You see the peat and the corn growing in the same field?—You see the peat and the corn growing in the same field.

22,891. Was that the nature of all the land they got there?—Not all the land they got; some of it had been formed into arable land before they got it.

22,892. How many families do you say there are there?—There are eight families of crofters.

22,893. How much land have they got?—About 50 acres, I suppose, or perhaps more; that is only an approximation.

22,894. Fifty acres of arable land among how many?—Among eight crofters.

22,895. And how much pasture have they?—I should say 400 to 500 acres, perhaps more or perhaps less.

22,896. Certain of them applied to the Crofters Commission, did they not?—There were some applied to the Crofters Commission.

22,897. Have you any recollection of how many?—The rents of three.

22,898. Do you know John Gunn, junior?—Yes, and John Gunn, senior, and John Mackay, those are the three that I refer to.

22,899. Well, they are credited in the Crofters Commission Report with 159 acres, with the fifth share of 159 acres, which, being divided, comes to 31 acres each. What 159 acres is that?—That is the 159 acres of pasture.

22,900. Yes, among five?—Yes.

22,901. Is that distinct from the others, or is five the number of holdings?—Five is the number of holdings; there are five participating in that 159 acres.

22,902. And is that all the pasture land that these five have got?—That is all the pasture land, I understand, that they have got.

22,903. Then I find that with the exception of one of them there is no one that has got outrun at all; neither John Gunn, junior, nor John Gunn, senior, have got any outrun, and the other, John Mackay, has got 1 rood 17 poles. Is that then the amount of land that the Broubster people have got?—Yes, I believe it is.

22,904. And what do you say was the extent of the holding by which they are surrounded?—The grazing farm?

22,905. Yes?—In what forms the grazing farm of Broubster, I suppose there are about 9000 acres.

22,906. And those lands that you referred to in answer to the Chairman's questions, are lands that you think would be very advantageously and profitably given to those miserable people there?—Certainly; they have been occupied before, and Mr Campbell's statement there will tell you the number of tenants that have been evicted from Broubster and Shurrery and Shebster.

22,907. Have you any opinion regarding the nature of the object that could be gained by shutting these people in there; why was it done, do you think?—The people were evicted for forming large sheep farms there.

22,908. And you think there would be no difficulty if the opportunity was given under reasonable conditions to get people to take holdings on this large farm?—I think there would not.

22,909. Then about the difficulties that would stand between, or that do in the estimation of some people, stand between the people and the land in the present time, do you think these could be easily overcome?—I think so.

22,910. You are aware, I suppose, that when the people were put off the good land on to the bad land?—They had to make a living.

22,911. They had to make a living; under worse circumstances than they were in before?—Certainly. Thurso. — William Farquhar.

22,912. And is it your opinion that, if they were put back from the bad land on to the good land, there would be less difficulty than before?—Certainly there would, that is my opinion.

22,913. And do you think it is a reasonable opinion?—I think it is that too; it is quite reasonable, I think,

22,914. And you think, then, that these people could with advantage to themselves and to the country?—And to the country.

22,915. Occupy a great deal of that land which is now waste?—Certainly.

22,916. And which you have indicated?—Yes.

22,917. The Chairman.—I see you are quite correct. Donald Campbell says there were twenty-seven families in Broubster, and thirty-one families in Shurrery, and these are two places that you ask our attention to, I think?—Yes.

22,918. You did not mention Shebster?—No, I don't mention Shebster. Donald Campbell was the delegate that was appointed, because he remembers the evictions and he was one of the evicted.

22,919. I rather take it so from his statement and from his age, eighty-one.

22,920. To Mr Peter Keith.—I was going to ask you this Mr Keith,—I cannot find these names on the map, I find Lambsdale. Do you admit that there were the old places mentioned at one time?—[Mr Keith] Lambsdale is on the estate of Forss.

22,921. I beg your pardon.

22,922. Mr Peter Keith.—What is your present farm stock. Have you a pair of horses?—Two ponies.

22,923. And how many cattle?—Two cows and some young cattle.

22,924. And how many sheep?—About twenty sheep.

22,925. What would be about the approximate cost, at present prices, of the stock which you would require for the holding that you have mentioned; seven cows, that is five more than you presently possess; what would be about the cost of these just now?—It would take me some time to make that out.

22,926. And you cannot tell just now the value of one of your cows right off?—Perhaps I could.

22,927. The Chairman.—That is not what he says; he is not going to give you the value of his cow?—It is not to give you the value of my stock I came here to-day.

22,928. Mr Peter Keith.—Is it with stock similar to what you have on your present place that you would stock your new holding if you got one?—Partly.

22,929. Have you formed no idea as to the cost of stocking the holding which you have spoken to just now?—I have an idea of that too.

22,930. What would be the approximate cost in addition to your present stock?—It would be about £150.

22,931. What houses would you require on a croft of this size, 25 acres arable and about 200 pasture?—I would just require the housing that would be suitable for such a holding.

22,932. You are a practical man, and you know what would be suitable. Tell me what you think would be suitable for such a croft?—That is quite difficult to describe just now.

22,933. You would require a dwelling-house?—Yes.

22,934. A stable?—A stable.

22,935. A byre?—Yes.

22,936. A barn?—Yes.

22,937. A cart shed?—Yes.

22,938. And a turnip shed. Now what would be the cost approximately of such a steading as that, have you any idea?—That is a different thing altogether.

22,939. No, it is not, if you are going to get a new holding?—It is not very likely I am going to make an estimate of that standing here.

22,940. Then you have formed no idea of that?—That altogether depends very much upon the locality and upon the means of access to the place.

22,941. But you speak of a particular place,

Thurso. William Farquhar.

Broubster, and talking into account that this croft of which you have spoken is to be given to you out of the farm of Broubster, what would be the cost there of erecting a house and steading suitable for the holding?—Well, I could not exactly say in the meantime.

22,942. But you mentioned, you know, that with very little assistance you could do the whole thing, yourself and your brother?—Yes.

22,943. Then you must have formed an idea of the total cost?—I have an idea of the total cost.

22,944. Give me that idea?—There are some places that there are houses upon already, and others where there are none.

22,945. But in the farm of Broubster, where there are no houses at all, where you would have to erect the whole steading from the foundation, I suppose £400 would be wanted to make that steading?—Less than that.

22,946. How much less?—I think £300 would do it whatever.

22,947. Of course you keep in view that any house and steading that you would erect there would have to be to the satisfaction of the sanitary authorities?—Certainly, it must be that now.

22,948. And, therefore, very much more expensive than was formerly occupied by crofters?—Yes, it would, but it is more permanent at the same time.

22,949. You are aware that in former times, when crofters occupied holdings, in many cases their stock and themselves entered at the same door?—Certainly, they did.

22,950. That would not be allowed now?—I am aware of all that, Mr Keith.

22,951. Then you would want to fence the place; what would fencing come to?—That is a different thing altogether.

22,952. It is part of the holding. What would you estimate the fencing?—We would need to see the ground first.

22,953. The Chairman.—I think his answer to that naturally is that he would require to see the precise locus before he could tell. One case might require very little fencing and another a great deal?—That is so.

22,954. Mr Peter Keith.—But he is speaking of the farm of Broubster, and he knows that very well.

22,955. Mr Gordon.—He spoke to this particular part of Broubster. [Witness].—I am not very particular about special parts, but I have mentioned one part.

22,956. The Chairman.—You mentioned this vacant croft, Tut-michidh.

22,957. Mr Peter Keith.—Is that croft that you spoke of presently in cultivation?—Part of it is, but the most of it is let out in grass.

22,958. Is there a steading on it?—There is a steading on it in the meantime.

22,959. Who occupied it last?—David Sutherland.

22,960. What is the name of it?—The old name it got was Tut-michidh.

22,961. The Chairman.—Has it a modern name?—I think it is modern enough for a Highland place.

22,962. Mr Peter Keith.—Was it ever occupied by Mr Miller as part of this farm of Broubster?—No, it was never occupied by Mr Miller.

22,963. It is no part of this farm of Broubster just now?—It is no part of the grazing farm.

22,964. Probably the proprietor would be perfectly willing to offer it to anyone who would give him a reasonable rent for it now. I understand the proprietor is perfectly prepared. It is no part of the farm of Broubster; it is a separate holding which he is quite willing to let to anyone who gives a fair rent. But you cannot give us any idea of the cost of fencing a new place on the farm of Broubster?—I cannot give a fair idea just now.

22,965. Then can you give any idea how much it would cost to drain it?—I can't do that either; it is not likely I could do that standing here. I would need to have some idea of what draining is required; some would require far less than others.

22,966. But on the average, how much would you put an acre for draining it?—I don't know; there is some land that require no drains, while others require drains as thick as—

22,967. Then you have not given me any idea what the rent would be, keeping in view the farm of Broubster as an average.

22,968. The Chairman.—He answered that, that it would need to be settled by practical men?—Certainly. We know what it is to settle with factors and landlords already; the country at large knows that.

22,969. Mr Sutherland.—I wish to ask you a question with regard to this erecting of steadings. What was the size of the holdings that you recommended should be made?—In my statement it was from 20 to 50 acres arable.

22,970. Now, do you know, as a matter of fact, holdings of that size that have been made anywhere?—There are different cases.

22,971. Did you know of difficulties arising in these cases with regard to building steadings?—There might have been difficulties, but all these difficulties were overcome.

22,972. Did you know the tenants to put them up in any case?—For the most part the tenants had to put them up.

22,973. Did you ever know of their being valued for the tenant afterwards when he was leaving?—No.

22,974. Would you be surprised if they were valued at £400?—No, I would not.

22,975. They are worth that, I think?—I think that a good many of them are.

22,976. And did you ever know of any tenants leaving behind, without compensation, steadings upon holdings of that kind?—That has been a general thing.

22,977. You think that £400 on a 40 acre farm would be a very good thing for the tenant if he got compensation when he went out?—It would be a very great help.

22,978. Then, with regard to the holdings that people have in Broubster and other places, did they get anything like £400 when they were put into new places?—Never a penny that I know of, I never heard of them getting compensation.

22,979. Then when you came practically to put up a steading, wouldn't you do a great deal of the labour yourself?—A great deal.

22,980. You wouldn't employ engineers and lawyers to do it?—I never would; I never employed engineers and lawyers when I could.

22,981. You would save lawyers' fees?—Certainly.

22,982. That would make a considerable item in reducing the cost?—It would indeed.

22,983. You can also suggest other ways, no doubt, in which you would take away from the estimate made by Mr Keith, £400?—Oh, different ways.

22,984. I suppose he would be putting a money value upon things for which he has paid himself that you would not have to pay at all?—Certainly.

22,985. There is a great deal of labour that the tenant would do for himself if he got an opportunity?—A great deal. There are plenty tenants that have been known to build steadings and houses altogether.

22,986. The Chairman.—May I ask you this question, do you cultivate your present holding to a profit?—No, we don't cultivate it to a profit, because it is very poor soil; it is not worth cultivating. I have reclaimed it altogether from the swamp march.

22,987. Do you mean by that that it is not capable of cultivation to profit or that you are not able to cultivate it to profit owing to bad times?—Well, if I got good land I think I could cultivate it to profit with a reasonable rent.

22,988. But I am speaking of your present holding. Is the absence of profit due to the bad quality of the holding?—To the bad quality of the holding.

WILLIAM REID TAIT, Factor for Sir Robert C. Sinclair of Murkle (60)—examined.

William Reid Tait.

22,989. The Chairman.—You are factor on the estate of Murkle?—Yes.

Thurso. — William Reid Tait.

22,990. How many years?—Since 1859.

22,991. You have a written statement to submit to us?—Yes.

22,992. Kindly read it.—The estates of Sir Robert C. Sinclair of Murkle, Bart., in Caithness, lie in the parishes of Thurso, Olrig, Halkirk, and Reay.

Murkle Estate.—Nothing need be said about this estate, as it is wholly arable.

Dounreay and Brubster estates, in the parish of Reay.—The leases of these estates, which expired at Whitsunday 1859, were held by two principal tacksmen. Captain Macdonald, late of Sandside, held the farms of Isauld and Brubster, and the late Mr John Paterson held the whole of the Dounreay estate. Both tacksmen had a number of sub-tenants. The tacksmen quitted their holdings at the expiry of their leases, but all their sub-tenants remained upon their holdings. The tacksmen were succeeded by a fresh number of tenants under improving leases. The peculiarity of the removals here was that the rich tacksmen removed and the poor sub-tenants (characterised by some of themselves as slaves) were retained. In a statement lodged with Lord Napier's Commission in 1884 it is stated that £51,979 were expended upon reclamations and improvements under the new leases, and under my personal supervision. The principal reclamations were made upon the estate of Dounreay.

In carrying out these extensive reclamations and improvements, embracing the reclamation of upwards of 2000 acres of waste and green lands, there were no evictions made in clearing the way for improvements, The tacksmen simply disappeared from the scene, and the new tenants, along with the old sub-tenants, were my co-operators in reclaiming and improving.

It is worthy of note that in reclaiming so large an extent of waste and green land as 2000 acres, there was not an acre of it that required trenching, and the drainage was comparatively easy work.

Brubster Estate.—This is the only sheep farm properly so called upon Sir Robert's estates, and extends to about 5570 acres, carrying a Cheviot ewe stock of about 1000 ewes in two hirsels.

Some time before Whitsunday 1859, Mr Mitchell, late Provost of Dingwall, a man of large agricultural experience, was asked by the proprietor to report upon the practicability of improving his estates in Caithness. Mr Mitchell reported favourably. At a subsequent period, I was asked to visit the estates professionally; with Mr Mitchell's report in my hands, I made a careful survey of the estates, and agreed generally with Mr Mitchell's report as to the practicability of the proposed improvements. Brubster sheep farm was examined with more than ordinary care, as it was the desire on the part of the proprietor to make the most of all the estates, by way of reclamation and improvement, and of dividing them into suitably-sized farms. Mr Mitchell and myself were at one as to the impracticability of reclaiming and cultivating any portion of the waste and green lands of Brubster, with the exception of a few acres near the shepherd's house which might be cultivated if found necessary.

The land of Brubster is totally different from the land of Dounreay. The land of Brubster could not be reclaimed without trenching. To trench, drain and fence such land would have cost not less than £25 per acre, including the cost of houses, but not the cost of roads; and this for a 50-acre farm, would amount to £1250, representing a pure rent charge of £62, 10s. at 5 per cent. This was a moderate estimate considering what the Sutherlandshire reclamations cost.

It was, therefore, resolved to keep Brubster as a grazing farm, and it was then let to Mr Miller, now of Scrabster, along with the arable farm of Lower Dounreay. Mr Miller gave up Brubster at Whitsunday 1884, and it was taken over by the proprietor, and is now worked by him in conjunction with the two arable farms of Upper Dounreay and Skaill, embracing an arable acreage of about 1200 acres.

From all the experience I have had in connection with these reclamations, and in the close management of the farms now in Sir Robert's hands, I am still clearly of opinion that the waste and green lands of Brubster cannot be profitably reclaimed and cultivated by large or small tenants. The cost of necessary buildings alone, under sanitary inspection, settles the question, I think, beyond dispute. My estimate in 1859 was £25 per acre for reclamation, &c., and buildings, and the works cannot now be done for a much larger sum.

Thurso. — William Reid Tait.

Indeed, I may venture to say that every acre of Sir Robert's estates in Caithness, capable of profitable reclamation and cultivation, has been reclaimed, and is now cultivated more or less perfectly.

Within recent years, shepherd's houses have been erected on Brubster and Dounreay, each costing, exclusive of carriages, about £120. Houses of less accommodation than shepherd's houses would not be sanctioned by the sanitary inspector for crofters. This fact adds confirmation to my opinion as to the impracticability of extending the crofter or the small farm system, where the land has to be reclaimed and is destitute of buildings, and where a return for money expended by the proprietor is an absolute necessity in addition to the rent the land yields in its natural state.

(Signed) W. Reid Tait.

22,993. Have you signed that?—I have.

22,994. You say the estate of Murkle is wholly arable?—Yes, practically. Of course there are patches of land in pasture, but it is practically an arable estate.

22,995. Is the whole of that, except these patches, under cultivation?—All more or less; it is all under cultivation.

22,996. Is it all under rotation?—Yes, it is all under rotation so far as I know. Of course, the whole estate is an arable estate. For some time some of the fields may be longer out of cultivation than others.

22,997. Take the fields that have been the longest out of cultivation, how long have they so been?—I cannot say exactly, as I am not minutely acquainted with the different farms—may be from five to ten years.

22,998. How many farms are on the estate?—There are a considerable number; there are two large farms and a number of small ones,—forty-five in all. Of course there is a good deal of the land there that should not be in cultivation now.

22,999. There are forty-five farms altogether on the Murkle estate?—Yes. There are two portions of the Murkle estate; there is one portion in the parishes of Thurso and Olrig between here and Castletown, and the other is in the parish of Reay.

23,000. You are confining your attention to the Murkle estate between here and Castletown?—Yes.

23,001. What is the number of farms on the Murkle estate between here and Castletown?—Forty-five.

23,002. How many farms are on the other portion of the estate?—Fifty-seven.

23,003. Now, dealing first of all with the Murkle estate between here and Castletown, you say there are two large farms on that estate?—Yes.

23,004. What are the rents of these farms?—£590 for Murkle Mains, and the other, Broynach, £310.

23,005. What is the average rent of the smaller farms, or give me the highest and the lowest?—£87 the highest, and £1 the lowest.

23,006. That is including the crofter rents?—Yes.

23,007. But what are the highest and lowest rents of those tenants who are above the crofter limit of £30?—From £87 to £32.

23,008. Now, taking the farms on the other portion of the Murkle estate in the parish of Reay, you say there are fifty-seven. What are the rents of the two largest there?—The rent of the largest farm on the Dounreay portion of the estate, in the parish of Reay, is £552, 16s. 8d. and the next one is £540.

23,009. Now, to finish it, Mr Tait, what is the highest and lowest rent of the smaller farms of £30 and upwards?—From £86 to £34.

23,010. Dealing first of all with the estate towards Castletown, have there been considerable portions of arable land on these farms not under rotation for many years?—No, there are not.

23,011. It is all under either a long or a short rotation?—Yes.

23,012. What is the longest rotation?—I should think we might perhaps leave some of it out, four or five or ten years.

23,013. You are aware that there has been a considerable increase of late years in the extent of grazings upon farms formerly cultivated?—Yes.

23,014. Has that increase of grazing and decrease of land under rotation extended to the Murkle estate?—I don't know about the farmers, but I can speak now practically as to the farms in Sir Robert's own hands. I am quite satisfied that upon the farms of Dounreay and Skaill much of the land that was reclaimed from 1859 downwards must be practically let out for a time into pasture.

23,015. And that land has not been under rotation for a good many years?—It has been under rotation up till now; I now confirm the idea that much of the land in Caithness must necessarily at present prices go out of cultivation. It won't pay expenses and must get a rest.

23,016. And you apply that remark to the farms, specially, which have fallen into Sir Robert's own hands?—I do.

23,017. Now, how many farms has Sir Robert on his own hands on the estate towards Castletown?—None whatever.

23,018. Has he any in his own hands on the other portion of the estate?—Yes.

23,019. How many?—He has got three large farms and two small ones in his own hands in the parish of Reay.

23,020. And has arable land there been running into permanent pasture?—I intend running a considerable portion of the present arable land on the farms of Skaill and Upper Dounreay into permanent pasture, that is for a certain number of years.

23,021. It has been running for a number of years?—No, I intend that.

23,022. Owing to the difficulty of cultivation?—Owing to the price of produce and cattle and owing to the high expense of cultivating land.

23,023. You said there were 2000 acres that had been reclaimed. Was that on the estate of Murkle?—Mainly on the Dounreay estate, but there was a considerable reclamation made on moorland on the Mains Farm of Murkle, several hundred acres, perhaps 200 or something like that.

23,024. How is that land that was reclaimed being used now?—It is all in rotation.

23,025. Passing to the Broubster portion of Sir Robert's property, the sheep farm extends to 5570 acres?—Yes.

23,026. And you mentioned the carry, 1000, in two hirsels?—Yes.

23,027. What is the present stock?—About 1000 ewes and 300 or 400 gimmers.

23,028. And are there at present two hirsels?—Yes.

23,029. Would any portion of that land, in your opinion, be suitable for extension of crofters' grazings?—In my opinion it would not.

23,030. Why?—The expense in the first place of reclaiming land.

23,031. No, I am speaking of extension of grazing. Would any portion of that land, in your opinion, be suitable for the extension of crofters' grazing?—What crofters?

23,032. I am putting the abstract question?—Well, if the crofters were suitably placed, then, of course, it could be applied to that purpose.

23,033. And do you say there are no crofters in the neighbourhood?—There are none upon Sir Robert's estates, with the exception of the two that Mr Farquhar spoke about, Swanson and Gunn, and they are very small men paying very small rents.

23,034. What rents do they pay? Under £10?—Oh yes, £3 or £4 each. There is no crofting village abutting against the Broubster grazings, with the exception of Broubster village that has been spoken about, and there are only five crofters paying very small rents there, and I think they occupy about 18 acres of arable land divided amongst them. When I took charge of the property there were some twenty crofters there holding the same extent of land, and that has simply been consolidated. They still hold the same extent of arable land that was held then, and the same extent of pasture land.

23,035. Only it is held by five instead of twenty?—Precisely.

23,036. I suppose, however, that the land that is suitable for grazing by farmers would be suitable for extension of grazing to crofters if there were crofters there?—Yes. May I qualify that answer by a single expression that I don't think it would pay so well.

23,037. You think it would not be profitable whilst in the hands of a crofter?—No.

23,038. Why do you think so?—A grazing of that sort is subject, of course, to great losses of one kind or other. These losses, I think, would tell very seriously against the crofters.

23,039. More so than against the large farmer?—A man of capital is able to stand that. A man taking a grazing like Broubster is, of course, a man of capital, who is prepared to stand losses more or less.

23,040. Are the grazing farmers on the estates under your charge paying their way just now?—There is no grazing farm with the exception of Broubster, and that was given up by Mr Miller in 1884.

23,041. And is in the hands of the proprietor?—And is in the hands of the proprietor.

23,042. Did you endeavour to let the farm when Mr Miller gave up his tenancy?—It was advertised.

23,043. But it failed to find a tenant?—We did not get a suitable offer.

23,044. Now, on the Dounreay portion, what is the extent of it?—Upwards of 5000 acres altogether, exclusive of Broubster.

23,045. And what is the carry there?—The bulk of the Downreay estate proper is arable land.

23,046. Is there a stock of sheep upon the Dounreay portion?—Yes, along with cattle, there are between 400 and 500 ewes there on the farm of Upper Dounreay.

23,047. And what stock of cattle?—A large stock of polled cattle at present and a considerable stock of stirks; I am not prepared to give the details, but the place is fully stocked.

23,048. That is what I wanted to ask?—Fully stocked.

23,049. Have any applications been made to you of late years for land by small holders?—No, none.

23,050. Mr Sutherland.—I think your general conclusion was that for the purposes we have in view there is no land suitable on the Murkle estate?—No, I think not.

23,051. That was your general conclusion?—That is my conclusion.

23,052. I just then wish to ask a question or two with regard to the reasons which induced you to come to that conclusion. We could speak perhaps a little more directly if you had been kind enough to supply us with the areas of the various farms. Seeing there are so few of them, I don't think it would be much trouble?—I will have great pleasure in doing that.

23,053. You will perhaps kindly hand them in afterwards?—I will do that. Roughly speaking, I might say on Upper Dounreay, there are upwards of 1000 acres, of which 700 are under cultivation or under rotation more or less. Then upon the large farm of Skaill there are also nearly 1000 acres and upwards of 500 acres arable. The pasture land there I hold to be totally unsuitable for cultivation and reclamation. I hold that every inch there that can be profitably reclaimed and cultivated has been reclaimed and cultivated.

23,054. But in giving the reasons that led to the present distribution of the land, you gave us some historical details. How far back did that go?—To the year 1859.

23,055. Not before that?—No, I did not deal with anything before 1859, except stating that the whole of Dounreay and Broubster was let to two principal tacksmen and their sub-tenants.

Thurso. — William Reid Tait.

23,056. You could not give us any information, could you, as to how the land was held on the estate prior to 1859?—Well, it was held by two tenants, Captain Macdonald of Sandside and Mr John Paterson of Borlum.

23,057. But before that?—No, I could not. I think Captain Macdonald held Isauld and Broubster for two leases, but I am not quite sure.

23,058. Then you stated, as a general conclusion from some data you gave us, that the tacksmen had disappeared and the sub-tenants remained?—Yes.

23,059. By what process did that result come about?—The usual process, I suppose. The men went away and the others were allowed to remain.

23,060. The tacksmen were the men over whom the proprietor had control?—Yes, their leases had expired.

23,061. Had he no control over the sub-tenants?—They were entirely under the control of the principal tenant.

23,062. Then they were independent of the proprietor, were they?—They were independent of the proprietor so long as a principal tacksman held the ground.

23,063. So that, while he had the power of dispossessing the tacksman, he had no power to disposses the sub-tenant?—No, he had not.

23,064. That is a very important admission. Then they had a right to be there evidently, and are they there still?—Well, none have been evicted since 1859.

23,065. Ergo they must be there or their descendants?—Well, they are not all there. Death has been among them.

23,066. That leaves a hiatus which I cannot bridge. But at any rate the tacksmen, you say, have disappeared and the sub-tenants remained?—Yes.

23,067. Were the holdings as large during that time as they are now?—They are larger now, because I have gone on consolidating them whenever any of the crofters died without representatives. I don't wish to introduce another small crofter, and much prefer to add to another croft, making a respectable holding.

23,068. I think you gave us a very concrete example of that in the case of Broubster?—Yes.

23,069. I think you stated you found twenty tenants and left five?—Yes.

23,070. And the area is the same?—Yes, and there were none evicted.

23,071. Carrying that process on, where would you be in a few years?—You must deal with the thing practically.

23,072. And would it not be a reasonable thing to suppose that, instead of extending their holdings in that way, you should do it at the expense of the man who had 1000 acres.—No, I don't think it would be reasonable.

23,073. You take away from the man that hath not?—If you are going to break up Broubster farm that is a different thing altogether.

23,074. You think the first object must be to preserve intact the Broubster farm?—I don't say that is the first object. It is a question of money.

23,075. But, evidently, that is the result of the policy, even in your own case?—In what respect?

23,076. You found twenty tenants and left five?—No, we found twenty tenants in the Broubster village, not on the Broubster farm. None of these were evicted; they have died or left, and I think it is admitted on all hands, that it is good policy to consolidate these small crofts.

23,077. But extend the principle to the country, where would the population be?—But I am dealing with the estate of Murkle. Of course, I leave it to you to extend the principle as far as you care to.

23,078. You made this statement as a justification of a policy,—that you have enlarged (and you are entitled to credit to that extent) that you have enlarged the holdings of these people, but you have done it at the expense of the extermination of the people?—No, I did not exterminate the people.

23,079. But it has been done not by enlarging the boundaries out of huge holdings but by taking small holdings and adding them together?—No, it was not; it was by death; death came in and reaped his harvest; the people were not there, and the holdings thus emptied were added to the holdings which existed.

Thurso. — William Reid Tait.

23,080. But would it not be more reasonable to keep the twenty people there?—But I could not keep the twenty people there. They would not stop.

23,081. Certainly not, with restricted holdings?—It was not the restricted holdings that removed them. Death removed them.

23,082. Had you not the power to give them more land?—Yes, but—

23,083. And you did not do it?—They never asked it.

23,084. Then you stated that it was within your own experience that land was going out of cultivation in the county of Caithness or on the Murkle estate, and I think you expressed the opinion that it would require to do so more in future?—Yes, if things don't improve.

23,085. What class of farm had you in your mind when you made that statement?—I had Upper Dounreay.

23,086. Do you know any small holdings upon which land is going out of cultivation?—I know many small holdings where it is unprofitable to cultivate the land they are cultivating.

23,087. But, as a matter of fact, are they doing so?—Well, I cannot tell you. I think, as a rule, that the small crofts do not necessarily go out of cultivation in the same way; there is not the same scope for the thing.

23,088. In other words, they can farm more profitably than the larger farmers?—That I deny.

23,089. Is it not because of the way the large farmers carry on operations that they require to let the land go out of cultivation now?—That is not the question. The question you put was, can the large farmers or the small farmers cultivate the land most profitably.

23,090. Quite so?—I do not hold that the small farmers can cultivate their land more profitably than the large holders.

23,091. But, as a matter of fact, they are not allowing their land to go out of cultivation as the large farmers are doing?—I don't know what the other large farmers are doing, but my impression is that it will not be profitable farming to cultivate land that won't cover expenses, and land has been improved in Caithness and upon the estate of Dounreay that will not cover expenses.

23,092 But, taking human motives into account, is it not likely that if the small holder did not find it profitable he would not cultivate land?—They are telling me constantly it is not profitable.

23,093. Did you not hear the evidence of men reclaiming land from a state of nature?—Yes, I heard it.

23,094. You have no reason to doubt its veracity?—I am not doubting anyone's veracity.

23,095. You accept the statement?—Yes.

23,096. Well, then, while the large farmer is allowing the land to go out of cultivation, the small tenant is improving it?—I don't think the improvements are now going on in the way of reclamation.

23,097. I think it was admitted?—Except the reclamation of a small patch here and there, I don't know of any that is going on now.

23,098. I think you gave as a reason the land was allowed to go out of cultivation, that there was less price for stock now?—Less price for stock, and the cost of labour has gone up enormously.

23,099. Less price for corn?—Less price for corn, and cattle and sheep and the labour bill of the farmer has gone up.

23,100. Well, then, the alternative is, I suppose, to take to grazing?—To some extent, or for a time.

23,101. Wherein lies the difference if the price for corn has gone done and the price for cattle and sheep has gone down, what makes the difference then between the two cases? The product of land in a state of waste is sheep and cattle; the product of agricultural land is also that to a certain extent, plus corn. What makes the difference which makes it pay in the case of it going out of cultivation and not in the case of land under cultivation?—You can graze land a great deal cheaper than you can cultivate it.

23,102. Quite so; why?—Because you require fewer people.

23,103. Less labour?—Less labour.

23,104. It is the price of labour that makes the difference?—And then there is this to be taken into account, that in cultivation you can use a variety of implements in reducing manual labour and also have the whole arrangement for grazing.

23,105. That would lessen the cost of production then, wouldn't it?—I don't know.

23,106. If machinery would do what people were doing before?—But it is to increase production and lessen the cost that I talked about machinery.

23,107. But the important point, I think, is that the cost of labour makes the difference between the agricultural land and the grazing land?—No doubt of it.

23,108. Has it never occurred to your mind that the small occupier provides the labour himself and saves the money he would pay for it otherwise?—I don't see that.

23,109. You cannot expect a huge agricultural farmer to work the whole of his farm with his family?—He does not do so.

23,110. It is a physical impossibility?—The crofter just works as hard as the farm servant and has to keep on doing the same thing.

23,111. But he does not pay for it?—But he does pay for it.

23,112. Not in money?—He does pay for it all the same, because he has to pay for his food. You can't say he works for nothing.

23,113. But, as a matter of fact, he does?—No, he does not.

23,114. And he keeps his land in cultivation?—The land pays him for that.

23,115. But you admit?—I never admit that the small farmer labours for nothing.

23,116. Neither do I, he must have a profit on it?—Precisely so, and the big farmer has the same.

23,117. But he lets the land out of cultivation you say, and he means to do it more in future?—I don't know. He may leave it out of cultivation for a time, but that is a rotation, and the question is just whether it is a long rotation or a short one.

23,118. But you admit the general statement that land is going more out of cultivation?—I admit this, that probably it will be a long rotation instead of a short rotation. There are a series of rotations in agriculture, and it may be profitable, of course, to have a long rotation instead of a short one.

23,119. You stated as a difficulty in making small holdings that the houses would require to be better than they were in times past?—Yes, that is my experience.

23,120. You introduced the sanitary authorities?—I mentioned the sanitary authorities in respect of their regulation that they would not sanction houses of less accommodation for small farmers and farm servants than those I had erected for my shepherds.

23,121. Were there no sanitary arrangements in the old times?—I am not aware of any as to the erection of new cottages for small farmers or farm servants.

23,122. And it was left to a public body to step in and provide sanitary dwellings?—It was left to a public body to step in and provide a sanitary authority.

23,123. Did the landlord take no precautions before to have sanitation?—I think the usual precautions were perfectly patent to everybody.

23,124. But they were insufficient?—So the sanitary inspector holds.

23,125. And a public body had to step in to prevent it. You admit now that that is a benefit?—Well, I don't object to it.

23,126. Would it add considerably to the cost?—Enormously.

23,127. They don't insist upon small houses in rural places?—I am not aware exactly upon what they insist, but I have stated in my statement I don't think the sanitary inspector would pass a new house for a crofter with less accommodation than I have provided for our shepherds, which has cost each £120.

23,128. You think he would pass that?—I think he would, but I don't think he would pass anything less.

Thurso. — William Reid Tait.

23,129. But you are aware of the amount of that work that a crofter could perform himself on his own house?—If the crofter has to provide it, he must really pay for it in one shape or another. I don't understand how you imagine the crofter is going to work for nothing. I have never found them do that.

23,130. Don't you actually understand the question of opportunity; it is one thing to labour and another to get the opportunity of exercising it, and if a man is denied the opportunity of exercising his labour, what is the use of it?—I am not aware of very many crofters who are able to build houses.

23,131. We saw it all over the country?—No doubt, but these houses would not stand the inspection of a sanitary inspector now.

23,132. But I presume they were under the sanitary inspector when they were put up?—There have been none of them built since the sanitary inspector came into existence.

23,133. We saw them in course of erection?—I have not seen them.

23,134. Then you stated that you were compelled under certain circumstances to report to the proprietor when no more land could be profitably reclaimed. I did not catch exactly—it may be my fault, but the occasion slipped my memory upon which you made that report?—Well, in my opinion, there is no more land upon Sir Robert's estates capable of profitable reclamation and cultivation. I hold that all the land upon Sir Robert's estates capable of profitable reclamation and cultivation has been reclaimed already.

23,135. And I think you reported particularly that that was the case round about Broubster?—Since 1859 there was no land reclaimed or improved on the sheep farm of Broubster.

23,136. But what was the occasion upon which you, in conjunction with some other gentleman, made this report?—It was with the view of improving land on Broubster, but upon close examination we came to the conclusion that it would not be profitable for the proprietor to make any reclamation there.

23,137. Well, that being so, how does it come that the people are there?—You see there are no people upon the sheep farm of Broubster excepting shepherds.

23,138. Doesn't the sheep farm of Broubster bound with the crofters of Broubster?—Yes, but that is a separate thing altogether. You are dealing with the sheep farm of Broubster, I presume.

23,139. Well, if you reported that the land there was incapable of profitable occupation as cultivated land, how do the people come to be there?—Well, you see that is going back, you know, beyond the time I had to do with the estate, and, of course, the amount of cultivation there was really very small, and their rents very small.

23,140. The point of my question is this, why were there no steps taken to remove the people from this land that you reported to be unfit for cultivation, and put into better places in the estate?—We should have been very pleased indeed in 1859 if we could have got the Broubster people to come down to the estate of Dounreay and take small farms there. We should also have been extremely well pleased if we could have removed several tenants on the Murkle estate up to Dounreay, but we found in 1859, when making these arrangements, that it was perfectly impossible either to do the one or the other, and we had simply to deal then with the tenants that were sitting upon the Dounreay estate, leaving them as they were and improving the land that has been improved. I make this statement, and I mean all that it carries, that it was the desire of the proprietor in 1859 to reclaim and cultivate and bring into cultivation such land as we thought then was suitable for that purpose.

23,141. Well, I have only to say that your answer is, no doubt, perfectly intelligible from your point of view, but it does strike one that on land which you reported to be unfit for cultivation, in which I quite agree with you, that it is strange the people should be left there when there is better land to be got on extremely large holdings?—You see at that time the Broubster tenants were extremely poor and could not have taken any more.

23,142. So that you cannot help us in the inquiry into the subject that has been remitted to us?—I think I have helped you very considerably.

23,143. In telling us that there is no land?—No, in this way. I have told you here is the proprietor improving all the land capable of cultivation on his estate, cultivating it, and, of course, increasing the holdings and the extent of the arable acreage, and that seems to be the gist of the matter.

23,144. But you see our duty is to find land of such character, and your general statement is that you have no land of such a nature to show us?—I have not.

23,145. Mr Gordon.—Can you tell us the relative extent of your two hirsels?—The one is about 600.

23,146. I mean the area, not the number of sheep?—I have not got the area exactly, but I gave Mr Watson, I think, the boundaries on the map, and that can be very easily calculated.

23,147. Well, when you say that your inclination now is, from your experience, dealing with the land to leave out part of the land into pasture, you mean the worst land, not the best?—Certainly.

23,148. That is such portions of the land as you find or think should not have been originally reclaimed?—Quite.

23,149. And is your object to lessen the cost of cultivation, that is with regard to the expense of cropping?—Yes.

23,150. You find that you can rear sheep more profitably than you can grow corn?—Rear sheep and cattle more profitably than growing corn.

23,151. That is what you mean when you would recommend the land to go back into pasture?—Yes. Of course that land, I may explain, should be nursed and top-dressed so as to keep it in good pasture.

23,152. Could you give the Commission any information about this Skaill hill that we heard about? Is there any material portion of that hill belonging to the Crown?—I think there is a considerable proportion of it; but I can give you no reliable information about it.

23,153. How many proprietors were interested in the division of that common?—I really forget.

23,154. Mr Sutherland.—Is there a representative of the Crown in this locality, a Crown Agent?—I think Mr Mackay represents the Crown.

23,155. Mr Gordon.—I want to know how many people were interested in the division of this moss, this common; how many proprietors, had Forss estate anything to do with it?—I am not sure, but I think so, and the Sandside estate had.

23,156. The Chairman.—You are not able to speak definitely?—No. Sandside I know, because, of course, Shebster had to do with it. Sandside marches with the Dounreay estate and with Broubster partly, and, therefore, the march between the Shebster estate and the Broubster estate was settled when the commons were divided.

23,157. Was that under a decree of division?—Yes, a decree of division.

23,158. Mr Donald Macrae.—I understood Mr Tait to have said that it would pay better to give grazing land to a large farmer than to small tenants of the crofting class. In connection with that I should like to ask Mr Tait what was the rent of the big farm of Broubster when Mr Miller had it?—I can tell that Mr Miller's rent in 1859 was £425.

23,159. Was it after that £550?—It was £525 after that. Mr Miller had a lease at £425.

23,160. At £525?—Mr Miller entered at £425. He sat out a lease at that rent.

23,161. And did he sit under another lease at the higher rent?—Yes, he did for a portion of it.

23,162. What was that rent?—£525.

23,163. And was there money charged as interest along with that rent?—I think there was very little, without consulting the books.

23,164. Was the rent, between what you call rent and interest, amounting to £550 altogether under the second lease?—No, I don't think so.

23,165. But it was £525 without the interest?—Yes, I understand so.

23,166. Now, what rent is charged against that farm to-day; it is in the proprietor's hands?—You will see the valuation, £325.

23,167. I find that that represents a reduction of 40 per cent. on that farm?—Yes.

23,168. Now, are there other farms on this property under lease?—Yes.

23,169. And crofts?—Yes.

23,170. Is the witness Farquhar, who came before us, a crofter under lease?—Yes.

23,171. Did any of these small leaseholders get a reduction of rent?—I don't think Farquhar has got any reduction since he entered upon his lease.

23,172. My point is this, that this large farm of Broubster has been reduced in rent 40 per cent.; my question is, have any of the small holdings been reduced at the same scale? In the case of the small holdings many of them applied to the Crofters Commission.

23,173. But I speak of the small holdings under lease?—There have been reductions to some extent.

23,174. Has Farquhar got any reduction?—I am not aware that he has.

23,175. Could you mention any tenant holding under lease, any small tenant, who has got a reduction under that lease, a voluntary reduction?—Am I really bound to go into this question of telling about the private arrangement between Sir Robert Sinclair and his tenants?

23,176. I put these questions in their bearing upon the statement made by the witness that grazing lands paid better in the hands of big farmers than in the hands of small tenants. [The Chairman.—It has a bearing on that.]

23,177. I think so. And if he refuses to answer questions I have no objection whatever.

23,178. The Chairman.—I must tell you, Mr Tait, since you have appealed to the Commission, that I don't think you are bound to answer that question, but you may if you like?—What I object to, my lord, is this, I don't want to come here, and to go into the private management of Sir Robert Sinclair's estates.

23,179. Mr Sutherland.—Do you decline to answer the question?—I decline to answer the question.

23,180. Mr Donald Macrae.—I pass to another question, that is with regard to a statement made by the witness, that he embraced since 1859 the opportunity of adding to the small holdings of the crofter class, as opportunity offered, by the death of a neighbouring tenant?—Yes.

23,181. And that there were no evictions. Now, I refer to a man who was a tenant at one time in Broubster, a man of the name of George Macdonald. Has a tenant of that name been evicted since 1859?—George Macdonald left.

23,182. Was he evicted?—He was removed.

23,183. Was it by a process of law?—Well, really, I forget.

23,184. Might I ask Mr Tait what difference he makes between an eviction and a removal by a process of law?—There were reasons connected with Macdonald's removal.

23,185. The Chairman.—Was his an exceptional case?—His was an exceptional case.

23,186. Mr Donald Macrae.—Will Mr Tait admit that that was an eviction, reason or no reason, I am not concerned with the reason?—I simply say that that was a removal, but it was not a removal for the purpose of adding to a big farm.

23,187. The Chairman.—Mr Tait admits the man was removed, and he says it was done for exceptional reasons. I think that is an answer.

23,188. Mr Donald Macrae.—Might I ask now if another tenant of the name of Robert Sutherland was removed?—Yes.

23,189. Evicted?—He was removed.

23,190. By a process of law?—I am not aware. He also was removed for very exceptional circumstances.

23,191. The Chairman.—I think you can hardly pursue this further, Mr Macrae, because he has admitted that in these two cases there were removals? [Mr Macrae.—Yes, but another question arises out of this.]

hurso.

William eid Tait.

23,192. What is the question? [Mr Macrae].—The next question is this, What did you do with the lands of Robert Sutherland after you removed him? [Witness].—I relet them to another tenant from Achreamie.

23,193. Mr Sutherland.—As a separate holding?—As a separate holding.

23,194. Mr Donald Macrae.—What is the name of that tenant?—He was David Sutherland.

23,195. Was David Sutherland also removed from that holding?—He left and went to America.

23,196. And what did he do with that land?—It is now in the proprietor's hands; I should be very pleased to let it to-morrow.

23,197. No, but I am going to put a question, Mr Tait. Did you not in your evidence already state that it was your desire, as small holdings fell out, to let them to a neighbour, or to divide them among neighbouring tenants, with the view to enlarge their farms?—Yes.

23,198. Can you state the reason why you have not done it in this case?—There was no man really able to take that holding sitting alongside.

23,199. Except the laird?—Except the laird.

23,200. So poor, were they?—I did not say they were poor.

23,201. Mr Peter Keith.—I rather think you misapprehended Mr Sutherland's questions with regard to the tacksman and his relations with the sub-tenants. Mr Sutherland's question was, had the proprietor the power to remove the sub-tenants at the same time as he removed the principal tenant?—Oh, of course he had. I understood Mr Sutherland's question to be if the proprietor had the power to remove the sub-tenants during the currency of the tacksman's lease.

23,202. Well, I want to ask a question about that just now. Is it the case that the tacksman, under his lease, was bound not to remove any of the tenants from the farm?—That is distinctly stated in Captain Macdonald's lease.

23,203. And it was part of the conditions of his holding the farm as tacksman, that he would not remove any of the sub-tenants from the farm?—Yes.

23,204. So that neither the proprietor nor the tacksman really had the power to remove the sub-tenants during the currency of the tacksman's lease?—That is so.

23,205. But, on the expiry of the lease, he had the same power to remove the sub-tenants as to remove the principal tenants?—Not only that, but the principal tenant was bound to remove not only himself but also his sub-tenants.

23,206. But the proprietor could, if he desired, at the end of the lease, remove both principal tenant and sub-tenants?—Yes.

23,207. Mr Sutherland.—That was under an Act of Sederunt, was it?—No, but it was in respect of the expiry of the lease.

23,208. That was no statutory power at all; it was power derived from the Court of Session?—Very well.

23,209. Mr Peter Keith.—Was it not a condition of his lease, that on the expiry of the lease, he was bound to remove if required by the proprietor himself and his sub-tenants?—That is so.

23,210. But, in point of fact, the proprietor did not require the sub-tenants to leave?—That is so.

23,211. Are you aware that it is the case that several crofters and large farmers have reclaimed land that should never have been reclaimed?—Yes.

23,212. And you are also aware that it is only the best arable land that will pay at present the expense of cultivation?—I am quite aware of that fact.

xander clean.

SURGEON-GENERAL ALEXANDER MACLEAN, Thurso (61)—examined.

23,213. The Chairman.—You gave in a statement?—Yes, I have only come here just to present documentary evidence for the acceptance of the Commission, if the Commission chooses to accept of it. I have done my best for some years to get hold of reliable facts regarding the crofters, and I have gone to the very best sources, and I have given you there the facts. Thurso.

23,214. You gave in a number of papers?—Yes, and a covering letter. Alexander Maclean.

23,215. You say 'I have the honour to enclose 'herewith a statement by Mr Alexander Gunn.' Is Mr Gunn alive?—Yes, he is living now, and he is exceedingly disappointed that he could not be before the Commission on account of the refusal of the expenses; I understood it remained with the Commission to grant expenses, if necessary.

23,216. We have been obliged before, I must tell you, to decline to receive evidence tendered on behalf of a living man who could come himself. We had a case of that in Lochcarron where we were obliged to refuse to take Mr Manners's evidence. And if Mr Alexander Gunn is alive, I don't think we can take his evidence from you.—I have a letter from him now expressing his great disappointment at not having his expenses paid, which he understood the Secretary for Scotland allowed the Commission to do at its discretion.

23,217. No, the Secretary for Scotland does not, and we have no funds at our disposal to pay expenses, and very seldom indeed have we been asked to do so. I am afraid that, with every willingness to take evidence, we cannot take his statement, he being a living man?—It is very impartial, and the evidence is very important and specific. There has been no report like it before in Caithness.

23,218. I am not at all doubting its importance, but I am afraid we can hardly take you?—Very well, I want it, if possible, to be put amongst the Blue Book records of the Commission.

23,219. No, not unless we receive it?—His name is signed to it, attested by witnesses.

23,220. But we have not been in the habit of taking evidence from living people except from themselves?—Of course, it is in the discretion of the Commission, I presume, the taking or refusal. It is a very important matter.

23,221. I am very sorry Mr Gunn is not here?—I am very sorry too. I wrote one of the members of the Commission asking if the Commission would pay his expenses, and my friend on the Commission said he was sorry to say that the Commission were not in the habit of allowing such expenses.

23,222. We have no funds to do it?—Mr Gunn said he thought a question had been asked in the House of Commons and that the decision rested with the Commission.

23,223. Perhaps Mr Gunn could come to some other meeting of the Commission farther south?—Perhaps so.

23,224. He might do that to some place much easier of access from Glasgow than this is.—He says there is no man living who can point out the different holdings from which people were evicted in the Berriedale and Langwell districts but himself, except another man who is now too old, a man named James Sutherland, who is bedridden and cannot go, so that it is very important that this man's evidence should be got. I may say that I have tried for ten years to get evidence as to evictions in that part of the county and failed until March last.

23,225. I think we might possibly afford Mr Gunn an opportunity of appearing at some other place where we would be much nearer his residence than we are at present?—Thank you.

23,226. Mr Wm. Mackay, Factor for Freswick.—Might I ask if there will be notice given to the proprietors of these estates that such an examination will be held.

23,227. The Chairman.—Full and ample notice. [To witness]. Is there anything else in your statement than what purports to be evidence obtainable from Mr Gunn?—That is the only reliable evidence which I have ever seen in connection with those evictions. They began in the latter end of last century and the early years of the present.

23,228. But are there not other matters here in your paper which you desire to bring under our notice not depending on the knowledge of Mr Gunn?—Oh yes.

Thurso. — lexander laclean.

There are several documents. I also forward statements as to the evictions in the parish of Reay. 'Lybster; Forss, in parishes of Reay and Thurso, 63 'families, with 108 evictions from Langwell, sum total, '465.' But here are other ones with reference to Reay and Strathmore, Lybster, Forse and other parishes, and also a separate return from the facts furnished by Captain Gunn.

23,229. Who is Captain Gunn?—He was before the Commission in Wick.—Captain Alexander Gunn. That is a separate thing. It is really included in the parish of Reay.

23,230. Was that information you have got from Captain Gunn?—Yes.

23,231. Mr Sutherland.—With regard to what place?—With regard to Strathmore and Achlybster. It is specific information.

23,232. Mr Shaw Stewart.—He has already been before us?—Oh yes.

23,233. The Chairman.—And he gave his evidence pretty fully?—Yes, I think he did. It does not matter as to this, but I will leave it. These are what I have endeavoured to make reliable as historical records, as I have taken an interest in the subject for some years.

23,234. It is important if we could only have it from the witnesses themselves?—There is one here, Reay, I wish to point out it to you. The man is dead who gave it to me, David Campbell, Shurrery. He was one of the men evicted. I got this return in 1886.

23,235. You are quite at liberty to give evidence with regard to a deceased man?—He is dead, but it is simply corroborative evidence we had brought forward this morning, and it is more detailed perhaps.

23,236. That is a statement, I take it, made up by yourself?—No, made up by him with his letter to me.

23,237. And do you wish to read it?—It is very long; I will read it to you if you like. It is very long, but I will be delighted to read it.

23,238. Mr Sutherland.—Does it point out for our information, Dr Maclean, places which, primâ-facie, are fit for peopling now?—That is the general opinion.

23,239. Grounded upon the fact that there were people before?—I claim no expert knowledge of this matter myself, but I have been mixed up in this business for years, as you know, and I have got it from people all about, chiefly in Caithness, and they consider enlargement of holdings a vital matter, and this goes to show that those holdings were in existence before.

23,240. And primâ-facie evidence that they might be in existence again?—These holdings did produce and maintain able-bodied men in the past, and they are capable of doing the same thing again.

23,241. The Chairman.—To what estates does that document apply?—This document applies to a certain portion of the parish of Reay not belonging to the Forss estate. There is a portion of the Forss estate in Reay, and I have another one for the Forse estate in Latheron.

23,242. What estates does it apply to?—It applies to the Reay estate, all except the Forss property in Reay. To Sandside, to Broubster, to Shurrerey, to Shebster, that portion of Shebster not belonging to Forss, also to Isauld, Upper and Lower Dounreay.

23,243. The lands we have been hearing of to day?—Yes, except the Forss portion, which is separate.

23,244. Then is there any other document obtained from a deceased man that you wish to submit?—No, not from deceased persons, but there is one very important document which I will submit for the favourable consideration of the Commission,—a statement of he names of sixty-three families evicted from the estate of Forss, furnished by Mr James Mackay, Toftingall, who is unable to be present; I have also a medical certificate attached to the list, certifying his inability to attend.

23,245. Is it a statement made up by yourself?—By himself and signed by himself.

23,246. The medical certificate bears—'I hereby 'certify that I have this day examined Mr James 'Mackay, and I consider that in his present state of 'health it is not advisable for him to leave home at 'present.' But this is on 21st August. Is he still unable to come?—So I understand; he is an old man and very infirm. Thurso. — Alexander Maclean.

23,247. The certificate does not mention his age, but is it age and infirmity that prevents him attending?—So I understand.

23,248. The Secretary.—I have a letter from that gentleman dated 29th August.

23,249. The Chairman.—He writes a letter on the 28th saying:—I have received your circular of 26th, demanding me to come to Thurso Town Hall, on Tuesday 29th, to give evidence before the Commission concerning the evictions that took place in my district, and which I would be very willing to do, &c.'

23,250. That makes a considerable difference; I think we will admit this statement in the circumstances?—Very well.

Sir—By this list you shall understand the number of tenants that had been removed and the number that occupies the same ground generally for a sheep run. They have been evicted.

In all, 63 families evicted to make room for the existing 8.—Your obedient servant,

James Mackay.

23,251. We have his name down as a delegate to attend here?—This has been put into my hand by somebody.

23,252. Do you wish to make any statement of your own?—Not at all, only this, that I have every reason to believe that the substance of those documents which I wish to present are genuine, that they are substantially correct and I know the authenticity of them. There is one thing which I notice the Commission seem to wish to desire to know something about. That is, the amount of common land divided in Reay. I have got it here from the Sheriff Clerk's Office; if it would suit the Commission this is quite at their disposal. It is a list of 'plans of division of commonties lodged in the Sheriff Clerk's Office, Wick.' I don't know whether this has all the properties that were divided or not, but the question you asked to-day was, I think, with reference to the amount of common lands which were divided in connection with Sir Robert Sinclair's estate. I find the amount which was given to Sir Robert Sinclair of the common lands was 6908¼ acres, and here are the other divisions for Reay as well as for other parts in Caithness, amounting to 15,693 acres, and I have added 7000 to that which I have got from Captain Henderson's Agricultural Account of Caithness, dated 1812, but that is not so reliable as the Sheriff Clerk's.

23,253. You got that information except the last item from the Sheriff Clerk's books?—Yes.

23,254. And you put it in as a correct statement?—Yes, quite so.

23,255. Is there anything else that you wish to say?—No, I don't think there is anything else.

23,256. Mr Sutherland.—Do you submit yourself for examination with regard to the general terms of the remit to us?—Oh, well, I have not come here as a witness. You have kindly permitted me to come before you and present certain evidence, and I wish to say that that is all I came here for to-day.

23,257. Have you any objection to answer questions?—Oh no, not in a general way. I have already said I am not an expert as regards land. All I come for is to provide what I stated as facts, but I am quite ready to answer general questions if my evidence will be considered of any value in that respect.

23,258. I would wish to ask you, Dr Maclean, as a gentleman with intimate knowledge of Caithness, whether, in your opinion, there is such land as we are requested to make inquiry regarding available in Caithness for the purposes for which we were appointed?—A very large amount indeed, in my opinion, in parts of Caithness, which I could mention if necessary.

23,259. Have you a knowledge of the exact terms of the remit to us?—I have a general knowledge that you are here appointed to ascertain what land is available for small holdings which is now under deer forest, grouse moors, or big grazings, other than is in possession of the crofters.

23,260. That could be occupied by crofters or other small tenants advantageously?—Most decidedly, having been so occupied formerly.

23,261. And, generally speaking, you are of opinion that there is such land?—Plenty; and another thing, I look at it not only from the local point of view—it is very material that the wealth of the community locally should be increased—but I think the present system of denuding the country of its rural population is a most dangerous one, not only a ruinous one for the localities themselves, but imperially ruinous. I wish to have in the Highlands, amongst other things, a good recruiting ground for the army. I know something of the army, as I have served twenty-five years in peace and war; I know the kind of men we want, and "slum" soldiers won't do. We want soldiers taken from the ranks of crofters and labourers. I have felt a good deal upon that point, especially of late years, when I see our army is not the army it used to be, and I feel pretty strongly as to that.

23,262. Then, with regard to the objections that are commonly urged as to the difficulties of reverting to a more general occupation of the soil by the people, do you think that they are of such a nature as to present any serious obstacle?—They are largely fictitious, they are artificial, and I think that, with very little assistance from Government, things could be put straight enough. There is a precedent already in Ireland.

23,263. What do you refer to?—As regards the help, the pecuniary help which the Government has given to the Irish people.

23,264. Advances?—Yes, to take holdings and stock holdings; we want pretty much the same thing in the Highlands.

23,265. But are you of opinion that it would be necessary to the large extent that is sometimes supposed?—It is a mistake altogether. I heard evidence to-day adduced with reference to the great cost of crofters' houses and different buildings.

23,266. Do you agree with that?—Not at all; it is imaginary, mostly. The crofters put up their own houses before, and they could put up their own houses again for that matter, and as to this sanitary bogie which I have been listening to, I know something of sanitary science, I suppose during my twenty-five years' service, and I know this, that the making and building of sanitary houses need be no more expensive than the building of insanitary houses.

23,267. You are a member of the County Council of Caithness?—I am.

23,268. And are you a member of the Public Health Committee?—We have no Health Committee other than the District Committee—Public Health. It works partly through the General Purposes Committee, and I am a member of both.

23,269. So that you have to do practically with these things?—Yes, of course, and I have had for twenty-five years of my life to maintain the health of the soldier, to prevent disease, so I know something of sanitary science.

23,270. And you think the higher requirements now would be no obstacle?—No obstacle whatever. You have only to choose a good site, and then a great deal depends upon natural drainage.

23,271. Did you hear what was stated here to-day with regard to the tendency of allowing agricultural land to go out of cultivation?—Yes, I listened.

23,272. And you heard it admitted generally, I think, that there was a tendency in that way?—Certainly.

23,273. Do you agree with that?—Yes, of course, it is going on not only in this country, but has been going on elsewhere all over the United Kingdom.

23,274. And what is your opinion as to the cause of that?—I agree with you, Mr Sutherland. You gave an explanation. A man gets a holding of his own and makes it his bank, and he puts everything he can into that holding, and we know, as a matter of fact, it is on record the experiment of Lord Tollemache and of the Rev. Mr Stubbs.

23,275. In Cheshire?—Yes, and of Lord Carlingford I think, showing how small holdings will produce more than large holdings. You will see the statistics given in the Claims of Labour book. These experiments have been, I understand, successful, showing that small holdings will make better security than large holdings. The people put all their labour into these holdings, only having to pay a reasonable rent to the landlord.

23,276. And is it within your knowledge that the rents for the large arable holdings are smaller now than they were twenty years ago?—The rents have gone down, I know, in some cases a third. There is one case in which the rent has gone down a good deal more, it has gone down nearer two-thirds, a place in Strathmore—Rumsdale, that is a sheep farm though; but as to arable farms having gone down, the farm of Greenland in Dunnet there has gone down from £900 to £600. Clyth has gone down from £600 to £400, or perhaps a little under, and so on. As regards the large farms, that has been general.

23,277. And you have heard what Mr Tait has said with regard to the reason for it?—I have.

23,278. And you have no reason but to substantially agree with him?—No.

23,279. And you think, then, that there is land in this county of Caithness fit for the purposes for which we are appointed?—Plenty of land, I consider.

23,280. And you consider there are no insuperable difficulties?—None whatever; I think the Government that winked at the atrocity of the evictions ought now to make atonement. They helped to expatriate, and now they ought to repatriate on no other grounds than public grounds.

23,281. And apart from that, you are perfectly satisfied that on financial grounds also it would be successful?—If the people had proper security of tenure and fair rents, or if they possessed their own holdings.

23,282. Now, with regard to these reductions on large arable farms, are they not a little more difficult to ascertain than those of the Crofters Commission, which are embodied in a public document?—Most undoubtedly, because you can't get at it; it is between the estate officers and the farmers themselves.

23,283. And you only know it so far as it appears in the valuation roll?—Even then you can't be quite sure, perhaps.

23,284. But at any rate you think the one is more accessible than the other?—Oh, certainly.

23,285. Well, the general deduction from that would be, would it not, that large farming has proved more or less of a failure?—It has certainly.

23,286. You are aware that it was urged at the time these large farms were consolidated, that one of the reasons for so doing was that they would be financially more successful?—Quite so.

23,287. Do you think that hope has been justified?—Not at all, it is the opposite. You will have to break up large holdings, giving possession of them to the people as much as possible, in suitable holdings.

23,288. And you think, so far as you know, that the expectations of those who have made experiments in that way have been justified?—I think so. And then I heard to-day about the difficulty of making holdings out of waste ground. Of course I don't wish to detain the Commission, but I will allude to the case of Charles Calder in Killimster there as a very emphatic case. It is a case of a man taking a holding out of a peat hagg, 3 to 4 feet deep, and rough heather growing upon it. About twenty-nine years ago he went as a shepherd, middle aged, with some of his family to help him to bring this under the plough. They had no capital except sufficient to buy a cow, and they depended for their subsistence upon getting employment from the surrounding farmers. They persevered, and when I visited the place along with our member of Parliament and the late Mr Waters Faulds and Mr Miller, whom I saw here, and who will be able to corroborate me, he had 26 acres of beautiful arable under cultivation at the end of 26 years. This he himself and his family made. They built their own barn and thatched it. They had a horse threshing-mill, they had byres, they had a good thatched house and a very nice garden surrounded by a wall. The man entered it having to pay 2s. 6d. for the whole thing, and when he began he trenched it, he dug it, he laid the tile pipes, and all that that holding cost the landlord was 30s. in tile pipes from first to last. He took over an adjacent holding belonging to a neighbour who could not carry it on, and who handed it over to Charles Calder; it was the same quality of ground with 1½ acres partially reclaimed. For this Charles Calder had to pay £6 annual rent.

23,289. For the part he took over?—Yes, to the landlord £6. By that time his own rent had been raised from 2s. 6d., on his own improvements mostly, to £2, that was £8 altogether; and the case came before the Crofters Commission, and, if I am not wrong, the Crofters Commission reduced the rent from £8 to £6—25 per cent. I think I am right. So there is a case in point, and that was brought before the Colonisation Committee, of which I think you were a member, Mr Sutherland.

23,290. What is the exact locality?—Killimster in Bower. Seater is the place. That is the name of the farm.

23,291. Now have you reason to suppose that there are other such cases?—I give you that case in point because it is a telling case, and it shows that out of the most hopeless hagg, intelligence and perseverance and industry will make in the course of a certain number of years a good farm. Of course it was a good farm before I saw it, three years ago, when it was 26 years in existence, but that was a case where the man had no capital to begin with except what enabled him to purchase a cow, and he had not enough to purchase a very big cow either.

23,292. So that he increased the land from the value of 2s. 6d. to £8?—And 2s. 6d. on the other side; from 5s. to £8.

23,293. And you think that was under very unfavourable conditions?—Most unfavourable in every way; a hopeless looking hagg. No capital except his bodily strength and skill, and that of his family.

23,294. Mr Shaw Stewart.—When you say it would be an advantage to the county to break up large holdings into small crofters' holdings, do you refer to pastoral farms or arable farms?—Well, I see the difficulties connected with arable farms, and they are great; but as regards pastoral farms, that is a different thing, it could be done more easily. Of course I don't forget that there are large steadings upon the arable farms that would have to be taken into account that cost a good deal of money, but my own opinion is that rents will go down and down with the increase of foreign and colonial competition, and it may be that landowners will be forced and compelled to lower the rents so as to enable the farmers to compete with foreigners and colonists. I see the difficulties you allude to as regards big arable farms.

23,295. What I was about to say was, I daresay your argument is quite correct, but you see the arable farms are out of our view. We are confined to grazing?—I understand. But the pastoral farms, I have no doubt, are quite capable of being utilised under the Small Holdings Act, which would be a capital Act to offer to the Highlands of Scotland, with a compulsory clause added; without that it is dead, that is all that we wish.

23,296. I only wish to point out that the breaking up of large arable farms does not come under our remit?—No, I know that; but I was asked to give you the information generally.

23,297. Mr Peter Keith.—Have you formed any idea of the cost of bringing under cultivation grazing land, say part of a grazing farm suitable for a crofter's holding of arable land?—I heard it to-day mentioned at £25. I think that is simply ridiculous, for this reason, that what crofters, so far as I know, have been allowed by the Crofters Commission for land reclaimed has been if I am not mistaken—I am under correction—about £5 an acre, generally speaking. That has been allowed to the crofters for each acre that they have reclaimed.

23,298. Where was that done?—In the crofters' court. I think that is generally what is allowed, £5 to the crofters. That is the estimate; it is supposed that each acre that the crofters have reclaimed has cost the crofter, well I say under correction, about £5.

23,299. You have no practical knowledge?—No, but I have a knowledge of facts.

23,300. You don't speak from your own personal knowledge when you say that?—No, because I never reclaimed an acre in my life, and very few have done it here.

23,301. Have you any notion of the cost of erecting a steading for such a holding?—Yes, I have given you the case of Charles Calder. Their own skill and their own hands did it all.

23,302. There was in that case, I think you said, a thatched roof?—Yes.

23,303. Will you tell us the extent of the steading in this place?—It consisted of a farm of 26 acres arable, with a certain amount of wild outrun, heather mostly. The house the man built, and his family helped him, I suppose. Very well, he had his barn, threshing mill, he had—all the outhouses I may say in brief were built by himself and his family.

23,304. From whom did you get that information?—On the spot, from Charles Calder and his family.

23,305. Are you aware whether the proprietor in that case gave very much assistance in the erection?—No, 30s. was the entire sum total that the landlord gave in twenty-six years, and that was for drain pipes.

23,306. Then, if rents of arable farms are coming down, and as you say must come still further down, how do you think it would be profitable to improve and bring under cultivation pasture lands probably at very considerable expense?—If the land is got cheap enough there can be no dread as to that land not paying, if improved. All that has to be done is to reduce the price of the land in accordance with the amount of foreign and colonial competition.

23,307. But are you not aware that on account of the foreign and colonial competition it is almost impossible, even on the best agricultural lands in the county, to raise stock and crop to compete with what is sent in from abroad?—But there is competition, as a matter of fact, now. Our Christmas cattle compete with any cattle in the world. There are no finer cattle, I understand, than the Scottish Christmas cattle sent to London.

23,308. It is not as to quality but as to price. They can send in from abroad and sell them in this country cheaper than they can be raised in this kingdom?—Because they have the land cheaper abroad and so much cheaper that they can afford to pay and transport also.

23,309. Well, with such cheap means of transport, do you think that even if the places were given almost rent free it would be possible to raise stock and crop that would compete with that imported from abroad?—Certainly. I have given you the case of Lord Tollemache's tenants and the Rev. Mr Stubb's, I think he is the gentleman, and Lord Carlingford. The tenantry under them have made their places a success, but we know, as a matter of fact, that all you want is reduced prices of land and then you can make holdings pay.

23,310. Are these cases not chiefly dairy farms?—No, they grow wheat, and it is recorded I think, I am under correction again, I have it in my book at home, that the holdings of some of the smaller tenants produced a bushel more over a given area that that given area produced to those who had larger farms; so that settles that point. For every 3 bushels produced by the large holdings, the smaller produced 4.

23,311. That would depend on the soil?—Everything was put in by the tenants that they could. They made a bank of the soil, and these gentlemen's experiments were successful, as I think they deserved to be.

23,312. You are aware, I think, that Cheshire is almost wholly a dairy county?—But I am telling you, as a matter of fact, as regards the wheat product in these places, it exceeded by one bushel the produce over a given area, as between the big farmers and the small.

Thurso.

John Manson, Dunnet (50)—examined.

John Manson.

23,314. Do you hold under lease?—No.

23,315. What is your occupation?—Farmer.

23,316. What rent do you pay?—£37.

23,317. What is the extent of your farm?—About 40 acres of land.

23,318. Altogether?—Yes.

23,319. How much of that is arable?—Altogether.

23,320. What is it you wish to give us evidence about?—I have been delegated to come here by the parish of Dunnet to give a general statement of the lands available for cultivation that is presently under sheep, sheep runs.

23,321. Have you a written statement?—No, I have no written statement.

23,322. Of what farms are you to speak in particular?—The farm of Rattar in the first place.

23,323. What is it you wish to say with regard to the farm of Rattar?—The pasture lands of the farm of Rattar were formerly inhabited by crofters to the number of something like 30; this is an under estimate.

23,324. Were they entirely separate holdings?—Separate holdings.

23,325. There was no township?—No township.

23,326. When did they cease to occupy them?—I think it was between 1830 and 1840.

23,327. They were removed or left about that time?—They were removed.

23,328. And is that land suitable for new settlements or for grazing purposes only?—Partly both.

23,329. Some to one and some to the other?—Yes.

23,330. How is that land occupied now?—Under a sheep walk.

23,331. Is any of it under rotation?—None of the part that I am to speak about.

23,332. Has it been under rotation within your recollection?—Not in my recollection. I recollect when the houses were partly standing.

23,333. The old houses?—The old houses, and they are visible yet.

23,334. As far back as your memory goes, has any part of that land been under crop?—No.

23,335. Is there any other land you wish to speak to?—A son of one of the evicted. I went and got a statement from him, or rather he came to me to give a statement. He is rather decayed, and he could not come here. He told me it was good land, and it is visibly good land.

23,336. You have seen the land yourself?—Oh, I have gone through it often.

23,337. Then you are able to speak of it yourself, and, in your opinion, it is land that could be reduced to cultivation and occupied by crofters in separate holdings and to profit?—Yes.

23,338. And in giving that opinion, you are speaking as a man of practical skill?—Yes.

23,339. You are able then, I take it, to carry on your own farm to a profit?—I have always done so. I have always paid my rent.

23,340. And paid your way?—And paid my way.

23,341. And has your rent been reduced in recent years?—Yes, and it rose in recent years too. It rose from £32, and £33 to £41, and a few years ago it was reduced to £37, and I have twice or three times got 10 per cent. off the £37, two or three years, not in succession.

23,342. But occasionally?—Yes.

23,343. Is there a desire for land in the locality which you represent?—Very great.

23,344. Are the holdings, in your opinion, too small?—Yes, congested villages.

23,345. Now what are the names of these villages?—Brough, Dunnet, Scarfskerry, and Barrock.

23,346. Have these villages or townships grazing at present?—Yes.

23,347. Is it too little, in your opinion, or is it sufficient?—It is very poor.

23,348. Is there any other land you wish to mention?—Yes.

23,349. What is that?—The farm of Lochend, in the same parish, adjoining the farm of Rattar. Thurso.

23,350. And on the estate of Rattar, I suppose?—No, it is a separate estate, it belongs to Mr Ferryman. John Manson.

23,351. And is it all grazing?—No.

23,352. What does it consist of?—Grazing and arable.

23,353. How much of it is grazing?—There are eleven names here that I have, who have been evicted from that place.

23,354. Do you know that of your own knowledge?—Yes, I know part of that, of my own knowledge. My grandfather lived here.

23,355. And you know that partly from your own knowledge and partly from him?—From residenters that have been there, or other people.

23,356. And is it suitable for occupation?—Yes, very suitable, part of it; the people were very comfortable on it until they were evicted out of it.

23,357. How many holdings, of the kind you have in your mind, would it accommodate?—There are two farms I know that had a pair and odd of horses that they were evicted from; and the others had perhaps two ponies, some of them, and some of them one.

23,358. And, in your opinion, it could be resettled?—It could be resettled.

23,359. Then, besides these, are there any other lands?—Yes, there is the farm of Reaster on the Traill estate.

23,360. What extent of land is there?—Perhaps a thousand acres or over.

23,361. But available?—Perhaps 100 acres.

23,362. Of grazing?—More than that of grazing, but what could be perhaps profitably put into agriculture.

23,363. Is that land under crop at present?—No, nor for many years.

23,364. Permanent grass?—Permanent grass.

23,365. And is that land suitable for settlements or for grazing?—I think it is.

23,366. Suitable for settlements. Now, is there any other land?—Heartfield, in the parish of Dunnet.

23,367. What extent of acreage is there there, which according to your judgment is suitable?—I am not very sure, perhaps 80 or 100 acres.

23,368. Of grazing ground?—Of grazing ground suitable for agricultural purposes.

23,369. Are there any townships near it?—Not at present.

23,370. How far away is the nearest?—There is Reaster adjoining, where there are a lot of crofters.

23,371. How far is Reaster from Heartfield?—Their crofts go almost to the pasture.

23,372. They march with each other?—They march with each other.

23,373. Do the Reaster tenants desire new holdings or extension of their present holdings?—Well, I am not very sure, but expect they would desire extension.

23,374. You think more of extension?—They are shut in by the dykes and the moss.

23,375. They are congested,?—Congested, and very poor stuff they have got.

23,376. And you think there is available land upon Heartfield?—I think so.

23,377. Now, besides Heartfield, is there any other land?—There is Rattar and Lochend and Reaster and Heartfield; Cooper Hill, that is on the Traill estate, also.

23,378. What extent of land is there?—Perhaps 70 or 80 acres.

23,379. Of grazing land?—Grazing land.

23,380. Available in the same sense?—In the same sense; it formerly was agricultural land.

23,381. How far is Cooper Hill from Heartfield?—A long distance, it belongs to the farm of Greenvale, it adjoins the Freswick estate.

23,382. Who is the farmer in Greenvale?—Mr James Younger.

23,383. Now, besides these places, any other land?—There are the grazings of the township of Dunnet presently in the occupation of the innkeeper.

23,384. And is that land available, according to your opinion, for extension of grazings?—Yes.

23,385. To whom would you extend?—To the village of Dunnet, or the township of Dunnet as it formerly was. They were evicted out of it, I think, in 1841 or 1842.

23,386. Who holds that land at present?—The innkeeper, Mr Mitchell; he came there last term.

23,387. Who held it before Mitchell?—The Spence family, John Spence.

23,388. Any other lands?—No, I don't think there is very much but what is under agriculture. Though it was formerly under the crofters it is at present under agriculture.

23,389. You mean it is under rotation of crop?—Yes.

23,390. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Whereabouts on Reaster farm is the land that you allude to?—Next to the Greenland march, between the county road and Lochend, part of it.

23,391. Is it green land?—Yes, green land.

23,392. You are not alluding to the moss on the north side of the road?—No.

23,393. And on the farm of Rattar, what land do you allude to?—Likely it is marked on the map, Grotesland and Broadlean. Grotesland is next Lochend farm.

23,394. Is that where the loch was drained?—It is the side of the farm of Rattar next to where the loch was.

23,395. Mr Sutherland.—You stated that there was land available for making new holdings on certain farms. On what farm is Lucifer Moss? Do you know Lucifer Moss? That is to the south of the road coming from Mey to Barrock?—Yes.

23,396. Is that part of the land that you refer to?—Yes.

23,397. What do you call it?—Broadlean.

23,398. Have you any idea of the amount of land that there is there that could be cultivated?—Well, I took a survey of it, not measurements. I think there could be very good land up to 200 to 300 acres in that pasture.

23,399. And you think that these 200 or 300 acres could be occupied to profit and to advantage by small crofters?—I think they could.

23,400. How long is it since that was put out of cultivation?—Perhaps nearly sixty years, between fifty and sixty.

23,401. And is it at present on the farm of Broadlean?—It belongs to the farm of Rattar, which comprehends something like 1700 acres between arable and pasture.

23,402. Then you state that there were about thirty tenants on what is now one farm?—Yes.

23,403. And was it during the time they were on the farm that this cultivation took place? Was it cultivated at any time after it was made into a large farm?—No, it immediately went under a sheep walk.

23,404. As soon as the people went out, it went out of cultivation?—Yes, and a dyke was built around it.

23,405. Then you spoke of the townships of Brough, Scarffskerry, and Barrock as congested; what made them congested?—These evictions.

23,406. The people were driven off these lands that were allowed to go out of cultivation and driven into these places?—That is so; there are some on the farm of Ham that were driven into the Brough village.

23,407. Had these townships pasture at any time?—Yes, some of them.

23,408. And was that pasture taken away from them subsequently?—No, they had the run for their cattle in the hill of Dunnet, the Brough people.

23,409. Have they got that still?—They have got that still.

23,410. And have they in any other townships?—Yes, the people of Dunnet, or rather the west side of Dunnet, have the run of the hill too, the same hill, but there is a fence between the landlord's properties; it belongs to two different landlords.

23,411. But I think you stated that the Dunnet villagers had the pasture that is now in the occupation of the innkeeper?—Yes.

23,412. When was that taken away from them?—In 1841 or 1842. The place that I occupied I had the benefit of, and there was no reduction of rent.

23,413. And could you give us a general idea of what the total acreage is of the land that you have mentioned in all these places that could be profitably occupied again?—The grazing land of Dunnet could not be very profitable, perhaps 10 acres.

23,414. I am talking just now of all the places you mentioned. Could you give us any idea how much there is in the whole of them put together?—I will underestimate it. I think between 400 and 500 acres.

23,415. Some of which could be brought under cultivation and others which could be more profitably used as pasture?—Yes.

23,416. Now you stated that you have no outrun?—I have no outrun. The outrun was taken away from us, in 1841, I think it was.

23,417. Why was that done, do you know?—I don't know. It was done—I have heard my father say who was tenant before me—to get the rent, and it was to be grazed in common with the innkeeper, the Spence people, and since they got a hold of it, it was wholly taken away from them, and they were summoned out of it, or at least they were evicted out of it.

23,418. Could pasture not be as profitably occupied by you as by a large farmer?—Certainly, I believe that the taking away of the pasture from the small holdings was their first ruin.

23,419. And you think that if they had a proportion of pasture, according to the arable they hold, the arable could be more easily cultivated to a profit?—Yes, I can prove that, because there the people that got a portion of the pasture and the arable they are the most able to turn it to profit.

23,420. As a matter of fact, that is the reason that is assigned sometimes for taking away pasture from small holders to give it to the large holders, so that the latter can occupy the arable to advantage?—I think that is something like it.

23,421. And these places you have mentioned you could get pointed out to us?—Yes, yes, I will get people that were living on it to point it out to you.

23,422. To show us?—To show your honours the extent of land.

23,423. Mr Gordon.—You spoke first of land on the farm of Rattar. Did you mean, talking of Rattar, this Broadlean place?—Yes.

23,424. You did not refer to the farm of Rattar proper?—Not to Rattar proper.

23,425. Do you happen to know what the rent of the inn farm at Dunnet is?—I have not very much idea.

23,426. Is it a big farm or a small?—It is a big farm, perhaps six or seven hundred acres arable, the farm of Rattar and Charlestown combined.

23,427. But I am speaking of the farm of Dunnet, the innkeeper's farm, is it a big place?—No, not a very large place.

23,428. What would be the rent or the area of it?—I think close on £80 of rent the former tenant paid.

23,429. Does that include the inn?—Yes, I think it included the inn, £86.

23,430. And how much of that would be applicable to the inn itself?—Perhaps £20, or the like of that.

23,431. Then the farm to which this pasture is attached is only a farm rented at £66.—Yes, and before him Spence had it and he was unable to run out the lease; it was very much lower. I think £60 of rent.

23,432. Now, about this Lochend farm, whereabout is the pasture upon it—the land under pasture which you say would make good arable land?—Round the loch.

23,433. The loch that was drained?—Yes, that is where the crofters were evicted partly.

23,434. Not out of the loch surely?—Not out of the loch itself, but partly at the north end.

23,435. But is it not still damp in the loch; has it been thoroughly drained?—Well, the drains are not very good to get into it. [Mr Shaw Stewart.—We saw a great many rushes in it?—Yes.]

23,436. In point of fact, if you were going to put crofters there you would have to redrain it?—Oh, they never inhabited the loch before, and likely they would not think of it now.

Thurso. John Manson.

23,437. Whereabouts is the land?—At the north west end of the loch.

23,438. Is that not arable land?—It is partly, but it is going out in grazings something like what I heard to-day that it would be more profitable to keep as grazing than agriculture.

23,439. Then that is rather against your theory?—It depends on the people that work it.

23,440. But is it not a fact that it is in cultivation at present? Is there not a pretty large field of turnips across it?—Perhaps they occasionally take out a field.

23,441. And is it not a fact that there is another farm with a crop on it?—Perhaps.

23,442. We saw it the other day?—Then there is a part of Holland Mey.

23,443. We have been all over that too. Now about this Cooper Hill. Is that a place near Dunnet?—Yes.

23,444. Beside a farm called Hillhead?—Yes.

23,445. What land is there that you would suggest?—It formerly was under agriculture, and it was put out to grazing.

23,446. Is it to the south side of Hillhead?—Yes.

23,447. How is it occupied just now?—Grazings, altogether grazings.

23,448. At Hillhead?—Yes.

23,449. What is the rent of Hillhead?—It does not belong to Hillhead.

23,450. Who does it belong to?—Greenvale.

23,451. Hillhead comes in between?—It belongs to two different proprietors.

23,452. We will see when we go to the ground, but it seems to me that Greenvale is situated at some distance from Cooper Hill?—The arable ground nearly adjoins the pasture.

23,453. Is Corsback and Greenvale the same place?—No, but the land adjoins.

23,454. But Corsback comes in between Greenvale and Cooper Hill?—Not exactly, on one side of the road it does, but on the other side Greenvale adjoins the pasture lands.

23,455. Now with regard to this Reaster land, is it wet or dry ground?—It is fairly dry.

23,456. It would not require draining?—Part of it, the low ends of part of it might require draining.

23,457. Does it extend down towards the Reaster burn?—Yes, the crofters had it down to the burn.

23,458. Down below, to the east of the Free Church school?—Yes.

23,459. And there is part of that land dry?—Yes.

23,460. Up next the road?—Next to the boundary dyke.

23,461. Do you suppose that you would get people to remove from Dunnet to Reaster or to Broadlean?—I have no doubt but they would, or from Scarffskerry and Brough and these places.

23,462. I think they would be more apt to do it from these places than Dunnet, because Dunnet is, to my recollection, one of the best places in Caithness?—Their crofts are very small. They farm it well.

23,463. I quite agree with you. Do you think you would get people to remove from these other townships, Brough or Barroch or Scarffskerry, to the land you have mentioned?—I have every reason to believe they would if they got it on reasonable conditions.

23,464. And you think there are men there who could afford to improve and stock holdings?—Yes, I think there are.

23,465. You see there would be a considerable expense attending the removal. What kind of holding would you propose on these places? Would it be crofts or small farms?—I would prefer over 30 acres, with an outrun in proportion.

23,466. As much as would keep a man and his family?—Yes.

23,467. How many acres do you think you have spoken to?—Perhaps 300 acres that could be profitably occupied.

23,468. That would only be ten people, you see, after all, that we would be able to provide for?—That would be a very good thing however.

23,469. Yes, it is always something, but it would make little impression upon a populous place like Scarffskerry?—But there is more than that; that is a very low estimate. Thurso. John M

23,470. You think there are more than 300 acres?—Yes, I question but there is nearly 300 acres that could be profitably occupied at Broadlean itself.

23,471. Well, I would not say you are far wrong. Now, with regard to Dunnet Links, it is not suitable for cultivation?—No, there might be a few acres, but it would not be very profitable.

23,472. And seeing that the Dunnet crofters and tenants got that links, what distance would those getting the benefit of it be from it, fully a mile?—No, not half a mile.

23,473. Does the Dunnet Links extend in below the church on to the seaside?—Yes, into the burn.

23,474. That is the burn going from St John's Loch?—Yes.

23,475. There would be fully half a mile, but not more. But there is no part of that land that you would suggest to be cultivated?—No, it would not do, but it is fine pasture.

DONALD HENDERSON, Tannach, Near Wick (74)—examined. Donald Henderso

23,476. The Chairman.—Whose estate do you live upon?—The estate of Hempriggs.

23,477. How far is your croft from Wick?—Four miles.

23,478. What rent do you pay?—£40.

23,479. Do you wish to call our attention to particular lands?—Any part in the parish of Halkirk, and the main reason that brought me here, I believe, after being called, is to say that all my neighbours, and all the country, as far as I hear, have grievances through having so little ground, and the hill ground and the best was taken up in sheep runs and deer forests and large farms, and the poor people set out on hillsides and mosses.

23,480. Have you a written statement?—No.

23,481. Would you like to ask our attention to lands that you think are available now?—I know there is Shurrery, Broubster, Achater, North Calder, and Skinnet, on to near Halkirk.

23,482. All these places?—Yes.

23,483. Well, we have heard some of them mentioned prominently already. Can you mention any place that our attention has not been called to?—Well, I can speak about Achater; it is lying waste at present.

23,484. Whose estate is Achater upon?—It was on Sinclair's estate when he was alive, it will be his trustees now, I suppose.

23,485. Is there grazing land there suitable for occupation?—No, the arable land that the tenants were in before is in it now, but pastured with sheep.

23,486. What extent of land is there of that kind there?—It was yielding about 150 quarters, the main part of it, and there are small tenants round it that were evicted at the same time.

23,487. But can you tell me the extent of ground which you think would be suitable now?—Yon land would be good still. There is not better land in the county.

23,488. What is the area of it?—It may be about 100 acres of arable into one spot and the small tenants that were evicted; three or four farms had, I should think, five or six head of cattle each.

23,489. How many tenants were there?—Four of them that I remember.

23,490. And how many could live there now?—If it was squared out it would keep a great number yet.

23,491. How many would you put upon it?—Nine or ten tenants.

23,492. What size of holding would each tenant have?—They would have about ten acres, at any rate, but there is a great deal of hill pasture in it, there is more than a square mile of hill pasture.

23,493. And is that land, the nine or ten acres to each, suitable for crofters' holdings at the present time, do you think?—There would be more than that I think, but I am not safe to say it.

23,494. And could they live there and cultivate their land to a profit?—Yes, there is a great range of hill, and good hill.

23,495. Could they cultivate their arable to a profit?—It is easily cultivated, because it has been cultivated for a hundred years.

23,496. And you expect it would yield good crops?—Yes, for I have seen good crops upon it.

23,497. I don't know whether we have seen that ground, but, of course, if not, we will take care to go and see it.

23,498. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Do you think a man could live on a croft of ten acres on that land?—Yes, and hill pasture, but I think there is more than ten acres in it, but I could not be just sure. It is more than twenty years since I did not see it. I have been in the parish of Wick since twenty-eight years, but it is a large piece of ground.

23,499. Mr Sutherland.—The places you mention were Achater and Skinnet?—There is Achscrabster not far from it, then Skinnet.

23,500. You say you saw crops on these places that are now waste, yourself?—I did.

23,501. How long ago is that?—Forty years.

23,502. They have not been cropped for the last forty years?—No.

23,503. Does that apply to all those places you have mentioned?—No, part of the others are cultivated.

23,504. And did you see small tenants on that?—Yes, I saw them on the farm of Scrabster. There was a Donald Henderson and a George.

23,505. How many were there altogether on the farm of Achscrabster?—George Macdonald and two Sinclairs, John and another, and another man up on the hill, say five; George Macdonald was six; there were twelve farmers in it.

23,506. There were twelve farmers where there is now but one?—Yes.

23,507. And part of the land that was taken from them is now allowed to run waste?—It is all into one.

23,508. Part of it cultivated and part allowed to run waste?—Yes.

23,509. What is the waste part used for now?—Well, there is very little of what is waste but could be improved.

23,510. But what purpose could it be put to?—Grazing sheep.

23,511. You are of opinion, are you not, that they could be occupied?—For a great number of tenants.

23,512. Now the farm of Achscrabster at present, is it a very large farm?—Yes, pretty large.

23,513. Have you any idea of the extent of it?—It will be more than a mile square.

23,514. Is that all arable land?—There is a bit of it to the south west side that is common hill ground, common pasture.

23,515. Is Skinnet a separate farm?—Yes, it is a farm by itself.

23,516. But at present is it a large farm?—Very large, more than a mile square.

23,517. And was Skinnet also made up of separate small holdings?—Yes, except one farm, the main farm of Skinnet.

23,518. The small farms surrounding it were added?—They were not very small. He was an exciseman that had one to the north side of Skinnet.

23,519. Was that near the river?—Yes, down to the river. Then there was the farm they call Sixpenny. There was Donald Calder in it, James Davidson, Walter Innes, William Henderson, John Manson, and there were three girls on the top of the hill that kept three or four cows.

23,520. And all these are now in the farm of Skinnet?—Yes, and what did that was big John Paterson that came down and took it and evicted everyone of these out in one year, about forty years ago.

23,521. And who is tenant of Skinnet farm now?—George Waters, he died here shortly ago.

23,522. Was that the gentleman that also had the farm in the neighbourhood of Thurso here?—He had the farm of Tister, and he had another farm besides.

23,523. He had more than this farm of Skinnet?—Oh yes, he had other two.

23,524. Were they as large as Skinnet?—No, I don't think they were.

23,525. Mr Gordon.—Who is the tenant of Achater just now?—One Donald Elder.

23,526. Where is the land upon Achater that you think would be suitable for crofters; is it the present arable farm of Achater?—It is green pasture, at present under sheep.

23,527. Is there no part of the farm cultivated at present?—None whatsoever.

23,528. All under sheep?—All under sheep; there is a range of hill upon it, but there is more to the south east, more than a mile to the end of the farm, and there is a farm at the south end of it.

23,529. Does the farm of Achater extend down to the loch of Calder?—Yes, to the south end of it.

23,530. Is that all upon the Forss estate?—Yes.

23,531. Which is the land upon Skinnet which you mentioned as available for crofters?—I could not say the distance of it.

23,532. Where does it lie?—It lies on the road coming from Halkirk.

23,533. But where is the land upon the farm of Skinnet which you think could be applied to crofting?—The most of it.

23,534. Is that the arable land or the hill land?—Most of it was in cultivation.

23,535. Is it in cultivation now?—Well, it may be green, but all the strath along the river is green, but it is capital land if it is improved or kept in rotation.

23,536. But is the land that you refer to along the river or on the west side of the public road, or both?—Above the road as you go into Halkirk it is not so good, but there is a good deal of arable land which they have improved.

23,537. And would you propose to put crofters on the west side of the road?—Well, if they had a run up and down it.

23,538. What do you mean across the road?—Across the road, give them hill and down.

23,539. Would you include the present arable land of Skinnet in your proposal?—Getting from the top of the hill down to the river. [The Chairman.—Do your present proposals include the arable land?—Well, they would have hill land.]

23,540. You mean that there is a strip of pasture land between the arable land and the river?—Yes.

23,541. And it is pasture land above the road?—Yes.

23,542. You want this farm to be divided to give so much of the hill, so much of the arable land, and so much of the waterside pasture?—It would do well enough.

23,543. Mr Laughton, Factor, Forss.—In connection with Achater you stated that it is a grazing farm?—At present.

23,544. Are you aware that it is part of a mixed farm, arable and pasture?—The arable ground is on the centre of the pasture.

23,545. But are you aware that it is part of an arable farm let to Mr Hunter, the farm of Forsie, all let as one farm?—Yes, it is. Forsie is along with it.

23,546. Are you aware that it is all one farm, Achater, Forsie, and Port-an-Eilein?—Yes, but the pasture follows Achater, and did not use to follow Forsie.

23,547. You mentioned that Achater ran all the way to Loch Calder?—Yes.

23,548. Are you aware that Port-an-Eilein comes in between a large peat moss?—Well, the far end of it runs to the end of the loch. There is a place there, Caryside, and it joins with Caryside, which is connected with Port-an-Eilein now.

23,549. Can you tell me how far Achater is from the public road?—It may be about two and a half miles or the like.

23,550. Do you consider that Achater would be a suitable place for crofts at such a distance from the public road?—I am farther than that from the public road myself.

23,551. You mentioned also ten acres as a suitable size for crofts?—There is many a one living on less.

23,552. The evidence given here has generally been 30 acres of arable?—Well, I don't confine them to be more than that, but I would like to be on the safe side.

23,553. Then, with regard to Achscrabster, are you aware that the arable ground of the farm of Achscrabster considerably exceeds the pasture in extent?—Yes, it is nearly all in cultivation.

23,554. And the pasture there contains a considerable part of heather?—It is mostly green.

23,555. Mr Sutherland.—Mr Elder occupied the farm of Achater?—When I remembered he had the farm of Forsie along with it.

23,556. He has the farm of Forsie and the farm of Achater. Do you know any other he occupies?—Yes, there are two or three other small fields he occupies.

23,557. Do you know if he is the Mr Elder who occupies the farm of Armadale in Sutherland?—I think he does, but I was never there.

23,558. Does Mr Elder also occupy the farm of Calder or North Calder?—He occupies the farm of South Calder.

23,559. Mr Gordon.—What is the name of your own farm?—Swarthouse is the name of the farm. It is in Tannach.

John Miller.

JOHN MILLER, Brabsterdorran (45)—examined.

23,560. The Chairman.—What rent do you pay?—£16.

23,561. Are you a crofter under the Act, or do you hold under a lease?—I am under the Act, I think, but I have never applied.

23,562. Now you wish to call our attention to particular lands, I understand?—Yes, in the parishes of Watten, Bower, and Olrig.

23,563. Take first the lands in the parish of Watten?—Yes.

23,564. Are you going to read a statement?—No, I have only notes. The first is the township of Munsary, the property of the Duke of Portland, in the parish of Watten, occupied by Peter Munro, Knockglass, for grazing sheep; once held by four occupying tenants with arable and pasture combined. Second, Halsary, a good Highland farm, on which I saw oats, bere, potatoes, and turnips; the property of Sir Ralph Anstruther, also occupied by Peter Munro, Knockglass, as a grazing farm. Third, Torran, also the property of Sir Ralph Anstruther. Grew all the crops for an arable farm; now wholly under sheep and cattle and occupied by the same Peter Munro, Knockglass. Fourth, Iryglass, in the parish of Watten, on the estate of Toftingall, that is on the estate of William Murray Threepland, Esq. of Fingash and Toftingall; in the hands of Peter Munro. Fifth, Bowlangla, alongside Achalybster and Badlibster. There were in my early days four occupying tenants in this township; it is now in the hands of one tenant. The cultivation of three of the farms has been kept up, but Bowlangla is waste, in pasture under sheep. Sixth, the big grazings of Wester Watten, a large area of superior land on which there were seventeen occupants; wholly under sheep, tenanted by Mr Davidson, Oldhall, who occupies one or two other larger farms. It is the property of the Duke of Portland. Seventh, the grazings of Dunn and Oldhall and Laurel, also occupied by Mr Davidson, Oldhall, and in the parishes of Bower and Watten, and the property of Sir Ralph Anstruther. A number of tenants were also evicted from this ground. Eight, the grazings of Lynegare, the property of Thomas Adams, Aberdeen Town and County Bank, Wick, between 300 and 400 acres, perhaps more, perfectly capable of being cultivated; the greater portion at one time cultivated, now lying under sheep. Ninth, the grazings of the Messrs Barnetson, Clayock. The tenants are in the parish of Bower, the grazings are in the parish of Halkirk, the property of Sir Tollemache Sinclair. Two farms on which there were resident tenants now wholly under sheep, Labour in Vain and Georgemas. Tenth, grazings of Tister, in the parish of Bower, and on the estate of the late Earl of Caithness, and some of the grazings are in the parish of Olrig. Mr Miller of Scrabster is trustee, and I think the poor of Thurso are the owners. Swarclet farms, the grazings of Tister; there cannot be less than 500 acres in this ground; a portion of the land is excellent quality and was under the plough; is occupied by the trustees of the late Mr Waters of Tister. Eleventh, the hill park of Brabsterdorran, on the estate of Mr Henderson of Stemster. There are about 100 acres in this park in the occupation of the proprietor; would be suitable for grazing to ten crofters on the estate, with no grazing, who would be willing to pay a fair rent. Twelfth, the Mains of Durran; the people were cleared off this ground; it is the property of the late Earl of Caithness, and is under sheep to the extent of 200 or 300 acres, occupied by pluralist farmers, Messrs Barnetson Clayoch. Thirteenth, the grazings of Mirza in Bower and Dunnet; partly spoken of by a previous witness, Mr Manson, who referred to Heartfield. There is a congested township that would be considerably improved; at the end of this ground on the west side of it, to get a portion of it. That is the township of Bower Madden. Fourteenth, grazings, on the estate of Lyth, a portion of the farm of Reaster, occupied by David Clyne, Reaster, under sheep. About 50 acres of good arable ground from which a tenant was evicted so that the sheep run might be enlarged. It is wholly under sheep now. Fifteenth, the grazings known as Keorse, from which four families were evicted. This forms a part of the sheep run for a farm known as West Side, on Sir John Sinclair's estate, Barroch. Sixteenth, grazings at Bilbster; were under the plough; would make two moderate sized farms keeping a mixed stock; occupied by pluralist farmers, the Alexanders of Quintfa' as a sheep grazing; it is on Sir John Sinclair's estate. Seventeenth, the grazings on Stanstill, the property of Mrs Wemyss of South Dunn; about 200 acres under sheep. Land of fine quality, with a county road in the centre; would make fine crofts or farms, and occupied by a pluralist farmer. Olrig parish.

Thurso. John Mill

23,565. You have been dealing hitherto with the parish of Watten?—And Bower.

23,566. And now you are going to deal with the parish of Olrig?—Yes. The estate of Major Smith of Olrig. A considerable portion of this estate has been consolidated. Part of the farms are under regular rotation, and part of the farms form grazing for sheep. It lies handy to the principal industry of the county, the pavement works, and could be profitably occupied as small farms. A particular field in Murkle, the property of Sir Robert Sinclair, from which a small farmer was cleared, I am unable to say the extent, but the small farmer's rent was £38.

20,567. And is that now incorporated with a large farm?—The landlord, at a considerable expense, put up a heavy wire fence round this croft, and it is let as grazing to a pluralist farmer at a rent, well, I think between £18 and £23. There are also grazings on the farm of Lochside and Thurdistone; a considerable extent pastured by sheep that would be perfectly capable of being cultivated.

23,568. You don't mention the extent?—No, I don't know it.

23,569. Does that exhaust your notes?—I have just omitted one case in Bower, the Mains farm of Stemster, in the hands of the proprietor. There are about 200 acres in sheep grazing that could be occupied by crofters.

23,570. That concludes your notes?—Yes.

23,571. All these lands, as I understand you to say, are available either for extension of grazings or for settling crofters on?—Principally for settling crofters on.

23,572. And do you mean by that in holdings which they could easily make self-sustaining holdings?—Yes.

23,573. Living entirely by the holding and without labour or fishing or any other extraneous assistance?—With the exception of the estate of Olrig, where the pavement industry would aid in the making of crofts.

Thurso. John Miller.

23,574. You would have holdings there where the occupant lived partly by his holding and partly by the industry?—Yes, and the same sort of holding might be formed on the estate of Oldhall. It lies contiguous to the Spital quarries.

23,575. You would have holdings there also where the occupant depended partly on the flagstone quarries and partly on his holding?—Yes.

23,576. But with these exceptions is it your opinion that these areas would afford self-sustaining crofts?—Yes.

23,577. And is there a desire for self-sustaining holdings in your quarter?—Oh yes.

23,578. There are people who would be willing to take such holdings and able to carry them on to a profit without assistance?—We part with such people every year; they emigrate. Such a class of people leaves my district every year.

23,579. Mr Gordon.—You have mentioned a good many places here; do I understand that these grazings, most of which you have mentioned, are at present held in connection with the arable farms?—Wester Watten grazings, Oldhall and Lynegar, Stemster and Durran, are all in connection with arable farms.

23,580. Now are these sheep grazings, or are they part of the cattle grazings of the farm?—They are mostly sheep grazings.

23,581. Could you without much trouble distinguish between what are exclusively sheep grazings and what are partly sheep grazings and partly cattle grazings?—There is a number of them that I have never seen cattle on.

23,582. Could you just shortly give me these?—Wester Watten, Oldhall, Durran, Munsary, and Halsary. I have seen cattle at Durran.

23,583. Durran is up in the same direction?—Yes, the county road divides the two farms.

23,584. Durran is down towards the river?—Yes. The other grazings of Tister I have never seen cattle on.

23,585. Now that is six places which, so far as you know, are exclusively sheep grazings?—Yes.

23,586. And the others are all more or less cattle grazings?—Well, they are mostly sheep grazings, but cattle may get a look on at a time if grass was getting scarce.

23,587. They would be used as part of the farm grazings for their cattle in the event of the cattle grazings in the arable fields being scarce?—Yes, for a month or two weeks perhaps in the back end of the season.

23,588. Would you say that the Lynegar Parks were a fair specimen of the other places you mentioned?—No, Lynegar mostly make use of their grazings for sheep also. I have seen 40 acres of the Lynegar grazings there for cattle but nothing else. I have seen it used occasionally for cattle and nothing else, only when arable grass would get bare.

23,589. Now take such a place as Brabsterdorran, on the estate of Stemster, is that sheep grazing or cattle grazing?—I have never known the landlord for the last twenty years make any use of this grazing but to give turnips to his hoggs a little time in the springtime. When the laigh fields would be ploughed up I have seen him give the turnips to the hoggs in springtime, but I have not seen him make any other use of it.

23,590. Did he ever put cattle there at all?—No, I can't say I have ever seen the landlord's cattle there.

23,591. With the exception of the six or seven places which are all sheep ground, the rest of them are more or less cattle ground?—To a very small extent they are cattle ground.

23,592. I quite understand it is only occasionally, but they graze cattle occasionally?—Not exceeding one month in the twelve.

23,593. Mr Shaw Stewart.—In your opinion there is a great deal of land in Caithness that could be occupied by crofters?—Yes.

23,594. Do you think there is room in Caithness for the importation of crofters from the congested districts of Skye and the Hebrides?—At the present time there is; there would be plenty of room.

Thurso. John Miller.

23,595. The people of Caithness then don't wish to take it up themselves to a great extent?—The people of Caithness are at the present moment, I believe, not in sufficient number to occupy the whole of the land capable of being improved. I mean that there are not as many people requiring land in Caithness as could occupy it the first five years.

23,596. Would there be any feeling among the people in Caithness at the settlement of crofters from the Hebrides for instance, would there be any feeling against that?—I would have none myself, but I have never heard that question discussed.

23,597. I don't quite see how you limit the time when there would be a demand for more land in Caithness; do you mean that the next generation that is now growing up would not be sufficiently large to take up the available land in Caithness?—I don't think that a generation comes to maturity in six years.

23,598. I don't suppose it does, but I want to know why do you limit it to six years. I did not choose the five or six years?—Knowing the great quantity of land idle in Caithness or under grazings capable of being improved, I just made this remark that there would not be in Caithness itself that would occupy it for six years at any rate.

23,599. Why do you say six years? Why not twenty-five years?—I have not the slightest doubt, if every facility was got for occupying that land; if it was got in fair and equitable terms, in twenty-five years it would be all occupied, but I think it would not be in six.

23,600. Mr Sutherland.—Who occupies the land of Wester Watten that you referred to?—Mr Davidson, Oldhall, is tenant.

23,601. Have you any idea of the extent of the grazing that is attached to Oldhall farm?—What is green and hill I have heard estimated at 6000 and at 7000 acres, but I am unable to say if that statement is correct. But it looks a very large area.

23,602. And are there any cattle on that?—I have never seen any cattle.

23,603. Do you know how many shepherds he employs on that?—Perhaps three; there may be four. I am only calculating on their houses; it is an ordinary way that there might be two or even three shepherds in one house; at least there is that number of other servants, whether it applies to shepherds or not.

23,604. And a great proportion of that land that is held in connection with the Wester Watten grazings is good land?—Land of very excellent quality.

23,605. In which you said 17 tenants were?—There were 17 tenants, 6 or 8 having as high as 60 or 80 acres of land.

23,606. And how much arable land has that gentleman got?—I could not say what number of acres he has, but I think he has 5 miles in length along the country road.

23,607. As an arable farm?—Two arable farms that adjoin one another, Wester Watten and Oldhall.

23,608. He has got two farms, Wester Watten and Oldhall, and this grazing of Wester Watten besides?—Yes, and the grazing of Oldhall besides

23,609. And the land that he occupies as the grazing of Wester Watten is, in your opinion, well adapted for making new holdings?—Oh, very good ground indeed. The crofters round about it, or in fact I may say in any part of Caithness, scarcely any of them hold land so good.

23,610. Are there any people, then, in that neighbourhood that, in your opinion, would be benefited by getting larger holdings than they have and would be willing to take them?—Oh yes, there is a number of people that would be ready and willing to occupy the land if there was only free access to be got.

23,611. Do you know Auchengill?—Yes.

23,612. Are there many families resident there?—I think 12 or 15.

23,613. Is that near it?—Yes, very near it.

23,614. How much land have they got?—Only the joiner and the blacksmith have any land, and I think they cannot have more than 12 acres between them.

23,615. And what about the rest?—They have none

..urso.
...n Miller.

at all but the little garden. They have no cows and nowhere that they could keep a cow.

23,616. And they are beside an arable land that stretches how far along the country road?—I think 5 miles.

23,617. Then, with regard to some of that land that you have already spoken to that has gone waste, has any of it been under cultivation within your memory?—On the estate of Olrig and on this farm of Durran Mains and this part of Clayock farm that is made up from Sir Tollemache Sinclair's estate. I remember these two farms in rotation, nearly every inch of them. I remember a portion of Lochside farm in Olrig under the plough.

23,618. Then have you given us the total estimate you make of the acreage you have spoken to. I think you have given it in some cases to us; have you made an estimate of the acreage of all the lands?—No, I have not.

23,619. But have you any general idea of what it would amount to?—I have not added it together.

23,620. But you could do so. But before departing from that you mentioned a croft that was vacant in Murkle?—Yes.

23,621. What was the extent of that croft?—I have heard 23 acres.

23,622. You stated that it went through a certain operation; it was well fenced?—Yes, since the crofter left it.

23,623. And then it was disposed of, how?—To a pluralist farmer.

23,624. Is he a large farmer?—He has two large farms.

23,625. He has already two large farms and he was given this vacant croft besides?—He is also a cattle dealer, and this park is very handy at the side of the public road, and he was likely the highest bidder, therefore he is in possession.

23,626. So he gave an accommodation price for it?—Well, I have heard he gave £18, and I have heard he gave £23, but the small farmer was paying £38.

23,627. And how far away was the nearest of the other two farms he held?—Not more than one and half miles.

23,628. Was that farther away than the croft he got?—It was one and half miles from the public road, but the croft that was newly fenced was alongside the public road and handy to it.

23,629. That was all the difference between the croft he got and the large farm he held before?—Yes, about one and half miles.

23,630. I think you have already stated that it is your distinct opinion that all those lands you have spoken to could be profitably occupied?—Yes.

23,631. By crofters or other small tenants?—Yes.

23,632. Mr Logan.—I really don't think there is any need for putting any questions. I may state, I think on behalf of Sir Tollemache Sinclair, that if the court should be of opinion, after going over the land of Labour in Vain, that it is worthy of being thrown into small holdings, Sir Tollemache would have no objections whatever, but I think the very name that it bears is a true indication of its character and quality.

23,633. The Chairman.—You have no questions to put? [Mr Logan.—None whatever.]

23,634. It is my duty to afford you the opportunity.

23,635. I wanted to ask you one thing, Mr Miller. Is it common in the county of Caithness for more than one farm to be in the occupancy and possession of a single tenant?—Yes, I have known as many as six large farms in the hands of one man.

23,636. Is that so at present?—Well, I can't say, but Mr Davidson, Oldhall, presently occupies three large farms, all very large farms, Oldhall and Wester Watten, and Buckies is in addition to that. The trustees of the late Mr Waters will very likely be the occupants of five large farms.

23,637. At present?—At present.

23,638. Mr Waters is a deceased farmer, is he?—Yes.

23,639. These farms were in his occupancy at the date of his death?—Yes.

23,640. And are now in the hands of his trustees?—Yes. — Thurso.

23,641. Are there any other instances?—Well, there are several other instances of two and three farms in the county. — John Miller.

23,642. In the hands of one man?—In the hands of one man. The large farm of Rattar and Dunnet, and the large farm of Reaster, partly in Dunnet and partly in Bower, are in the hands of one tenant at present.

23,643. Now, does it consist with your knowledge that such gentlemen holding several farms in this county in their own possession at one and the same time have also farms in Sutherlandshire?—Some of them have farms in Sutherlandshire, the neighbouring county.

23,644. One or more?—Two gentlemen belonging to this town have farms in Caithness and a farm each in Sutherlandshire, Mr Elder and Mr Sinclair.

23,645. How many farms in Caithness?—Mr Elder has two or three farms in Caithness, and a very large farm in Sutherlandshire.

23,646. And are there several instances?—There is the case of Mr Sinclair, also of this town.

[ADJOURNED.]

TWENTY-THIRD SITTING.

THURSO, September 5, 1893.

Present:—

DAVID BRAND, Esq., Advocate, Sheriff of Ayr, and Chairman of the Crofters Commission, Chairman.
MICHAEL HUGH SHAW STEWART, Esq., M.P.
ANGUS SUTHERLAND, Esq., M.P.
JAMES NOEL MULLER FORSYTH, Esq.
GEORGE GORDON, Esq.
WILLIAM MACKENZIE, Esq., Secretary.

HUGH DONALDSON, Strath, Watten (58)—examined. — Hugh Donaldson.

23,647. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter under the Act?—No, I have been a farm servant, and latterly a farm manager.

23,648. Are you a farm manager at present?—Not for three years back.

23,649. When you were a farm manager, for whom were you acting?—For a Mrs Mackay in Watten.

23,650. How long were you with her?—I was about thirty-two years with her altogether, and for fifteen years I was manager.

23,651. Have you any written statement?—I have a written statement. I was appointed by a meeting at Wick to give evidence from the southern portion of Watten.

23,652. A meeting of crofters?—A meeting of the Land Law Reform Association in Caithness.

23,653. And was anyone appointed along with you?—Mr John Miller, the last witness here yesterday.

23,654. You heard his evidence, I suppose?—Yes.

23,654*a*. And do you concur with that evidence?—I do.

23,655. You have a statement of your own?—I have a statement of my own. I did not understand that Mr Miller was to deal with the southern division; I went over the portion myself and gathered all the information I could get, and I have a statement to that effect.

23,656. Read it please.—Munsary, at the time of these removals, was the property of George Gordon

Thurso. — Hugh Donaldson.

Sweney, Esq., from which there were four tenants removed, viz.:—Donald Bruce, sen., Donald Bruce, jun., Alexander Bruce, and David Bruce. This was in 1865. It was let to an Edinburgh wool-broker then, and it has been out of cultivation since that date. One of the old tenants says there were about 100 acres in cultivation. It is now occupied by Mr P. Munro, Knockglass, and the property belongs to his Grace the Duke of Portland. Achrole, the sheep run spoken to by Mr Miller connected with West Watten farm, was at the time of the evictions the property of Sheriff Horne of Stirkoke. I find there were fourteen tenants who were driven out of their homes to make way for sheep, of whom the following are the names:—David Ross, David Sutherland, Donald Bain, John Meiklejohn, John Sandison, Robert Tait, Magnus Tait, Henry Finlayson, Donald Williamson, William Tait, John Geddes, David Robertson, John Mackay, and Andrew Sutherland. Some of these tenants were paying £70, some £50, and some £40. These evictions took place about the year 1839. My information is from one of the evicted tenants. He says the combined rental was over £300.

23,656*a*. What was the name of your informant?—Magnus Tait, now deceased.

23,656*b*. When did he die?—Almost three years ago.—I do not think it can be paying that now, for that would make the huge arable farm of, 1100 in statement, but probably 11,000 is correct, West Watten, with its 11,000 acres, something between £400 and £500 only. To keep within the mark there will be 600 acres of land in this sheep run capable of cultivation, along with about 100 on West Watten farm. This land is occupied by John Davidson, Old Hall, and has been out of cultivation for the long period of fifty-four years, it may be more. It was from an old lease I took the figures. This property also belongs to his Grace the Duke of Portland. Iryglass, the property of W. M. Thriepland, Esq. of Fingask. This is an arable farm of 50 or 60 acres. It was tenanted by a Miss Sandison, who kept the farm in regular rotation until some time about the year 1875, when old age made her give it up. It has been the greater part of eighteen years out of cultivation. It is occupied by Mr P. Munro, Knockglass, as a sheep run. There is an old steading on this farm. The following are on the estate of Sir R. Anstruther:—(1) Larel—I am told most of the evictions that took place here were from lands that are now under the plough, and as they are outside the scope of this inquiry, I have taken no note of them, but there is from three to four hundred acres of a sheep run—all meadow grass, no heather, and capable of cultivation. This is occupied by Mr John Davidson, Old Hall. (2) Halsary—A fine Highland farm tenanted by Widow Alexander Munro. I do not know how she left. The public had a great deal to say about it, but I am not to call it 'eviction,' in case I be wrong. The place was turned into a sheep run some time about the year 1875, and has remained so since. There will be about 30 acres capable of cultivation, and by improvement it could be made more. There is also a good house on this farm; it is occupied by Mr Munro, Knockglass. (3) Strathbeg or Torren was tenanted by Mr William Sutherland, who left it about the year 1875. It was turned into a grazing farm then in the hands of the factor, but he has let it as a sheep run last year to Mr Munro, Knockglass. There is an old steading on this farm, and over 20 acres are lying capable of being cultivated. (4) Backlass, a farm occupied by Mr P. Finlayson, or rather two farms put together. I find that of the farm of Leenmore some 60 acres have been let out in grass, and have not been cultivated for some years back.

Watten is a parish of some six miles square or thereabout, and I find there are some 1300 acres under sheep all capable of being cultivated, and I know I am inside the mark. I see that some of the former witnesses have been questioned about the altitudes of some of the places on which they have been examined. If the four hill tops in Watten—which was the city of refuge for the evicted crofters—if they can exist there, how much more would it be expected they could make a more comfortable living in these fertile plains. With the exception of some of the hills about the country march, Spittal Hill is the highest in Caithness, and it is planted with crofters up to the top. I have seen the corn and turnips growing on the southern slopes, almost to the very top.

Thurso. — Hugh Donaldson.

23,657. You mentioned particularly 600 acres, I think, on the farm of West Watten?—Yes.

23,658. Are these 600 acres enclosed?—Yes, there is a ring fence over the whole acreage, moors and all, round the whole sheep run.

23,659. And are these 600 acres all in one enclosure or in separate enclosures?—They are all in one enclosure.

23,660. Namely, this outside fence you have mentioned?—Outside the county road that cuts it off from West Watten farm.

23,661. How are these 600 acres being used at present?—Under sheep.

23,662. Are there any cattle upon them?—I was for a long period of years beside that, and I could scarcely say I had seen a herd of cattle, further than the shepherds' cows.

23,663. There was no herd of cattle upon them that you ever saw?—Not that I ever saw.

23,664. Now you say there are 300 to 400 acres near Larel?—Or thereabout; I could not be sure, further than what the people of the place said was supposed to be in it.

23,665. You estimate that as the extent?—Yes.

23,666. Which Larel do you mean, Lower Larel or Upper Larel?—Upper Larel.

23,667. How is the ground being used?—Under sheep entirely; since my memory I saw nothing but sheep there.

23,668. You are well acquainted with it?—I have been there very near Larel for about forty years.

23,669. Is that land fenced?—Yes.

23,670. With Caithness pavement?—Just a ring fence round it.

23,671. There is a road that runs through there, I think between Lower Larel and Upper Larel?—Yes.

23,672. And that land is on the south side of the road?—On the south side of the road.

23,673. And what is the farm of which it is a part?—The farm of Oldhall or rather the Larel farm, that being joined to Oldhall many years ago.

23,674. Larel at one time formed a separate holding?—Certainly.

23,675. And it is now consolidated with Oldhall?—Yes.

23,676. Forming one very large farm?—A very large farm.

23,677. Can you tell me of how many farms Oldhall is made up?—I could not say.

23,678. There is Oldhall itself to begin with, and there is this farm of Larel? Are there any others?—There is a farm of Laid too, between Watten and Oldhall steading.

23,679. Was that a separate farm?—Yes.

23,680. In your recollection?—In my recollection.

23,681. Are there any other small farms absorbed in Oldhall?—There were a number of small farms before my day, taken in by the factor of that time and joined to Oldhall.

23,682. Do you mean holdings of the crofter class?—There were some of them that would have a pair of horses, and maybe some two pairs; but with the exception of Larel and Laid, there have been no additions to Oldhall in my memory.

23,683. Then do you remember when these blocks of ground you have mentioned formed part of the farm of Larel?—I could not be very sure.

23,684. What I mean is this. You have spoken particularly of 600 acres in Larel?—300 to 400 acres.

23,685. Quite so. Do you remember that land before it was consolidated with the farm of Oldhall?—I could not be certain whether it followed Larel or Oldhall.

23,686. It may have been a part of Oldhall?—It might have been a part of Oldhall for all that I remember, because I was very young then.

Thurso. Hugh Donaldson.

23,687. If you are not certain of it, you had better not say.—I am not certain, but I would suppose that it belonged to Larel, because it joins Larel all along.

23,688. However, you are not able to speak positively?—No.

23,689. Now you mentioned 20 acres or so about Strathbeg or Torran?—Yes.

23,690. Is it enclosed land?—There is a fence between it and the neighbouring tenant on the one side.

23,691. And is that the only fence?—That is the only fence.

23,692. Is that land in what one might call permanent pasture?—Yes.

23,693. Have you ever see it in crop?—I have.

23,694. How many years ago?—I have given the date,—I forget now, but it is about eighteen years since the deceased William Sutherland kept it in regular rotation.

23,695. How is it being used?—The factor took it into his own hand when Mr Sutherland left, and he kept it as a grazing farm, and sent his cattle and sometimes his sheep from other farms he has got on the estate and grazed them there; but he has got another farm into his own hands now, and he passed that one off to Mr Munro, Knockglass, who has it as a sheep run.

23,696. Mr Sutherland.—What farm did you say you were farm servant on? Were you upon more than one farm?—I have been on different farms in Caithness as a farm servant.

23,697. And then, when you were manager, what farm was it?—Newton, Watten; the march runs between it and this sheep run I have referred to.

23,698. So you have had abundant opportunities of knowing definitely about the land you are speaking of?—I know it perfectly.

23,699. You have walked over it?—Many a time.

23,700. So that everything you have spoken to is of your own personal knowledge?—I have spoken conscientiously and according to my judgment.

23,701. And you have had abundant opportunities of seeing for yourself?—I have.

23,702. With regard to this land you have spoken about on the farm of Larel, is that in the neighbourhood of Banniskirk farm?—It borders on it.

23,703. Near the mill dam?—Near the mill dam.

23,704. How many acres do you consider there are there?—I would suppose from 300 to 400.

23,705. Capable of cultivation?—I would think so.

23,706. And the remainder of it is good pasture?—It is all meadow grass.

23,707. Now, I just wish to ask you one question with regard to sheep. I think you mentioned that some sheep were grazed on the farm that were sent there from a Highland farm; is that a common thing in Caithness?—Oh, quite a common thing to winter hoggs in Caithness from a Highland farm.

23,708. Sheep that are kept all the summer on a Highland farm are sent down here in winter?—Yes.

23,709. And are no integral part of the stock of the lowland farm?—None whatever; they come here about speaning time, and they must leave at the 20th of March; then they are away from you and you have got nothing more to do with them.

23,710. So, if we were going over Caithness and seeing sheep wintered there, we would not be justified in supposing that they were sheep that were always there?—In no case; because a tenant may buy sheep and winter them, but he must sell them off because he has no grass for them. It is a general thing in Caithness for the smaller farmer to buy in hoggs and to winter them and sell them off at the first opportunity.

23,711. So that they are no part of the permanent stock?—No, they are no part of the permanent stock.

23,712. You spoke also of Torran, and said you saw that area cropped?—I did.

23,713. Were the crops you saw there good?—Oh, fairly good crops.

23,714. As good as the crops in the surrounding district?—As good as the ordinary crops in a Highland place.

Thurso. Hugh Donaldson.

23,715. Then, with regard to altitude, what is the altitude of the land you say is cultivated at Spital?—I could not say; but Spital Hill is almost the highest point in Caithness.

23,716. And do they raise fairly good crops there?—Fairly good crops in connection with Spital farm; The parks go out on the southern side, almost to the hill top, and the crofters come up from the northern side, almost to the hill top.

23,717. So that I take it you are of opinion that the question of altitude does not enter very much into the matter in Caithness?—Not in Caithness.

23,718. However much it may in other parts?—I cannot speak as to other parts.

23,719. You have had great experience as a farm servant; is it your opinion that farm servants would take small holdings if they had the opportunity?—I believe they would; I believe the worn-out farm servants would take it as a great favour if they could get some bit of land to work on in their declining years.

23,720. And they are men of agricultural experience, highly practical men?—Certainly.

23,721. In your opinion, are they as good farmers as some of the large farmers in Caithness?—I think they are the farmers in one way.

23,722. Are they as good farmers, do you think, as Thurso merchants?—Yes, and much better.

23,723. And you are certainly of opinion, are you, that if they got the opportunity they would be very glad to take small holdings?—Yes; but I do not agree with some of the witnesses with regard to building steadings. That would deprive the class that I would expect was to be benefited entirely, and open the country again perhaps to merchants and publicans from the towns, and in the end the cure would be worse than the disease. The people that would be willing to get land would be entirely shut out from it.

23,724. How would the building of steadings do that?—It is so expensive; it would shut them out altogether.

23,725. And, in your opinion, is the building of such expensive steadings necessary?—Well, I don't say expensive steadings; but go on to a farm such as this I have mentioned, that has been lying out of rotation for fifty years, and begin to plough it up, and you will find you will be a good few years before you get any return worth speaking about.

23,726. And how does the question of the building of steadings come in?—Well, I find at the present day, on some of these old farms, that Government money is given for making drains and building houses. I have no knowledge of how it has come, but I know that the Government inspector comes and inspects drains which I have made, and I have seen him inspect new houses which have been built; and that leads me to think that there is Government money given for these purposes.

23,727. To whom?—To farmers or the landlord, I cannot say whom.

23,728. Oh, you refer to the money which has been advanced for improvements?—I refer to money used at the present day in some places in Caithness.

23,729. What you state is that, as a matter of fact, Government is already advancing money to landlords for the improvements of land?—My reason for saying so is that I see a Government inspector passing these works.

23,730. But, as a matter of fact, Government does so every year?—Very well.

23,731. And your contention is that you see no reason why it should not be given to crofters?—I should think it would be a much better thing in the long run if there could be something done in that form, because if you go on to say that the people are prepared to build the houses and to stock holdings without assistance, that means arrears of rent and that means beggary to the farmer and beggary to the landlord. It would be much better to get it on a firm basis, where both could live in harmony together.

23,732. Then your contention is that this land would not for the first year bear a crop?—I say for the first year it would not bear a crop,—I suppose you would scarcely get the seed off it.

Thurso.

Hugh Donaldson.

23,733. Land that has been lying waste?—For such a length of time: we have no implements that would cover the seed so that it would do; by harrowing it over you shake it all down to the bottom.

23,734. But after the first year?—The second would be better.

23,735. And how long would it take to get into proper working order?—The third year, I believe, it would have to be cropped again before you could try to put turnip in.

23,736. Have you seen any field cropped that had lain fallow for five or six years and more?—Yes.

23,737. And have you ever seen it fail to bear a crop?—I have seen the first year scarcely a crop.

23,738. In what respect?—We never could cover the seed; it neither ripened nor grew regularly.

23,739. And, with regard to this land that is being reclaimed every day in Caithness, does it take a number of years before it bears a crop?—The fourth year you can put in turnip, and the fifth you would be dead sure of an excellent crop; and for years afterwards it would be better than old arable land.

23,740. Suppose for a moment that money were advanced by the Government for the erection of steadings, for how many years do you suppose it would be necessary not to make any repayments in order to give the tenants a chance?—At the end of seven years a tenant that was active and doing for the best would be pretty well under weigh, in one of these new steadings I mean.

23,741. Is it with regard to steadings alone you are speaking?—With regard to the new land.

23,742. And, is it your opinion, that a farmer could settle down upon one of these places without building an expensive steading and finishing it right off to begin with?—He could build a steading as he was going along, and put additions to it; but everything put together, with the land not giving a crop for the first year and the great expenses connected with it, and the steading going on too, it is a matter of some consideration; and it is one who went through it that knows it best and knows the consequence.

23,743. Have you gone through it yourself?—Not entirely, but I have taken up a farm the most of which had lain out for about fifteen years, and I found it a very unprofitable affair. The farm was put under sheep and it lay out for about fifteen years. It did not suit sheep, however, and we began to take it up again. Well, it put it out of crop for years, and it took us years before we got it into cultivation again. But after we got it in it paid better for a number of years after the rest it got.

23,744. But we were referring to land that has had a rest for a long period of years?—I think you could come to the same conclusion about that as you would do about the fifteen years.

23,745. It would be a certain number of years before it would come back again to a proper state of cultivation?—Immediately after the first crop of turnip you could depend on an excellent crop, but not till then.

23,746. And it would improve every year after that?—If you did justice, did your duty to it, it would be better for a great number of years after the rest it got.

23,747. As a matter of fact, I think you have spoken to a case in which you had experience yourself of it?—I have.

23,748. Where was that, may I ask?—On the farm of Newton; I have spoken of Newton, Watten.

23,749. Where Mr Sutherland is now?—Where a Mr Sutherland is now; a farm of about 200 acres arable.

23,750. Yes, I know it very well. That is higher up than the land you were speaking about?—It is more on the slope of Blacklass hill.

23,751. You are aware of the conditions under which the farm is now let?—I think I know them.

23,752. Why did the old tenant leave it?—He died.

23,753. And what were the conditions upon which his successor went in, do you know? How does his rent compare with the previous tenants?—He pays I think £70 of rent, and I believe the former tenant paid £85, but the rent was £130 when I managed the place.

Thurso.

Hugh Donaldson.

23,754. So that the rent has been reduced nearly 50 per cent.; would not that be a condition that would militate against the success of a holding in your opinion?—I don't know.

23,755. Is not the ability to pay the rent an element in your mind?—Certainly.

23,756. And would not such a reduction amounting to near 50 per cent. be an important consideration?—It would be that too; but it was as easy to pay £130 then, as it that is to pay £70 to-day.

23,757. But the land is getting better, is it not?—I don't know.

23,758. Was there a considerable area of new land there?—There was no new land; all that was under cultivation since I went there, and was all lying under sheep for nineteen years if not more.

23,759. How have you had experience of breaking up land?—Because I broke it all up first.

23,760. To begin with?—To begin with, Mr Brown, Watten, had it for two 19's. I think.

23,761. It was lying vacant for two 19's.?—I think so, at any rate for one 19.

23,762. Was it all green?—All green.

23,763. Was it as good land as the land that is lying waste below now?—I don't think so.

23,764. The land down below is better land?—It is a deeper soil.

23,765. Then, with regard to the desire on the part of farm-servants to have small holdings, do you think it is a pretty wide-spread desire in Caithness?—Yes, I feel it is wide-spread, if it could be managed.

23,766. And is that difficulty of putting up steadings the greatest obstacle?—That is the greatest difficulty.

23,767. You have told us yourself with regard to these farms that on a number of small farms which have been absorbed into a larger one there are steadings standing idle, I presume?—There are goodish houses on Munsary, and there is one good house at Halsary, and there is a whole steading on Strathbeg or Torran. On the farm of Threipland of Fingask too, the whole of the old steading remains.

23,768. Are they being put to any use now?—Some of the workmen at the Spital Pavement Works live in the houses and pay rent to Mr Munro.

23,769. But for ordinary agricultural purposes, they are not used?—Not used whatever, because they are not needed for that.

23,770. And do you think that is a waste of capital that might be saved if the farms were broken up again?—Yes, I think it is too bad that one tidy little farm for a working man should be used for that purpose where the man has four or five already.

23,771. But you are generally of opinion that under favourable conditions which would not involve the difficulties you are speaking of in every case, and if there were such opportunities given to men who were of practical experience such as farm servants they would be willing to take them up?—They would, certainly.

23,772. And, in your opinion, could they manage them to a profit to themselves?—If a steading was on, I have every belief they would.

23,773. But the difficulty you have is that with regard to building the steadings?—Building the steading.

23,774. And paying interest on it from the commencement?—Yes.

23,775. Now, with regard to that point, are you conversant with the conditions that were offered to emigrants to Manitoba, and other places, who were to get advances from Government?—I could not say about that.

23,776. Did you ever hear that for the first five years or seven years they were to be asked for no return at all? Were you aware of that?—No, I was not aware of that.

23,777. Is it in your opinion a wise provision, and one that would apply in this country with beneficial effect as well as abroad?—I would think so.

23,778. Would it meet your objection with regard to the burden of paying interest on the farm steading for the first few years?—I would not grudge to pay the interest on the farm steading if it was put up.

Thurso. Hugh Donaldson.

23,779. From the beginning?—From the very beginning, if I got the land at its value.

23,780. But we are assuming that all the while?—Very well, I would not grudge to pay interest, I would not want the steading to go up otherwise.

23,781. We are assuming all along, at least I am, that you would have your rents fixed by an independent tribunal who would take every circumstance into account?—Certainly, it is not another way I would want to see them fixed.

23,782. And would that take away part of your objection?—I think it would.

23,783. You have no doubt the rent would be such as would enable the tenant to live and thrive under such circumstances?—It would be a very good way to make the rent a little lower for the first seven years, and at the end of seven to put it up.

23,784. Would not that in your mind be a material consideration in the minds of many men?—Certainly it would, and I think it would be a success.

23,785. You think under such conditions it would be successful?—I think it would: it is my impression it would.

23,786. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Do I understand that if the land was given at a fair rent your objection to the expense of putting up the steadings would be obviated? Or do you still think that the expense of the new steading would handicap a small farmer too much?—It would depend on the number of years you would stretch the interest over, and how much the interest would be.

23,787. The Chairman.—What size of holding would you propose for farm servants?—The size of holding I always thought would be best was the holding on which there was work enough for a pair of horses; on a less holding than that you have to keep a pair of horses and you have to feed them, and I consider these horses eat the provender that should go to feed cattle; they are not constantly required, but you cannot do without them. I would prefer to see a holding where there was abundant work for a pair of horses, or else make it so little that one horse would do: or, as I have seen, two neighbours plough together.

23,788. In a case of that sort, do you contemplate that the farm servant should go on working as a farm servant, or that he is to devote himself to his holding?—He would devote himself entirely to his holding.

23,789. He would have ceased to be a farm servant?—He would cease to be a farm servant.

23,790. Now, are you in favour of farm servants who continue to be farm servants?—I am, certainly.

23,791. Wait a moment.—As long as they are able to work.

23,792. Let me finish the question. Are you in favour of farm servants, who continue to be farm servants, getting a holding larger than anything they have yet received?—No; while they are farm servants I do not see it is of any use to them.

23,793. You would not give a holding of any size to a man so long as he continues to be a farm servant?—No, I would not.

23,794. You think his time would be fully occupied?—Entirely.

23,795. In performing the services for which he gets his wages?—Entirely.

23,796. And, therefore, you would be against giving the land to such a person?—Anything further than a garden.

23,797. Quite so, when he can work it after hours?—Just so.

23,798. But you would propose that facilities should be afforded for giving holdings to men who had been farm servants, but were anxious to retire and devote the rest of their lives to cultivating their own holdings?—I am greatly in favour of that.

23,799. Now, taking average soil in this county which had been under permanent grass for fifteen or twenty years perhaps, and breaking it up and reducing it to a state of cultivation, how many years would you expect to have to work it before you got any profitable return?—To take it as a whole, I would work hard at it for seven years. Thurso.

23,800. You would not expect a profitable return before that?—Not before the end of seven years; I would have a profitable return from parts, but not over all. Hugh Donaldson

23,801. But at the end of seven, you would expect it?—I would expect it to be in working order.

23,802. And you would expect a profitable return, with average weather, to continue for a good number of years?—I would, more so than if I had got an arable farm to begin with.

23,803. Then you mentioned the difficulty you would have about a steading. You mean that a house and steading could hardly be put up by a man in such circumstances without some assistance?—I do not see how it could.

23,804. Suppose he got assistance for the house and steading, how would he meet his rent during the first seven years, I mean for the ground?—He would have his grass, and he would make his rent out of his younger cattle.

23,805. He would look to the stock for his rent?—Almost entirely to his stock.

23,806. And for his own maintenance, and the maintenance of his wife and family?—He would have that on the farm.

23,807. But he would have a good deal of privation to undergo?—A great deal.

23,808. Do you think from your knowledge of the country and the other tenants in the county that there are many who would face such difficulties as that?—There would be no difficulty in getting them to face it if the steading question was settled.

23,809. You think if the steading question was put on a satisfactory basis, they would be prepared to face the rent?—I think so. I will give you an instance. That farm of Newton, of which we have spoken, was advertised last year, and I found out there were 19 offerers for the one farm. That number would occupy more than all the ground that lies adjacent, this sheep run that I have spoken about, if the steadings were there, but it would not do without the steadings. Well, there was another little croft across in Bower which was advertised, and there were 24 offerers I was told for it. There was also another little croft in Thrumster, which the Crofters Commission went over, and reduced the rent from £12 to £6. The crofter died, leaving no successor, and the cry for land was such that they put up the rent of that croft to £12 again; there were so many bidders. Those are three instances of the demand that there is for land.

23,810. But, as I understand, you yourself would not venture upon such a holding as we have been describing, unless you got some assistance for the erection of the house and steading?—I would not; but if I got the steading I would be most happy to-morrow to take one of these holdings.

23,811. Mr Forsyth.—You have given us very clear evidence as to the larger style of farm,—what I may call the pair horse farm which you have been describing and discussing. Can you give us any information as to the smaller size of holding, whether there is much demand in this county for a much smaller holding, which a man would cultivate and also be a labourer,—I don't mean a farm servant, but a labourer?—Yes, there would be a good many of that kind. A good many of these labourers can take days now and again when it suits them, and they are very much inclined for such places, say about 10 acres or thereabouts.

23,812. How would they cultivate this, by horse labour?—They pay their neighbours for ploughing it and doing that work, and they don't keep a horse; all that they keep is in the cattle way, to help to pay the rent.

23,813. But these men, as a rule, have houses already, have they not?—They have.

23,814. How would you do with a man who wanted a new holding of that kind, and to put a house on it; do you see your way there?—Oh, there would require to be some help, just the same as I have described for the others.

Thurso. — Hugh Donaldson.

23,815. But on a smaller scale?—On a smaller scale.

23,816. And do you consider that there is a demand for that in this county?—There is.

23,817. Do you think that a labourer could meet his engagements, as regards house and land, and pay a fair rent?—I believe he could; we have such men amongst us already, around the pavement works that I spoke about there and in Watten. There are numbers of these men who hold a little croft and work at the pavement works.

23,818. And you think about 10 acres arable of fair land would do?—I think that would be plenty, because if it was much more than that it would take up too much of their time; and probably if they spent too much of their time at home they might be paid off.

23,819. And they would be inclined to devote their attention almost entirely to that small subject, and that would not pay them, is that your view?—That would not pay them.

23,820. Ten acres is quite enough; or is it not too much?—Yes, I would say it is quite enough.

23,821. For one or two cows, with a bit of outrun?—It might keep two if it was goodish land.

23,822. But a holding of that kind, from 5 to 10 acres, would be a convenience?—I would think so.

23,823. Mr Sutherland.—In reply to a question by the Chairman, you stated that you did not think it would be desirable to give small holdings to men who are at present farm servants?—I did.

23,824. May I ask you what was your reason for that answer?—My reason is this. A farm servant in Caithness, at the present time, works ten hours in the field. Very well, he works about an hour in the stable in the morning, between going there and feeding and coming back; and he works another hour at mid-day.

23,825. That makes twelve hours?—He works another hour after 6 o'clock at night.

23,826. Making thirteen hours?—That makes thirteen hours that a farm servant in Caithness, generally speaking, has got to work at the present day; and what time has he got to go and work a croft?

23,827. So it is not a question in certain circumstances his being able to do it, but on the ground of time alone that you see the objection?—I don't approve of it any way. I think a farm servant, in the employment of his master, has got enough to do to attend to his work there.

23,828. Thirteen hours a day?—I think so.

23,829. But it is all a question of want of time?—Want of time.

23,830. You think it would be a great benefit to a man who was a labourer otherwise?—I do.

23,831. Altogether, because he has shorter hours than the farm servants?—He has the ten hours of work and no more.

23,832. Now then, with regard to the new holding and the paying of rent upon it, have you any idea as to the rent per acre that is being paid for the waste land at present?—Well, I could not say as to that. The whole farm pays one rent; I cannot be sure by the valuation roll in the case of the Duke of Portland's grounds, because he gives a percentage off, some 3s. in the pound, when you pay your rent.

23,833. But as an experienced man, do you know or have you ever heard what the value of that pasture is per acre; what is being paid for it now?—No, I don't know what they pay for it now, but it was said to be £300, the combined rent, when the tenants were evicted.

23,834. But it was arable land then, you know?—Well, I suppose I am safe to say that I have seen 1000 lambs sold off that ground at speaning time.

23,835. Have you any reason to suppose it is a high rental that is being paid for the waste land?—I don't think it is a high rental; I don't think it is as much as the rent paid by the old tenants, because that would reduce the rent of West Watten to 7s. per acre.

23,836. You think that the rent that is paid for the waste land is not a considerable figure?—I could not state what it might be calculated to be at the present time, as both farms are combined.

23,837. But you are of opinion that it is nothing in comparison with rent that is paid for land under cultivation at present?—No, it cannot be that.

Thurso. — Hugh Donaldson.

23,838. Well, would you contemplate under any circumstances paying more for it after it is brought under cultivation than is payable for it now?—If it was brought into rotation possibly it might be worth more than it is just now.

23,839. To whom?—To a working farmer.

23,840. But, with regard to the rent?—Well, as I have stated I cannot say what is the present rent, or what might be the actual acreage after it was taken up.

23,841. But would there be any loss to any person if you paid for it when it was cultivated, the same rent that is being paid for it now?—Certainly, there would be no loss.

23,842. No loss to any person?—None. The rent that is being paid for it now is, I think, under the old rent paid by the evicted tenants. That is my opinion, when I calculate on what West Watten pays.

23,843. Mr Gordon.—Upon this question of rent, I would like to understand from you whether you think a tenant would be safe to promise anything like the same rent which the tacksman is now paying to the landlord, and also pay to the Government a return of interest on the cost of the buildings?—The difficulty is that I cannot be sure what is the present rent.

23,844. Well, but you are a Practical Man; do you think the man could afford to pay the same rent as a tacksman, and to pay the interest on buildings and fencing too?—I think so; I think it would be much better than to go into the other form.

23,845. But do you think he could manage to pay that additional rent and interest?—I would think so; if the interest had been stretched over a number of years so that it would not be too heavy in one year.

23,846. It depends upon that a little. But for a £30 rent, what do you think would be the expense of buildings; say on a pair horse farm?—You scarcely could expect to get it completed under £200.

23,847. You would hardly get up a dwelling-house and a barn and a byre and stable for £200, would you?—I think you would in Caithness, where the quarries are so convenient.

23,848. The quarries would be convenient, and the cartage is not large?—And the slates so convenient, and all these pavements so convenient, and the farmer might save the driving by doing the cartage himself, and working hand in hand, thus lowering the interest.

23,849. You think he would be able to pay 3 or 4 per cent., say 3 per cent., which would be a very small percentage even on £200, but I would be inclined rather to put it at £300, which would mean £9 a year additional to the rent?—That would be hard enough too, but I still would prefer the steading.*

23,850. No doubt it is better if you get it?—I would prefer, and I would try it that way.

23,851. I quite understand your proposal is that you would relieve the tenant of the expenditure of his own capital?—Certainly.

23,852. But it would be a pretty hard tax upon him to pay interest on the building, to say nothing about the fencing?—Well, if he got the land at its fair value.

23,853. It is all a question of rent?—All a question of rent.

23,854. But you say you would pay the same rent now? I am rather afraid you would not be able to pay the same rent, and you might be doing an injury to the

* Mr Donaldson has since written setting forth the details on which his estimate of £200 was based. They are as follows, according to Caithness prices:—

4 doors,	4	0	0
5 roof lights,	1	10	0
3 windows,	3	0	0

"This," he adds, "is the money I would have to pay interest on. I would finish all inside work, but the building would be mine, and not the landlord's."

Thurso. — Hugh Donaldson.

man by saying he could do it?—I cannot be sure what is the real rent.

23,855. But I mean that he would be able to pay the tacksman's rent whatever the rent is, whether £200 or £300?—I think if I got it into rotation, I would be able to pay the present tacksman's rent; about 8s. an acre.

23,856. Some of it would be dear enough at that?—And some would be dear enough at that, because it is not all good ground. There is some very good ground and some very poor.

23,857. We saw part of it very good; but I am afraid you could scarcely calculate upon a tenant being able to pay the tacksman's rent plus interest on the building?—Well, I said I would prefer to get the first seven years' rent a little cheaper, and I would agree then to give an advance.

23,858. Till the interest was paid off?—Yes.

23,859. Mr Sutherland.—With regard to the amount of rent, if you got tacksman's land, would not you pay tacksman's rent?—Yes.

23,860. The Chairman.—Suppose you got a holding of this kind, and looked forward to working it for about seven years before you got a profitable return, and you had the fixing of your own rent the first seven years, what rent would you assess upon yourself?—It would not be worth over 5s. an acre to me for the first seven years.

23,861. You would assess that upon yourself?—About that.

William Taylor.

WILLIAM TAYLOR, Carrier, Halkirk (68)—examined.

23,862. The Chairman.—Are you a leaseholder or a crofter?—I am neither.

23,863. What is your occupation?—A carrier.

23,864. But have you a holding? Have you a croft?—No, I have some feus in the village of Halkirk.

23,865. Is there land to which you wish to ask our attention?—I was cited here to appear to give in the list of some lands in Gerston, where I was evicted from in 1854.

23,866. Have you the list with you?—Yes.

23,867. Read your statement if you please.—The first place is Gerston, and the names of parties who were evicted between 1848 and 1854 are George Douglas, James Sinclair, John Douglas, John and Donald Gunn, George Sutherland, Donald Macpherson, William Bain, Donald Mackay, Donald Mackinlay, John Allan, Bell and Janet Budge, John Munro, Sinclair Murray, and William Taylor.

23,868. Were these all removed in your own knowledge?—Yes.

23,869. Between 1848 and 1854?—Yes, I was about the last that was put out, and it was in the year 1855.

23,870. How are the lands that were occupied by these persons now used?—After 1854 it was occupied by one tenant. All these were sub-tenants before.

23,871. Under whom?—Under the tenant who had the farm of Gerston; his name was Mr Swanson.

23,872. Is the land part of a farm now?—Yes, it is all in one farm, in this district, under one tenant.

23,873. What is the name of the farm?—Gerston.

23,874. It is part of the farm of Gerston. Is that all land now under rotation, or is it in grass?—Part of it under grazing and part under rotation.

23,875. Is the part under grazing enclosed land?—It has a ring fence round it all.

23,876. And is it land that has been under rotation?—Part of it is and part not.

23,877. Is the land that is not under rotation, land that had been under rotation within recent years?—Yes.

23,878. How long is it since that land now under grazing was under rotation?—Since 1850 and 1854.

23,879. Has it been cultivated at all since these evictions?—No, not since 1854.

23,880. Is it land in your judgment suitable for occupation by crofters now?—Decidedly, some of it is excellent ground.

23,881. What is the extent of the land?—There is one farm called Deakless with about 50 to 60 acres of arable ground.

23,882. Then, is there any other land?—Yes, on the river side, what they call the strath; there are three farms there that I recollect. Thurso. — William Taylor.

23,883. You mean three holdings, I suppose?—Yes.

23,884. And what extent of land is there?—From 12 to 20 acres in the first; and in the second about 6 acres, and in the third 12 to 15 acres.

23,885. Do these acreages you have given, which are approximate I suppose, embrace all the lands you are referring to here?—Yes, on the farm of Gerston.

23,886. You hold feus in Halkirk?—Yes.

23,887. You have given us the account of removals from 1848 to 1854. Are you desirous yourself of obtaining a holding?—I would like to see the ground cultivated, but I am getting too old for taking a farm.

23,888. You have not that in view for yourself?—No.

23,889. Is there any other place you would like to mention?—Yes, there is another place on the farm of Brawl. I was just asked to take the names of the places I knew.

23,890. Is that between Brawl Castle and Skinnet?—Yes.

23,891. What extent of land is there?—I cannot say, but it is mostly grazings.

23,892. Under sheep, or under sheep and cattle?—Under sheep and cattle.

23,893. Have you names to give us?—Of tenants that I have seen there?

23,895. That land is now part of the farm of Brawl?—Of Brawl.

23,896. How far is that from the Castle?—Just surrounding it to the north and north west.

23,897. Is there any other land?—On the Calder estate, a lot of it.

23,898. What land is there on the Calder estate?—John Charleson, North Calder; Donald Bain, Musal; James Henderson, Togie; William Williamson, North Calder; George Campbell, North Calder; Alexander Campbell, Kirkal; John Bain, Hishal; George Sinclair, Framside; John Sinclair, Framside; Neil Sinclair, Framside; William Gunn, Framside; Donald Manson, Framside; Alexander Falconer, Framside; William Meiklejohn, Parish of Framside; John Keith, Framside; Widow William Manson, Framside; Andrew Miller, Achavern; William Macdonald, Achavern; Alexander Gunn, Calder; James Macbeath, Calder; John Bain, Calder; John Mitchell, America, Calder; Donald Taylor, America, Calder; Angus Macdonald, America, Calder; William Manson, Calder; and John Manson, Calder. All this land is now occupied by three farmers.

23,899. Who are the farmers?—In North Calder, Mr Innes; in Calder, Mr Daniel Elder, Thurso; and in West Calder, I forget the tenant's name.

23,900. All these lands form part of farms?—Yes, of these farms.

23,901. And are these enclosed lands?—Yes.

23,902. What are they being used for at present; sheep, or sheep and cattle?—Sheep and cattle, and cultivated.

23,903. Some of it is under rotation?—Oh, yes, a considerable part of it is under rotation.

23,904. More than half, would you say?—Perhaps it would be that.

23,905. A considerable portion at all events?—Yes.

23,906. Mr Sutherland.—Are you of opinion that that land could be profitably occupied by small tenants again?—Oh, decidedly, it could be; it would be a great boon to small tenants to get a stretch off the sides of these big farms.

22,907. Take the farm of Gerston; have you any idea of the size of it?—I think it is about 1000 acres within the ring fence, but I cannot exactly say.

23,908. But it includes the land of all these people you named that were removed from it?—Yes.

23,909. What is the total number that were before on the farm of Gerston?—Fourteen that I remember, and I am within the mark I believe.

23,910. Have these proceedings any connection with the feus in Halkirk? When did Halkirk begin to be feued?—It was feued long before I remember anything about it, but, of course, it increased as they were put out of the crofts, such as I did myself.

23,911. You are a case yourself, are you?—Yes.

23,912. What is the extent of the feus in Halkirk?—About an acre.

23,913. And what is the feu-duty?—From £1 to £2, 10s., and thereabout.

23,914. They vary, do they?—Those that I can speak for principally are those that I occupy myself at 35s.

23,915. They are not all the same price?—No.

23,916. Is it a perpetual feu you have?—Yes.

23,917. Are they all perpetual feus?—Yes, in the village of Halkirk.

23,918. What do you do with the remainder of the acre that you do not occupy as a house?—Grow corn or potatoes or turnips.

23,919. You farm it?—Decidedly.

23,920. What state was it in when you got it?—Part of the feus that I have got were arable; indeed, all the feus I have got were arable except one.

23,921. And occupied as a feu before you got it?—Yes.

23,922. It was an old feu that you got?—Yes.

23,923. Did any of them get new feus?—Yes.

23,924. Within your memory?—Yes.

23,925. And what sort of land did they get?—Some of it moss ground, some of it arable.

23,926. Was the moss ground growing heather?—Yes, heather and grass.

23,927. And they were put down there?—Yes, on the road side, it is what they call moss ground on the road side, but through it a bit there was arable land.

23,928. Do you know any feu that was all moss ground?—Oh, yes.

23,929. And what state is that land in now?—In cultivation.

23,930. Does it bear good crops?—Yes, when it is trenched and drained.

23,931. And did the feuars build their own houses?—Oh, yes.

23,932. Did they get assistance from any person at all?—Not for feus; I am not aware of any assistance.

23,933. Either in building houses or in reclaiming the land?—I am not aware of anything of that kind in feus.

23,934. I am talking of feus with an acre of land, for which they pay £1 to £2?—Yes, and some £2, 10s.

23,935. Did they build good houses?—Cottages generally; some of them good cottages.

23,936. Some are two-storeyed houses, are they not?—Yes.

23,937. With slated roofs and outhouses?—Yes, such as a byre and a barn.

23,938. And they rear good crops?—Some of them are very good that have been in cultivation some time and well done to.

23,939. And they did all that without any assistance from anybody?—Yes, those who took feus.

23,940. The Chairman.—Are you here as a delegate?—I was cited to come here.

23,941. But you were not appointed by a meeting to come here as a delegate?—I was appointed by some meeting, but I forget what meeting; I don't know what meeting it was, but I got notice to that effect.

23,942. When was the meeting held?—I cannot say that.

23,943. Mr Shaw Stewart.—May I ask who you got notice from?—I got notice from the Secretary. (Letter produced.)

23,944. Mr Sutherland.—All the facts you have spoken to are from your own personal knowledge?—Oh decidedly, there is not a house I have mentioned but I have been in it and seen it.

DONALD HENDERSON, Crofter, Geise (63)—examined.

23,945. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter or a farmer?—A crofter.

23,946. What rent do you pay?—£21.

23,947. Was your rent dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—No.

23,948. Have you a lease?—Yes.

23,949. For a term of years?—It will be completed in 1895.

23,950. Is it a nineteen years' lease?—No, eight years I think.

23,951. Have you any written statement?—Yes. On Sir Tollemache Sinclair's estate, on the north side of Halkirk village, are the two large farms of Brawl and Skinnet joined and occupied by a non-resident tenant. Bounding the road which goes through the centre on the one side and the river Thurso on the other, there are about 200 acres now a sheep run. It is excellent ground, and was formerly occupied by crofters, the sites of whose houses are still there. Altogether there are 15 tenants said to have been evicted out of this holding. Connected with the farm on the west there is a beautiful hill, an excellent slope to the east, very productive and fertile in appearance, and from the fact of rig marks being yet discernible, it is supposed to have been once reclaimed and occupied by crofters. It runs two miles long by ¾ mile broad, but this includes the parts belonging to the three adjoining farms of Aimster, Buckie, and How. The farm of Calder was already spoken to, so I do not mention it here.

23,952. You concur with the evidence given with regard to Calder?—I decline it, as it has been already touched by the previous witness.

23,953. But you concur with the evidence given with regard to Calder?—I heard the evidence, but, of course, the previous witness gave it.

23,954. The evidence that was given, with regard to Calder, is very much what you wish to give yourself, and accordingly you pass it over?—Most certainly, except that a vast deal of waste property was not described aright. There is something like 600 acres connected with the main farm of Calder and Framside that is reclaimable and has been previously occupied by crofters. From the march dyke separating Sir Tollemache's estate from Mr Guthrie's until Brims is reached is 5 miles in length, and from the Crown lands of Lythmore to Holbourn is 3 miles in breadth. The whole range, prior to 1815, was unreclaimed people's common or public property; two-thirds of it are now peopled, with about 35 holders paying an annual rent of £400. About the said date the Sinclairs of Forss and Ulbster with Threipland Stewart agreed to divide this common, which as far back as the memory of man could guide was public property. From the fact that when divided the small peace-offering of 10 acres was given to each of the Thurso citizens or householders, public feeling still thinks the present possessions have no charter claim, and on strict inquiry the whole range would again become public property. By mistake the present rental goes into the wrong pocket. However, that part, now waste, includes the hills of Forss and Lythmore. Lythmore has a park of about 200 acres where some crofts had been. It is partly heath and green. On the hill of Forss is about a square mile, containing productive earth resting on good-bearing clay soil. One good little farm is reclaimed from the side of this hill to the east. There are symptoms of crofts on other parts of the hill, but two in my own memory that lined the river of Forss called Brimside of 50 acres each are now a sheep run connected with the farm of Forss. There were about 15 tenants evicted from the farm of Scrabster whose lands were added to the main farm now in possession of Mr Miller. There is a hill-park of about 500 acres of as good-bearing clay as there is in Caithness, and in all respects capable of reclaiming. On Forss estate Holbourn has 300 acres heath and about 60 arable, nearly all in sheep run.

23,955. You mentioned 200 acres between Skinnet and Brawl?—Yes.

23,956. Is that part of the land that was referred to by one of the previous witnesses, William Taylor?—No, he made no mention of Skinnet at all.

23,957. These 200 acres are land that you think suitable for occupation?—Most suitable and fertile in appearance, and the sites of the crofters' houses are still there.

Thurso. — Donald Henderson.

23,958. Of how many houses are the remains visible there?—Of course, I could not accurately say; it does not stand to my memory now, although on the ground I could mention them.

23,959. We will see the ground when we go there. How is it presently occupied?—In my memory it was never cultivated; but it has been cultivated, and you have signs to that effect. It is now grown over with rush and whins to a great extent.

23,960. But it has not been cultivated in your recollection?—Never.

23,961. Then, what is it used for now?—Sheep run.

23,962. Sheep exclusively?—Yes.

23,963. No cattle?—I never saw cattle there.

23,964. Is it enclosed land?—Yes, it is enclosed; the river bounds it on the one side, and a dyke adjoining the county road on the other; I should think it is ¾ mile in length from the river to the dyke bounding the county road.

23,965. You heard the evidence given by Donaldson with regard to the difficulties attending the taking up and carrying on of a new holding. Do you agree with that evidence?—Certainly I do not, most that I have heard.

23,966. You do not agree with that?—As to Donaldson it does not stand in my mind exactly what his statement was, but I know one thing, that the Highlanders are more holden to the stock than the crop of their holdings. They had the hill of the heath, and that was mostly their support, and if they were still allowed to exist upon the holding they would exist as noble a race now as before. That is my opinion.

23,967. They trusted for their rents more to the stock they grew than to the land they tilled?—At all times in the periods backwards, and most certainly in the future as well, if the ground was allowed to be the people's property as of old; if they were just allowed to live on it.

23,968. Suppose a man got a new holding on land that had been cultivated many years ago, but had been grazing for a long time, how long would you expect him to have to till the land before he was able to do it to a profit?—I agree with Mr Donaldson's statement; seven years is the period.

23,969. Do you agree with his view in regard to steadings?—At the same time I cannot see that the land should bear any rent at all for that, because previously the land was given for nothing for the first three, and then the rent was raised a little, possibly a shilling an acre, on to seven, and then it was rented according to its value.

23,970. And would you repeat the process in the event of a man getting a holding on land that had been out of cultivation for many years?—Most certainly; a man without capital could not exist a day on any other terms.

23,971. Would he require assistance for the steading or the house?—All I have to say is that all these 30 crofters that occupied the commons in the centre of which I dwell myself have had £5 given for the building of a steading. The ground was wholly reclaimed out of the heath, without a single plack from the proprietor. The rest of the building was done and the ground was reclaimed by the crofter that was evicted from other places.

23,972. Would you expect a man who got a holding of that kind to put up the house and steading himself, or would you propose that he should receive assistance?—I could not look on it, but at the same time regarding it as gross injustice. The lairds, of course, dispossessed the people, put them out of their holdings that were built and out of the land with it, and I do say that it is but fair they should bear the expense of repeopling the land as they dispeopled it.

23,973. On that footing you think a man getting such a holding should have some assistance for the erection of his house and steading?—Either from Government or from the proprietor.

23,974. You referred to the crown lands of Lythmore?—Yes.

23,975. Are these lands now part of a farm?—Well, I must acknowledge that the main farm of Lythmore includes about a chain beyond the steading on the east side. There is a park attached to it, and I am not certain whether that belongs to the Crown, or whether they have it from some other proprietor. But I know that the park itself consists of something like 150 acres, and that there have been crofts there.

Thurso. — Donald Hender

23,976. Can you say what the extent of these Crown lands is altogether, how many acres?—In Lythmore I should think there are 600 acres, including the hill and the arable. The arable farm, of course, is kept in regular rotation.

23,977. And is all the Crown land under sheep now?—By no means.

23,978. How is it occupied?—It is wholly cultivated and kept in regular rotation by the tenant, except this park.

23,979. All under rotation except that park?—Yes.

23,980. Now you mentioned some lands on which crofters had at one time lived having been added to the farm of Scrabster?—Yes.

23,981. Did you say fifteen tenants had been there?—Yes.

23,982. What was the name of that bit of land afterwards added to Scrabster?—The burn goes under the name of Holburn, and the tenants lined each side of that burn; but, narrowly speaking, both go under the name of Scrabster.

23,983. When was that land added to Scrabster; was it before Mr Miller's time?—Oh, yes.

23,984. Was it added to Scrabster when the land formed Crown land?—Certainly it was; it was Crown land all along.

23,985. Now, that land that was added to Scrabster where the fifteen tenants were, was it Crown land?—Yes, certainly.

23,986. Do you remember it being added to Scrabster?—No, I remember one in particular of the tenants, but no more. But, of course, I have it from the tenants, and my father was there as a servant and as a small boy, and I have it from my father.

23,987. A servant to whom?—To one of the tenants that were on Scrabster; one of the fifteen.

23,988. One of the fifteen who were removed?—Yes.

23,989. And that land is now part of the farm?—It is a part of the farm of Scrabster.

23,990. Is it as grazing, or as land under rotation?—It is under rotation, regular rotation.

23,991. Mr Gordon.—As to this land Lythmore, which farm is it upon; is it on the farm of Lythmore?—Yes.

23,992. And is the land you speak about there under rotation the same as Scrabster?—It is all under rotation except the park I referred to.

23,993. Except the portion you referred to. And is it down by the waterside?—The main farm is; the arable ground of it lines the river.

23,994. But the land you refer to, is it between the farm and the water, or on the hill?—The water runs by the line of the farm; the water bounds the farm.

23,995. But is the land that was formerly small holdings on the hill of Lythmore, on the waterside?—It is on the east.

23,996. And is it now under arable land or under pasture?—The greater part of this park is heath, but there are some small green spots and sometimes crofters' sites there. But the people of the Highlands, as I say, are more holden for their support to the heath than to the crop.

23,997. It is more grazing land than arable, but there is part of it arable?—There is very little arable, except small spots connected with the sites of the crofters that were there; the rest is heath.

23,998. Is it occupied by crofters at present?—No.

23,999. There are no crofters within it?—I am not aware that there are any.

24,000. This land of Brawl and Skinnet that you told us about; is any part of the land that you spoke about, from which people were evicted, part of the arable lands of Brawl and Skinnet?—No, what I have referred to is not.

Thurso. Donald Henderson.

24,001. Is it all on the hill?—It is all in beautiful green.

24,002. On the hill?—Not on the hill; it is from the county road down to the river.

24,003. Have you a farm on Geise yourself?—Yes.

24,004. How many acres has it?—I have not a correct measurement, but I should think about 40 acres of arable.

24,005. And your rent is £21?—£21, and there are about 20 acres of pasture.

24,006. Is that the only farm you have?—It is the only farm I have.

24,007. You are not tenant of any other place?—No.

24,008. And you would like your farm enlarged?—Yes.

24,009. Mr Sutherland.—Are you here advocating your own cause, or are you for the public?—By no means; I took a lively interest in the public all through.

24,010. I wish to ask you a question with regard to the common. You spoke of a common?—Yes.

24,011. Where was that common?—I dwell in the centre of it.

24,012. Where your farm is now was at one time a common?—Yes.

24,013. Is it a large common?—Certainly; it was 15 square miles; it was 5 in length and 3 in breadth.

24,014. Now, let me understand the nature of the common. To what did the common rights extend at that time?—It was regarded as public property by every one, and no man interfered with their claim to it; and it was so as far back as the memory of man can guide us. The public feeling is that indeed there is no charter claim to it, but they grasped it without a claim at all.

24,015. Who did?—The proprietors.

24,016. That is to say, the neighbouring proprietors got the land divided among them?—Exactly so.

24,017. And what became of the class who were on the common?—They gave a small parchment to every householder in Thurso who were regarded as citizens.

24,018. That was a recognition, was it, of the public right in the common?—Exactly so, as you throw a bone to a dog that he may not bite you.

24,019. But what became of the commoners who lived on the common?—The commoners meant the whole people. The fact is this that Thurso takes its name from that; it is presently called Newton, one half Thurso, but then it was called Bourag town from the fact that it was there that the people took all their fuel.

24,020. Was the common occupied in any way?—It was occupied in every respect as a public right.

24,021. Did any person live on the common?—Not any.

24,022. But they had certain rights of which they were deprived?—It was regarded as commons that they grazed on. There was a centre place called Waas; this took its name from the people who had taken their fuel and other things from the hill having a house there where they put in the harness of the horse and the oxen, and the name as then known was the colour which was on the horses or the oxen.

24,023. What share did the participators in the common get when it was divided?—Every one that could call himself a citizen, of public right, got a patch of about 10 acres.

24,024. Were there many of those?—There are some dozen or so still.

24,025. Do they hold these patches still?—Yes, their heirs do.

24,026. And what became of the remainder of the land?—The remainder of the land is in the hands of Sinclair of Forss, and of Ulbster and Threipland, and it is under land rent. The crofters cultivate it to the extent of 30, paying about £400 of rent annually. They cultivated the ground wholly themselves without any assistance from the proprietor except that they had got £5 for the building of the steading.

24,027. You spoke also of Crown property; where is the Crown property?—The Crown property consists of Lythmore, at the river of Forss, and then Scrabster here.

24,028. Do you know how it came to be Crown property? What are the circumstances that led to it? Is it part of the Bishop of Caithness's lands do you know?—It became the Crown's from the fact of the war that there was between King George and Prince Charles; as many as supported Prince Charles in the rebellion lost their rights to property.

Thurso. Donald Henderson.

24,029. They were forfeited lands?—Exactly so.

24,030. Now you stated that some tenants were evicted from land that is now on the Scrabster farm?—Yes.

24,031. Was it the Crown that evicted them?—It was certainly the Crown's factor.

24,032. Who was the local Crown agent at that time?—There were different people.

24,033. But at the time the evictions were carried out?—I believe the present Magistrate's father, Mr Donald Mackay, had been factor for some time.

24,034. These people were evicted from the Crown property, and the land was added to the farm of Scrabster?—Yes.

24,035. What was the date of the transaction?—I am not very certain about the date, but I believe it was between the year 1815 and the year 1828.

24,036. You yourself, you said, got a farm upon this common that was divided?—Yes, at least, my father got it.

24,037. And was there any of the land broken in when your father went there?—Half an acre.

24,038. And you overcame the steading difficulty by a grant of £5, did you?—We cultivated it wholly ourselves.

24,039. On an advance of £5?—An advance of £5.

24,040. I would take it, therefore, that you do not share the apprehensions of Mr Donaldson, that there would be such great difficulties as to buildings?—I certainly do not; I am more of a practical farmer than he is. He can give a description of what the state and position of a servant is, but I can give that better of a crofter.

24,041. And were all the steadings upon the small holdings in Caithness built in that way?—I say it is quite practicable and quite profitable that the people could be returned to the land, and that the crofters who now people the vast Colonies in the British dominion would again exist upon the lands of Caithness, Sutherlandshire, and Ross-shire.

24,042. I presume that you would have liked to see such great solicitude and care on behalf of the new tenant when these evictions were carried out?—I would have the evictors all driven to America and the evicted brought back.

24,043. But, with regard to the solicitude that they may not undertake unprofitable bargains, you would have liked to see some solicitude at that time as well as now?—Oh, yes.

24,044. But you never heard at that time of any difficulties being started as to farm steadings when the people were put on the bare land?—No.

24,045. And yet they overcame all the difficulties, did not they?—Yes.

24,046. Did they overcome all the difficulties in their way in building steadings?—My motto is this—

24,047. But were these difficulties overcome? Did the tenants erect their steadings themselves, notwithstanding these difficulties at that time?—I regard it as gross injustice that they should be compelled to erect it themselves.

24,048. But they did erect them?—They did.

24,049. My question was, they did overcome these difficulties in the way of completing these steadings themselves without help?—In the past they did, and I see no reason why they should not in the future. There is something else that I add; give the land to the people, and the quarrel with all parties is at an end.

24,050. Do you know anything about Dorrery?—Yes, I know about Caithness in general.

24,051. How is Dorrery Crown land, do you know?—Upon the same principle as Scrabster and Lythmore.

24,052. Forfeited lands?—Yes, and Calder was Crown land too.

24,053. How is the Dorrery Crown land occupied at present?—Wholly as sheep run.

Thurso. Donald Henderson.

24,054. Was it always so occupied, do you know?—Most certainly not; there is as fertile ground there as in Caithness.

24,055. Was it ever peopled since it became Crown property?—It was.

24,056. And were there evictions carried out on the Crown property there?—I am not very certain.

24,057. You are not so very well acquainted with Dorrery?—I am acquainted with it, and I see an excellent farm there, waste to an inch.

24,058. And are you of opinion that it would be a good place for putting people on?—Certainly, it is just the place which would suit the Highlander.

24,059. Would you advise us to go and look at it?—Most certainly I would; Broubster also, and Shurrery.

24,060. The Chairman.—What is the extent of land at Dorrery that you have been describing?—I should think it is upwards of 300 acres.

24,061. But it has been a long time out of cultivation?—As far back as my memory goes.

24,062. Mr Peter Keith, Agent for Sir Tollemache Sinclair.—You mentioned, I think, that the proprietor usually gives about £5 to the tenants to assist in the erection of their house and steadings? [Mr Sutherland.—Oh, no, he said that in certain defined cases that was done]. Are you aware that it is the general rule on the Ulbster estates to give a sum of money to tenants who erect their own houses to start with?—I am not aware of that.

24,063. And what cases had you in view when you mentioned this sum of £5?—I had it in view that I had the reports from the occupiers almost to a man.

24,064. Almost to a man?—Yes.

24,065. So that the rule is general, of a contribution in money?—It is £5 that they get from the proprietor, and they meet all the extra expenses themselves.

24,066. There was a steading erected, I think you said, by your father, a house and steading on your own farm. What became of that house and steading?—I made no mention of such a thing.

24,067. Was there not a house?—There was no house built by my father. There is presently a house upon it, but upon a different principle altogether.

24,068. Well, will you explain in what way the house and steading presently on your farm were erected?—The proprietor gave so much.

24,069. What did the proprietor give in your case?—But this is a different thing.

24,070. Oh, no.—It certainly is; this is a new arrangement with the proprietor.

24,071. In your own case, what assistance did the proprietor give towards the erection of a house and steading on your own farm? (No answer.)

24,072. The Chairman.—What is your answer to that?—You see up to, I would suppose, 1863 it was the old system; the houses were built upon the old condition, but after that Sir Tollemache changed, and he erected other buildings. The first building was simply two rooms and a closet, of something like 33 feet in length and about 18 feet in breadth; and the next was nothing short of 40 feet in length and 16 in breadth.

24,073. Mr Keith.—Is that your dwelling-house?—The present dwelling-house. Of course, the proprietor pays for the wood, and the tenant pays for the workmanship of the wood. The price of the wood of my buildings, i.e., the house, cost something like £28, and the price of workmanship of the same wooding cost me about £17. The proprietor also provided slate and flooring. I had myself to provide the stones by quarrying or paying for quarrying; 'drivage' and paying for the building. So that, as a rule, on every building for every shilling the proprietor puts out, the tenant puts out another; that is the last rule. It costs the tenants equally as much as the proprietor.

24,074. Does that apply also to your offices as well as the house?—They are built upon the same principle.

24,075. Did the proprietor provide you with lime, slates, and flooring?—Yes.

24,076. And with the wood?—Yes.

24,077. And what money contribution did you get for the house and steading?—I could estimate at leisure; but the thing was not with me at all, it was with the contractor that the proprietor dealt. It was Mr Durie that was paid.

Thurso. Donald Henderson.

24,078. The Chairman.—Can you estimate to us how much it would be?—I should reckon it would be about £45.

24,079. Of cash?—Yes, of cash to the proprietor.

24,080. Mr Keith.—Is it the case that the proprietor paid the joiner work?—Yes, that is for the main house, and the office house would cost something about the same amount.

24,081. Then, the proprietor in addition to giving the slates, lime, and flooring free of charge, and providing the wood, also paid for the whole joiner work?—He did not.

24,082. Did not you say that he paid Mr Durie?—Only for the workmanship.

24,083. For the wood?—For the wood.

24,084. What was the £45 given for?—£45 was given for the wood, that is £28, and the price of the slates, the flooring, and every other thing that the proprietor gave.

24,085. Are you aware that it is the custom on the estate in all cases for the proprietor to provide slates and lime, and flooring and timber free of charge to the tenant?—Yes, I am aware of that.

24,086. That is the custom on the Ulbster estates?—That is the custom of the estate presently, but it was not so previously. What I speak of is the time of eviction; there is a change now, a stir. We brought to a great extent the proprietors to their senses. This roaring of the Highland lion for his Highland deus struck terror to their hearts, so that there was a change for the better, in regard to allowing the rent on other terms that our forefathers knew little or nothing about.

24,087. The Chairman.—Your father put up the house that was erected on the ground at his own expense?—No, my father was suffered as a rack-rented person to live in the old house, and it was I who built the new one.

24,088. What I wanted to ask was, did your father erect the house that was first put up at his own cost?—Certainly; but that was not one of these houses that he got £5 for.

24,089. Mr Keith.—How long has this custom that you speak of on the part of the proprietor obtained on the Ulbster estates,—how long is it since the proprietor has been in the habit of contributing to the cost of erection of dwelling-houses in the way you spoke to?—I should think, if I am correct, about the year 1863.

24,090. You gave us information with regard to this commonty. You are aware, I suppose, that the commonty was divided under decree of the Court of Session?—I am not aware of that. If that is the case, most certainly inquiry should find a charter claim to it.

24,091. You recently got another croft in addition to the one which you held formerly?—My principle was that a man ought to have as much land as would meet his existence, and that 14 acres of ordinary land is not. [The Chairman.—Did you get another croft, that is the question?]—I did, but the two put together only consist of about 40 acres, which is just sufficient to give work to a man and a pair of ponies.

24,092. In what year did you get this additional croft?—The year 1887, I think.

24,093. And on this additional croft there was a house also?—Yes.

24,094. You spoke of the farm of Brawl; is not that farm an arable or agricultural farm?—Partly arable and partly agricultural.

24,095. And Skinnet is the same if the pasture or common grazing were taken from either of those farms, is it possible to cultivate the remainder to profit? Can the remainder of the arable ground be cultivated to profit without the pasture?—Most certainly, and in particular to a non-resident tenant who has a number of other farms as well.

24,096. What do you mean by that?—I mean that the man does not keep this farm at all for his subsistence or the raising of grain. I say that the farm of Skinnet could be cultivated to profit by any tenant that was confined to it, although the whole of the 200 acres that I speak of, and the hill ground of nearly 2 miles, were taken from it and given to the crofters.

24,097. Are you aware that the farm of Skinnet just now is occupied by a tenant, and that it is his only farm?—The tenant that presently occupies it is a representative of George Waters, Tister, who is non-resident, and who has a number of other farms in Caithness besides.

24,098. You don't know that; you see you are wrong there. [The Chairman.—That is his statement]. There is a separate tenant for each farm.

24,099. Mr Sutherland.—What is his name?

24,100. Mr Keith.—Mr James Clyne. [To Witness]. Are you aware that there is a separate tenant who occupies the farm of Brawl?—It is the same tenant that occupies the farm of Brawl.

24,101. Mr Sutherland.—With regard to the second croft you got, you did not take it of your own accord, did you?—Most certainly not. The tenant that then occupied it, although there were other differences between the two neighbours, came to me and said 'The 'place does not pay, and I am really miserable in it; and' he says, 'I am under lease, and the Agricultural Holdings Act binds me to give a twelve-month's warning. 'Now there is a farm in my view that is now vacant; if I 'should get that farm, will you oblige me by taking my 'farm off my hand? 'Go on' I says 'Kenneth, I don't 'want your farm, but if you should get that to better your 'state I certainly will take it off your hand.' I never interfered with the man or his farm till I saw him go and take the other farm, and according to promise I took his. I argued that I did not give a two-penny piece for the farm, but that I was contending for the interest of the people myself, and that as the Government Commission inquiring into the grievance of the crofters held that the smallness of the holding was their grievance, I reckoned that the two holdings put together were only sufficient to support one family, and I would give the additional rent of £15 for the place.

24,102. And then the landlord consented?—The landlord consented.

24,103. He could have kept it from you if he had liked?—And if he was to secure me half a crown of a profit more on any other place, I would give it to him to-morrow.

orge Logan.

24,104. The Chairman.—You are factor on the Ulbster estates?—Yes.

24,105. How long have you been factor on the property?—For thirty-three years.

24,106. I understand you wish to submit a written statement?—Yes.

24,107. Please read it.

STATEMENT by Mr George Logan, Factor and Commissioner for Sir J. G. Tollemache Sinclair of Ulbster, Bart., with reference to the grazing farms of Rumsdale, and others, in the Strathmore district of the Ulbster estates, and with reference to the estates, generally, in the parishes of Halkirk and Thurso, and county of Caithness.

As some of the Royal Commissioners, a few days ago, visited the Strathmore district of the Ulbster estates belonging to Sir Tollemache Sinclair of Ulbster, and as Sir Tollemache is desirous to afford the Commissioners every possible facility to enable them to prosecute their inquiries in connection with that portion of his estates, and also to furnish them with the fullest particulars respecting the general management of the Ulbster estates, I have been authorised by him to draw up for your information the following brief history of the property and its management up to the present time, and with that view I now beg to submit the following statement:—

1. Rumsdale. Sir Tollemache purchased from Mr Horne, in 1863, the grazing farm of Rumsdale, extending to 10,378 acres 1 rood 25 poles or thereby, the grazings of which were then let on lease to William and John Grant at a yearly rent of £290

To which was added in 1863, part of the adjoining farm of Dalganachan at a yearly rent of 30

It is now let to Mr James Macbeath for £130, being at the rate of 3d. per acre.

2. Glutt. Sir Tollemache also purchased from Mr Horne at the same time the adjoining property of Glutt extending to 6766 acres 2 roods 9 poles or thereby, the yearly rent of which as then let to Mr James Elder was . £140

When Mr Elder removed from Glutt in 1870 it was then let to Mr John Grant on lease for fourteen years, from Whitsunday 1870, at a yearly rent of £232, which Mr Grant continued to pay till 1886 . . . . . .

From 1886 to 1890 Mr Grant's rent was . £100

In 1892 Mr Williams, the lessee of the Glutt shootings, became lessee of the grazing at a yearly rent of 100

The purchase price which Sir Tollemache paid to Mr Horne for the properties of Rumsdale and Glutt in 1863 was . . £16,500

3. Dalnaglaton and Dalnawillan. In 1862 Sir Tollemache acquired from Sir George Dunbar of Hempriggs, by means of excambion for the estate of Tannach, in the parish of Wick, the properties of Dalnaglaton and Dalnawillan (both situated in the Strathmore district adjoining Rumsdale and Glutt). Dalnaglaton extends to 4839 acres 0 roods 38 poles or thereby, and Messrs. D. & R. Elder, who were the first tenants of these grazings under Sir Tollemache, paid a yearly rent, from 1862 till Whitsunday 1883, of £261

From 1883 till 1887 Robert Elder paid . 206
From 1887 till 1891 Robert Elder paid . 186
From 1891 till now it has been let to Messrs. Mackidd & Logan, the present tenants, at . 155

Dalnawillan extends to 3490 acres 1 rood 2 poles, and Mr Donald Macpherson (who was the first tenant of these grazings under Sir Tollemache), paid a yearly rent therefor, from 1862 till 1870, of £218

To which were added the grazings of Lower Dalganachan at a yearly rent of . . . 45

Together £263

D. and R. Elder paid from 1870 till 1884 . £280
Daniel Elder paid from 1884 till 1888 . . 200
Daniel Elder paid from 1891 till now . . 155

Note. Dalnaglaton and Dalnawillan having been acquired by means of excambion for the property of Tannach, no exact purchase price was fixed; but their estimated value was £17,750 (including a mortgage of £2000, of which Sir Tollemache agreed to relieve Sir George Dunbar, the former proprietor.)

4. Achalibster. Sir Tollemache purchased the small property of Achalibster at Lower Strathmore from Mr Smith of Olrig in 1864. The extent of that property is 2139 acres 2 roods 25 poles, and the purchase price was £5500. Messrs. J. & D. Munro, who were the first and only tenants on the property since Sir Tollemache became proprietor, paid from 1864 till 1878 a yearly rent of £205

Add interest on improvements made by Sir Tollemache 10

Together £215

From 1878 till the present time the yearly rent has been £250

5. Dalemore and Dirlet, Dalnaha, Knockdhu, Dalacher, Achscoriclute, and Lower Strathmore, extending together to 15,461 acres or thereby, are old family properties, and have been let since the year 1865 to Messrs. Clyne, the present tenants.

From 1865 till 1884 the aggregate rent was . £667

Dalemore, Knockdhu, and Dalacher are now let to Mr John Clyne at a yearly rent of . . £130

Dirlet, Dalnaha, Achscoriclute, and Lower Strathmore are now let to Messrs. H. Clyne and Sons at a yearly rent 370

Together £500

6. Backless and Benalisky, extending together to 5598 acres or thereby, are also old family properties, and the grazings have been let as undernoted:—

To Mr Donald Mackay from 1866 till 1880 at a yearly rent of 200

To Messrs. J. & D. Munro from 1880 till now 150

7. Leosag, extending to 104 acres 3 roods, also an old family property, immediately adjoining Achalibster, has hitherto been let as under.

To John Sinclair from 1855 at a yearly rent of £35

To Donald Sinclair (John's son) from 1873 at a yearly rent of 60

To Donald Sinclair (John's son) from 1885 at a yearly rent of 50

To Donald Macadie (brother-in-law) from 1886 at a yearly rent of 50

To Donald Macadie's representatives, still occupying 50

8. The shootings over the foregoing properties are let at the undernoted rents:—

1. Rumsdale Shootings, ...		£500
Less for keeper's wages, rates and taxes, interest on furniture, &c., . . .		200
Net		£300
2. Glutt shooting and grazing, .	£900
Less wages, taxes, &c., . .	270
	£ s.
3. Dalnawillan, ...	785 6
		580
4. Lower Strathmore, . . .	£1200
Less wages, taxes, &c., . .	240

The boundaries of the shootings are somewhat different from those of the grazings, but the foregoing statement correctly indicates the rents both of the grazings and shootings of these properties.

Since I became factor for Sir Tollemache Sinclair, about thirty-three years ago, I find that Sir Tollemache has expended £75,590, 1s. 7d. in general improvements on the Ulbster estates. Of this sum £45,337, 16s. 3d. has been expended on farms and crofts, chiefly in drainage, fencing, housebuilding, &c., whilst £30,252, 5s. 4d. has been expended in other general improvements under my own superintendence.

Sir Tollemache has also made 30½ miles of roads on the estates in Caithness—extending from his property in Harpsdale to Westerdale, 2½ miles; from Westerdale to Strathmore, 6 miles; from Strathmore to Dalnawillan, 7 miles; from Dalnawillan to Glutt, 4 miles; from Glutt to Braemore, 7 miles; and from Dalnawillan to the railway station at Altnabreac, 4 miles—the expense of making these roads and constructing the bridges being about £3600. Thurso. George Logan.

Sir Tollemache likewise gave to the Highland Railway Company, free of charge, the whole land required for their line, so far as it passes through his estates, extending from the town of Thurso to the top of Strathmore, where it joins the county of Sutherland—being a distance of about 15 miles, including 10 miles of arable ground, and 4 acres of feuing ground—the value of the land required for that portion of the line being estimated at from £6000 to £7000, including loss on Sir Tollemache's railway shares.

In respect of the depressed state of agriculture, during the past ten years, Sir Tollemache has also voluntarily granted abatements of rent to the tenants and crofters on his estates to the amount of £4044, 11s. 7d., being equal to about £400 a year, of which the crofters or small tenants have received abatements at the rate of 20 per cent., on an average, during the last ten years. Previous to that time abatements were not much required, as agriculture was in a flourishing condition. Sir Tollemache has further paid donations and subscriptions in Caithness, since Sir George Sinclair died in 1868, to the amount of £13,811, 3s. 11d., including his contribution to the Highland Railway and proposed Thurso harbour, being upwards of £550 per annum in each of these years. Sir Tollemache assumed the management of the Ulbster estates in 1849, and they were conveyed to him in 1854 by his father, the late Sir George Sinclair; and the following is a statement of the total expenditure made on the estates by Sir Tollemache from 1849 to 1893, including the £75,590 expended in my own time, as already noted.

Expenditure on the Ulbster estates from Martinmas 1849, when Sir Tollemache undertook the management of the estates, until Lammas 1893:—

1. General expenditure, . . .	123,257	0	10
2. Tenants' and farm servants' houses now being contracted for, .	1,200	0	0
3. Abatements to tenants since 1882 (equal to about £400 a year), .	4,044	11	7
4. Donations since Sir G. Sinclair's death in October 1868 (being upwards of £550 a year), .	13,811	3	11
Total expenditure on improvements &c., from 1849 to 1893, . .	142,312	16	4
(Being about £3200 a year.)
Deduct expenditure on Thurso Castle, shooting lodges, &c., . .	41,000	8	1
Net expenditure on estate, excluding Thurso Castle and lodges, .	£101,312	8	3

Or about £2400 per annum, being equal to about 25 per cent. of the net average rental of the estate for the last forty-four years.

I have thought it right to mention these facts to show that liberal and enterprising landlords are a blessing and a benefit to the district in which their properties are situated, inasmuch as they give an immense amount of employment to the working classes generally, and consequently set in circulation large sums of money which greatly tend to benefit all classes of the community.

The land rental of Sir Tollemache Sinclair, exclusive of shootings, quarries, feu-duty, &c., is £9216, 4s. 3d., while the total rental, as per valuation roll for 1892-93, is £14,461, 17s., the difference consisting of the shootings and quarries, &c.

I feel it now to be my duty to state, after my lengthened experience in connection with the Ulbster estates, and from my knowledge of the climate and whole circumstances connected with the grazing farms in the Strathmore district of the estates, that I am clearly and decidedly of opinion that, while some of the lower parts of Strathmore, in the neighbourhood of Westerdale, are capable of bearing corn crops, those on the heights, such as Glutt, Rumsdale, Dalnawillan, Dalnagleton, and Dalnaha, are not at all suitable for the class of tenants or crofters proposed to be dealt with by the Commission, because, in the first place, the hill pasture and heather in those parts (with the exception of a few small detached spots) are not capable of being converted into good arable land, and that even if they were, the crops would seldom reach maturity or ripen in time; and in the next place, even if it were otherwise, the enormous expenses that it would take to drain, trench, and reclaim the land, and to build suitable dwelling-houses, farm-steadings, &c., would render the enterprise a complete failure—so much so that in the event of the Government voting funds to meet the expense, it would be utterly impossible for the tenants to repay either principal or interest; and as to payment of a fair yearly rent to the proprietor, that would be quite out of the question; because, however willing the tenants might be to pay a fair rent, they would be altogether unable to do so. Besides the enormous expense of buildings, fences, drains, and roads, &c. (say £400 for each holding), I feel certain there would be little or no demand for such unpromising and unremunerative holdings. And I am confirmed in this belief by the fact that so recently as September 1885, by direction of Sir Tollemache Sinclair, the proprietor, I advertised in the local newspapers the large grazing farm of Rumsdale, in the parish of Halkirk (including Glenmore and Glendhu), extending together to 11,937 acres or thereby, to be let either as a co-operative club farm for the accommodation and convenience of small farmers, crofters, or others who might desire to possess such land, or to be let in such other manner as might best suit intending offerers (all the sheep stock, if desired, to be handed over by the proprietor at valuation, or otherwise as might be arranged); and although that advertisement appeared in the local papers, week after week, not so much as a single offer was received, nor did any one even make the slightest inquiry on the subject. During the same year—1885—Sir Tollemache advertised in the local newspapers the following arable farms in the parish of Thurso, to be let either to crofters or as a co-operative club farm, or in such other manner as might best suit intending offerers, viz. :—

(1.) Glengolly—total extent, 248 acres; arable, 234 acres; pasture, 14 acres; (2.) Bleachfield—total extent, 88 acres; arable, 80 acres; pasture, 8 acres; (3.) Geiselittle—total extent, 366 acres; arable, 256 acres; pasture, 110 acres. But not one single offer was received for either of these farms, excepting for a small portion of Bleachfield, and it was subsequently arranged to allow the tenants who then occupied them to continue in possession. Again, in October 1885, Sir Tollemache advertised from 50 to 100 allotments or feus, to be laid off in the immediate vicinity of Thurso, in small lots to suit tradesmen and others who might wish to possess a bit of accommodation land. But he only received one offer for an allotment of one acre, and an offer for a feu of half-an-acre.

I may here remark that, on the appointment of the Crofters Commission, 1886, with your honourable President as Chairman, I intimated to forty-five crofters on the Ulbster estates that Sir Tollemache would make them all heartily welcome to lodge applications with the Crofters Commission for the purpose of having their rents adjusted by the Commissioners. But of these forty-five only nine availed themselves of the opportunity of doing so, thus showing that they had the most perfect confidence in the kindness and liberality of their landlord; and, as a proof that the crofters' rents on the Ulbster estates were comparatively moderate, they were only reduced by the Crofter Commissioners on the average to the extent of about 19 per cent., the rents of one or two of the nine applicants not being reduced at all. We frequently hear in these days of what are termed the "good old times," but those who thus speak apparently do not really know the actual circumstances. Whilst we would all sincerely wish to see the crofters, small tenants, and large tenants prospering alike, it is best that the whole truth should be known, and as a clear and convincing proof of the pecuniary difficulties in which the smaller tenants constantly were who occupied small holdings in the "olden times," I append hereto several excerpts from the minute books of the Ulbster trustees in the time of the Right Hon. Sir John Sinclair (Sir Tollemache's grandfather), extending from the year 1816 to 1833 with reference to small tenants in Lower Strathmore, and which are in the following terms :—

Thurso. George Logan.

Excerpts from minute book of Ulbster trustees from 1815 to 1833 :—

8th March 1816.—Mr John Henderson, factor, reports:—"If the same low prices for victuals and cattle 'continue for another year, one-half of the tenantry 'must quit and go to ruin."

16th March 1817.—As to the Strathmore Highland tenants, "the factor will hypothecate their crop and 'stocking for the proprietor's security, but he will not 'follow out the measure by sale or otherwise."

20th February 1818.—"The factor stated that the 'Highland tenants had sent him notice that, if they 'were not supplied with seed corn, they could not lay 'down their crops this season."

5th March 1819.—"Abatement of rent given to 'Highland tenants."

4th February 1830.—"Another abatement of rent 'to Highland tenants."

28th April 1830.—"The Strathmore tenants must 'fail unless a reduction of rent is given them beyond 'previous reductions for the flood—their October crops 'were so much injured by early frosts that it would not 'be safe to use them for seed. They have, likewise, 'been very unlucky in their cattle for two years, great 'numbers having died, which, added to the low prices, 'is ruinous to them."

6th January 1831.—"As to the Strathmore tenants, 'unless a very material improvement took place in the 'price of black cattle they could not possibly pay. John 'Macdonald, tenant of Achscoraclet, was last year 'obliged to purchase seed and meal for his family; while 'the whole sales he made were a very few young cattle, 'to the extent of about one-third of the rent. The 'losses of the smaller tenants may be safely taken to be 'greater, because Macdonald, generally, had it in his 'power to do more justice to his cattle in their keep 'than these smaller tenants."

3d February 1832.—There was laid before the Trustees a letter from the tenants of Backlass, Bualmore, and Ishnamalt, giving up their farms unless they got an abatement of one-third of their rent. "The 'Ulbster Trustees gave abatements for 1830-31 and '1832, in addition to the abatement for 1829." In 1832 "the Trustees received settlers in Harpsdale, and 'several new lots were let, and many settlers were 'received in the Ulbster estates in Latheron and Wick."

19th February 1833.—"Read a letter from Mac-'donald, Achscoraclet. He asks an abatement of 10 'per cent. for three years."

I may just add that none of these tenants paid high rents, I understand, and none of them had to pay interest in addition to the rent, such as crofters or small tenants would now have to do in the event of new houses, and new steadings requiring to be erected for their accommodation in conformity with the present sanitary requirements; and I submit that if they could not pay the small rents that were fixed in those days, they could very ill afford to pay now, in addition to their rents, interest to the Government on any money that might be lent them for the purpose of making improvements on their little holdings. I have duly certified the excerpts which I have now read; and I shall be happy to supply any further information that may be calculated to facilitate the object which the Commissioners have been appointed to report upon, provided there are any other points on which I can give reliable information. (Signed) GEO. LOGAN.

Ulbster Estates Office, Thurso, September 1893.

24,108. You mentioned an expenditure of £45,337, 16s. 3d. on farms and crofts?—Yes.

24,109. Does your information enable you to say how much of that was expended on crofts?—£15,337, on crofts.

24,110. During the whole period?—During the whole period; at least during my own time, since 1860.

24,111. What was that expenditure upon mainly?—Partly in draining, partly in house-building, and partly in enclosing; in short, general improvements upon their small crofts.

24,112. Was that expenditure made generally upon application by the crofters, or in the course of estate management?—Generally on application by the crofters.

24,113. And were these applications by the crofters acceded to either in whole or in part?—Sir Tollemache was always considered a very liberal landlord, and to my knowledge he was so; and he was always willing to meet his tenants or crofters in a liberal spirit; we could not comply with all requests.

24,114. The applications generally met with favourable consideration?—Favourable consideration.

24,115. You mentioned the matter of employment on the estate. Has the proprietor, in your time, been in the habit of giving a good deal of employment to crofters on the estate?—Yes, the crofters have got a very considerable amount of employment, between carting and other work.

24,116. Estate employment and labour?—Estate employment chiefly. And they work at other employment besides, I mean those in the neighbourhood of the towns who can get work at the quarries and other places of that kind.

24,117. Are there quarries upon your estate?—Sir Tollemache has only two quarries now; he used to have half a dozen, but four are exhausted. There are still two working, and there are workmen employed at both.

24,118. Are these workmen tenants of his own?—The lease to the Flagstone Quarrying Company binds them to employ the tenants on the Ulbster estates in preference to others.

24,119. And is the obligation carried out?—It is a fact that to a great extent the tenants on the Ulbster estates find employment there.

24,120. You mentioned particularly the lower parts of Strathmore, as in your judgment, a locality of land that might be for our consideration?—It might be; only I may explain that the grazing in the immediate neighbourhood of each of these farms, Dalemore and Achalibster (for these are really the two farms where there is arable land) is required to enable the tenants to work their farms.

24,121. So that you make the observation subject to that comment upon it?—Quite so.

24,122. But what extent of land in the lower parts of Strathmore is there of the kind you mention? How many acres, roughly speaking?—Including pasture and arable land, there are in Achalibster about 5000 acres.*

24,123. And do you say that there are 5000 acres, subject to the observations you have made, suitable for our consideration?—I could scarcely say that. It is only the arable land that would be worthy of your consideration, because the pasture is really so poor that it would not pay the expense of improving.

24,124. When you say arable, do you mean old arable or land under rotation?—I mean land under rotation. It is all under rotation that ever was under rotation so far as I know. I should say there are about 200 acres of arable upon the farm of Achalibster.

24,125. When you say land under rotation, do you mean land under rotation now, or land formerly under rotation, but at present under grass?—I think that all that was ever under rotation is under rotation at this moment.

24,126. Either a long or a short rotation?—The usual rotation: it is generally five shifts.

24,127. Is all the land that you say would be suitable for our consideration under a five shift rotation?—It is under a five shift rotation, and it is under lease at this moment.

24,128. But is it your view that besides that land there are other lands in the lower parts of Strathmore not under rotation which would be suitable for our consideration?—No, I don't think there is almost any. There might be small detached spots here and there, as I have said, but no spots where a tenant could be satisfactorily placed with the view of making a living and a profit.

* Mr Logan has since stated the area at 2139 acres.

Thurso. George Logan.

24,129. You said, I think, that sometime ago you advertised Rumsdale?—Yes.

24,130. And the proprietor indicated a willingness to subdivide the land and assign holdings for crofters?—Sir Tollemache heard it reported in public that there was a great hunger for land; and Sir Tollemache, who is always very enterprising in these matters, said to me 'Now as Rumsdale is out of lease' (from the fact of Mr Grant leaving it) 'you might advertise that to give the people a chance.' I advertised the whole of Rumsdale, with two of the best spots in the district called Glenmore and Glendhu extending altogether to 11,000 acres or thereby, and although that advertisement continued to appear in the papers from week to week, there was not one single inquiry for it.

24,131. Did the advertisement specify the willingness of the landlord to subdivide?—It expressed the willingness of the landlord to let it either as a co-operative club farm or in small lots to suit intending offerers.

24,132. In fact the land to be cut off?—The land to be apportioned as indicated in the advertisement.

24,133. And lotted out?—And lotted out.

24,134. Is it land that would have been suitable for that purpose?—I don't think it would; there may be a few detached spots that might be converted at no very great expense into arable ground, but it would be so small that really there would not be any encouragement to anybody to place himself there.

24,135. Well, I am not surprised at your answer, because I understood you to say in your statement that Rumsdale was not suitable?—I am convinced that it is not suitable, but the people were saying that it was suitable, and Sir Tollemache wished to give them a chance of putting it into practice.

24,136. You don't think then that a crofter who had practical knowledge of land would have been well advised to venture upon such a holding?—Certainly not, because at the present moment, as I stated here, it is let at the rate of 3d. an acre all over, and I should think a place worth only 3d. an acre could not be converted into a profitable farm for a croft.

24,137. Then, do I understand you to mean that that farm was advertised less because you thought it suitable than because there was an apparent demand for holdings?—That is so. I never thought it suitable, but the outcry was for land at that time, and Sir Tollemache said 'There is a place that they have referred to as likely to be suitable; advertise it.'

24,138. Had it been so referred to?—Yes, it was referred to in the public,—it was at the time the agitation was beginning to get up; certain agitators were coming forward, and they said 'Oh, there are lots of land in many places', and Strathmore was one of them.

24,139. Was that the only land at that time which Sir Tollemache had it in his power to offer in that way?—It was the only land in Strathmore; but, as I mention in my statement, Sir Tollemache was so desirous to meet the wishes of the people that he arranged with three sets of his tenants who were then under lease in the case of arable farms very near to Thurso to allow him to advertise these places, and to quit the place at the first term of Whitsunday thereafter in the event of suitable parties coming forward to make application and to take up and work those farms either as a whole or in small lots.

24,140. In small holdings?—Or in small holdings.

24,141. He had it quite in view to subdivide into small holdings if offerers came forward?—He was quite willing to do so.

24,142. Was that land suitable in your judgment if such offerers had come forward?—There was no better arable land to be found in this neighbourhood. There may be better in Caithness, but not in this district.

24,143. Much better than Rumsdale?—Oh, infinitely better.

25,144. Did no offerers come forward?—Not one.

24,145. You mentioned that there was a proposal made by the landlord to assign or render available land for the formation of from 50 to 100 allotments. Were these allotments to be self-sustaining, or were they to be taken up by persons who had other employment?—Persons who had other employment chiefly; people in the immediate neighbourhood of Thurso.

24,146. With employment?—With employment; people who had houses in the immediate neighbourhood.

24,147. And who would get these allotments of a size arranged and according to such terms as might be adjusted?—That is so.

24,148. What year was that?—1885; eight years ago.

24,149. Have you ever, in your long experience as factor for this property, been obliged to cancel the whole of the crofters' rents?—Never.

24,150. Never anything quite so bad as that?—No, never.

24,151. Because I have heard of cases in the past where the times were so bad and the crops had been such a failure, that the landlord was obliged to cancel the rents entirely. That has never happened with you?—No such thing ever happened on the Ulbster estate, but Sir Tollemache always in a straitened time, when crops or cattle might not be selling to advantage, was ready to consider favourably the circumstances of these small tenants, and he has from time to time given them considerable abatements of rents, averaging during the last ten years 21 per cent. Before that no abatements were required, because really agriculture was then in a flourishing condition.

24,152. You have certainly given us a very full statement, especially in regard to the matter of rents, both the rents of farms and the rents of shootings, and other rents, such as we have not always got.

24,153. Mr Sutherland.—First with regard to the relation between the expenditure on the estate and the rental. I think you stated that on an average, over a period of years, £3200 a year was being spent, being 25 per cent. of the rental; is that the rental all over, without distinction of the classes of the holding?—Yes, it was my son who drew up these figures, but I think they are quite correct.

24,154. What I would like to know is, what proportion of that expenditure compared with the rental from which it was drawn belonged to the small holdings? Was it in your opinion less or greater on the small holdings than on the large ones?—It would be a little less on the small holdings, because the larger farms required more money.

24,155. What does that arise from, that the larger farms required more money?—The tenants are very enterprising, and they drain large quantities of land, and require assistance for that.

24,156. Rather is it not the fact that the landlord does it entirely himself? Is that not the custom in Caithness?—Not so far as I know; the landlord has seldom or never done so except out of drainage money got from Government many years ago. In those cases the landlord got the money many years ago, and the interest was paid by the tenants, and that money I suppose, (although it was long before my time) was chiefly expended, probably upon the large farms; but it might have been as much upon the small as the large, I could not say.

24,157. But, with regard to the custom in letting large farms, is it not one of the conditions that the tenant shall get the farm in good working order, with steadings complete, fences in good repair, drains going, and everything?—They take the farms and the steadings and everything else as they find them. In other words, the incoming tenant is put into the proprietor's shoes in dealing with the outgoing tenant.

24,158. But have you never seen the condition to which I refer stated in a lease?—No, I don't think on the Ulbster estates that there was ever any such condition, for this reason that the steadings and the houses generally and other parts of the farms are in tolerably good condition.

24,159. At whose expense?—Well, the proprietor supplies, for example, all the fencing flags and building materials free of charge to the tenants.

24,160. I am speaking of large farmers?—Both to large and small farmers; Sir Tollemache treats them all very much alike. Thurso. George Logan.

24,161. But then, with regard to the steadings on the large farms, is the landlord not at considerable expense in putting these into repair and erecting and enlarging them?—The proprietor is very seldom asked to do very much in the way of repairing steadings, for this reason, that at first,—it may have been forty or fifty years ago,—the tenants got those in pretty good condition, and there is a clause in every lease under which they are bound to maintain the premises in good condition, and they do so. Then, when the lease expires the incoming tenant is put into the landlord's shoes as it were, and is entitled to ask the outgoing tenant to leave everything in good condition, and he in like manner at the expiry of his lease does the same.

24,162. In other words by the terms of the lease, the outgoing tenant is obliged to leave the whole thing in good repair?—Yes, 'in good tenantable condition' is generally the wording of the lease.

24,163. Is that a general rule on the Ulbster estate?—That is the general rule on the Ulbster estate.

24,164. Are you acquainted with rules on other estates,—did you ever know cases where by the terms of the lease the landlord undertook to put the buildings and the dwelling-house, the steadings, the fences, and the drains into proper repair before the tenant took them?—No, I cannot say I have ever known such an instance upon any estate in Caithness.

24,165. Now, with regard to the smaller tenant, do you insist upon such conditions in a change of tenancy?—The conditions are very much the same in both cases.

24,166. In no case then does the landlord bind himself or undertake to put the steadings in repair?—Not unless it be a special agreement made at the time of entering into the lease.

24,167. But I am asking about these special agreements, whether there are any such within your experience?—I cannot charge my memory with any in particular. I have a case in my view at this moment, for example Mr Morris is the tenant of the farm of Aimster, about half way between Thurso and Halkirk. When Mr Morris went into that farm, about three years ago, he asked the proprietor whether he would assist him in putting things into good condition if he did not find them in that state, and the proprietor agreed to bear half the expense.

24,168. Is that a large farm?—Yes, it is a large farm; the rent is £280 I think.

24,169. But even on the Ulbster estate, notwithstanding this rule, you admit that the expenditure in the case of the large farmers would be greater in proportion to the rental than the small tenants?—I generally find that they are more willing to enter into extensive improvements on large farms, because the most of them have capital.

24,170. What improvements do they make?—They do every kind of improvement; for example, take the farm of Skinnet, one that was brought under your notice to-day. There the tenant when he took his last lease asked Sir Tollemache if he would build for him a new dwelling-house, and Sir Tollemache said well, if you build upon that farm, that is to say if you put up a new house, I will put up one on the adjoining farm of Brawl. The proprietor fulfilled his promise by putting up the new house on Brawl, and Mr Waters, the tenant, fulfilled his by putting the new house on Skinnet.

24,171. But what had Skinnet to do with Brawl?—They were both let to the same tenant at that time.

24,172. So he got the house upon the farm?—He got the house on the one. In other words, if there had not been two houses to go up, the one house would most likely have had to go up at mutual expense, the tenant doing one half and the proprietor the other.

24,173. What improvement did the tenant make? Is it the putting up of the house?—No; when the previous lease was entered into, nineteen years before, the arrangement was precisely the same; that the proprietor would pay one half of all the expenses required to drain, enclose and put the farm generally into good condition; and under that lease, without ever a word of disagreement between the proprietor and the tenant, the whole of these improvements were carried out at mutual expense.

24,174. Why? Was that at the time the farm was being formed?—No, the farm was formed and in operation many long years before.

24,175. Why did the farm require these improvements at that time?—Because drains run out in the course of years—they don't last for ever.

24,176. Did the farmer improve or reclaim any land?—He put under the plough 200 acres that had been before at one time under the plough.

24,177. The improvement had been made before, and all that was required was the cultivation. Who made the former improvement?—It was done before my time, and the tenant then was Mr Paterson who is dead long ago.

24,178. And all the holdings we heard of to-day were upon that farm before?—I don't know of any small holdings upon that farm, and there never was any but the principal tenant since ever I had to do with the estate. Since I had to do with the estate there never was a person removed from that farm or any of the farms I have been speaking about.

24,179. I don't say that at all; but you heard the evidence that these tenants had been there?—Well, it must have been in the olden time.

24,180. And that their improvements rendered it more easy for the large tenants to make these further improvements?—I could not say anything about that.

24,181. I wish to understand, as clearly as possible, what you state, with regard to the offer of the proprietor, that land should be given in smaller holdings. You stated that he advertised first of all the farm of Rumsdale?—Yes.

24,182. How long did this advertisement continue to appear in the local papers, do you remember?—I should think it continued for at least four weeks, probably more.

24,183. What were the terms of the advertisement, do you recollect?—The terms were precisely those that I have given in my statement.

24,184. Do you quote the exact terms of advertisement?—I don't quote the exact words.

24,185. Have you any copies of these advertisements?—I have a copy in my letter book, no doubt, but you will find them in the local papers.

24,186. That is what I was going to ask you; what local papers were they in?—In all the local papers.

24,187. What is the date please?—The date was 1885, eight years ago.

24,188. About what time of the year?—About the month of September.

24,189. You said that the advertisements called upon any person who wished to take a holding or holdings there, or smaller holdings than the present ones, should apply to you I presume?—I did.

24,190. And you said that there were no applications?—I had no application, as I stated, except one, and that one was for a small portion of the farm of Bleachfield, as is stated in my paper.

24,191. Then, you said you did not consider Rumsdale a favourable subject to try such an experiment upon?—I am very glad that some of the Commissioners, yourself among the number, were there; I think you will be able to judge as I do, that it would not be suitable.

24,192. I was just going to make a remark upon that but you have anticipated me. When were you at Rumsdale yourself last?—About three weeks ago.

24,193. Did you see any crops there?—No, I did not, there are not many crops for anybody to see.

24,194. Were you in the park?—No, that is a small park that was improved by Mr Donald Horne for his own personal accommodation, and I am aware that good cabbages, good turnips, and sometimes a little patch of oats may be in the little park, or rather bit of garden.

24,195. What is the extent of the park?—I should say it is not more than 3 acres, but I am speaking from recollection merely.

24,196. The corn was not ripe when you were there three weeks ago?—I never saw corn ripe there, but I was really not at the shepherd's house at all; I was on the farm of Rumsdale. Thurso. George Logan.

24,197. Would you be surprised to know that we saw there some of the best corn we have seen in Caithness?—I would not be at all surprised, because the shepherd keeps a couple of cows, and he puts all his dung upon the bit of ground, making it like a bit of garden.

24,198. Could not other people do what the shepherd has done?—I don't think they would have so much to put on it in the shape of manure.

24,199. Shepherds are better agriculturists, in your opinion, than other people?—No, but this is restricted to an acre or two; the shepherd has nothing else to do with the manure from his byre, so he puts it upon the bit of land.

24,200. But you know that it is only a corner of the land which was formerly in cultivation that is now included in cultivation: don't you see the marks of cultivation all round the park?—There is not much. I do not think it would be a profitable occupation for any one to plant himself there.

24,201. Do you know if the shepherd at Rumsdale has cut his corn yet?—This year I don't think he will have cut it, because very few will have cut it even in the low ground.

24,202. That is what struck me, that he was as far forward as those in the low ground?—Well, I daresay you understand; you are accustomed to the north of Scotland, and I think you will have seen since you came to Caithness that this is altogether an exceptional season; I never recollect during the thirty-three years I have managed the Ulbster estates a single season when there was such an early crop.

24,203. But I am comparing it with other places which have also an early crop?—Well, this is an exceptional season altogether; you may never see anything like it during the next thirty years.

24,204. Had he a crop last year?—I don't know.

24,205. Last year was a very bad season?—It was not such an early season as this.

24,206. Exceptionally late, was it not?—I don't know that it was exceptionally late; I think it was very much like other seasons; our seasons are generally late.

24,207. But they are late here when they are late in other places, are they not?—I suppose so.

24,208. Then, with regard to the want of applications for Rumsdale, are you perfectly satisfied that there was nothing inherent in the terms on which the land was offered, to prevent applications being made?—If you would look at the advertisement you may judge for yourself.

24,209. That is what I am very sorry for,—that we have not the terms of the advertisement before us?—The editor of the Ensign is here, and the editor of the Groat; probably they may be able to tell from recollection, for I am only speaking from recollection myself.

24,210. They will be less likely to remember than yourself; you drew it up, I presume?—Well, I refer you to the advertisement, and I can assure you that Sir Tollemache was very sincere in his desire to let it if people came forward who thought it would pay to take it.

24,211. It was a bonâ fide offer?—A bonâ fide offer.

24,212. Then you said something about the conditions and of the state of public feeling at the time at which the offer was made,—in answer to a question put by the Chairman?—No, I never heard of that.

24,213. I think you said that it was stated in some quarters that Rumsdale was a suitable place; who said that?—It was the report of some of the meetings that were held about that time.

24,214. Could you give us anything definite?—I really could not give you anything definite.

24,215. You have a general impression to that effect?—I have a general impression, and it consists with my knowledge that that place was mentioned amongst others.

24,216. As being?—As being a suitable place.

24,217. The most suitable place?—Not the most suitable, but one suitable place where small holdings should be lotted off.

24,218. But why was it the only one of the places mentioned that was offered?—It was the only one that was vacant at the time.

24,219. It was vacant, was it?—It was vacant through the retiring of the previous tenant.

24,220. And it was asked for, and therefore the offer was made?—The offer was made.

24,221. And you have come to the deliberate conclusion that because these people did not consider it desirable,—that that is the reason why they did not take it?—I am quite convinced of that: I have no doubt of it; and I am quite convinced further, that it was not suitable, and could not be made suitable, except at enormous expense; an expense which would never be justified by the result.

24,222. Is that with regard to the climate,—had you the climate in view?—The climate has a good deal to do with it, but the soil as well.

24,223. The soil is not good?—The soil, generally speaking, is not at all suitable for arable land. Some patches as I stated may be suitable, but they are mere detached pieces.

24,224. But not on Rumsdale?—Oh, well, Rumsdale is one of them; there may be little patches,—you yourself spoke of an enclosed piece where there were vegetables growing,—that is one of these spots, although it is an exceedingly small one.

24,225. Would it not be a very good nucleus for a grazing farm?—It has fallen very much in value as a grazing farm; whilst the previous tenant paid £250 or £260, the present tenant pays only £130.

24,226. But that is an argument against the present use of it, is it not?—You speak of it as a grazing farm for small holdings?

24,227. Perhaps the smaller grazier could pay a bigger proportion of rent?—I would be afraid not.

24,228. Of course, you have your opinion?—Yes, I have my opinion, and it is a very decided one.

24,229. Then, with regard to the other cases you referred to, what were the other offers that were made? There was one, I think, you said with regard to Bleachfield; that was settled, was it not?—No, it was not settled, as I mention in the paper. It was given back to the persons then in possession, because no person made either inquiry or offer, except one.

24,230. What was the other place?—Glengolly was one.

24,231. That is a farm?—That is a pretty large farm.

24,232. Where is it?—About 2 miles from Thurso.

24,233. On what road?—On the Buckies road.

24,234. What were the exact negotiations that took place with regard to Glengolly?—None whatever.

24,235. Was it an advertisement also?—It was an advertisement also, which also appeared in the same papers that I have referred to.

24,236. Did you enter into any negotiations at all, either futile or otherwise?—None except as to one inquiry that was made for a part of Bleachfield, which ended in nothing.

24,237. Were there no negotiations of any kind at all about Glengolly?—Not to the best of my recollection; there was not the slightest negotiation of any description.

24,238. Did you ever hear that the people were asked £2 an acre for the land as an addition?—I did not.

24,239. Is that true?—That is not true. There is no land there let at such a price.

24,240. Then the other offer was you said with regard to allotments and feus; that is nearer the town of Thurso I presume?—It is quite near the town of Thurso.

24,241. You said there were two such applications I think?—There were two, one for a small allotment by a person who is now dead; he wanted one acre taken off the farm of Oldfield; and the other was for a small feu of half an acre.

24,242. What was the result of these applications?—The result was that I went to the ground with the person who made the application for the one acre; we looked over the ground and he said that he thought we would require to enclose it for him because he had not means of doing it himself, and I said we would require to make arrangements with the then tenant of the farm; we would require to give him notice that the acre would be taken. And he said, well, he would consider it, and see whether that would suit him, to wait for a year until we would give legal notice to the tenant. However, I heard no more about it, and shortly afterwards the applicant died.

24,243. The other case?—The other case was that of Mr Robert Syme who spoke of taking half an acre of ground, but he stated that he was not intending to build for some time, and, therefore, that he would not require the feu for some years, so the matter has remained in abeyance.

24,244. So the net result is that in the two cases where there were applications there was no transaction?—Nothing whatever resulted.

24,245. No transaction resulted from the applications that were made?—Nothing except those two inquiries.

24,246. But there were two applications made, and I suppose they would be made with a desire to come to terms, if the terms were suitable?—I believe that if Mr Syme was going to build the house, he would still be willing to take his feu.

24,247. Is it not a reasonable assumption that the other applications were made in the same way?—Yes, only as I say the person died shortly afterwards; before he decided he was out of the reckoning because he died.

24,248. Then, out of these offers that were made two applications were sent in and they came to naught?—They came to naught.

24,249. Do you know if the Small Holdings Act has had any application in Caithness?—I don't think it has.

24,250. Has the matter been considered by the County Council, do you know?—It has.

24,251. And have they determined to do anything with regard to it?—Yes, they have determined to do this. There is a place that is in the market for sale just now, and they have appointed a committee. I myself attended a meeting of the Council last Saturday, and at that meeting they appointed a committee consisting of four members to negotiate with the proprietor, Mr Heathcote Sinclair, and to ascertain on what terms he would be willing to sell a portion,—not the whole, but a portion of the place; and if they find that they can get it on reasonable terms their intention is to go over it carefully and arrive at a final decision as to what it would be worth to them.

24,252. And no doubt, as a member of that committee, you are quite prepared to justify your action to your constituents?—I am not a member of that committee, but I am a member of the County Council.

24,253. But as a member of the County Council you are so far responsible?—Well, we are responsible, so far as considering their report when they bring it in.

24,254. But is it not evidence when a representative body like the County Council would intend to take action, that there is a demand for these holdings?—Well, if you look up the Ensign this afternoon, or the Groat, you will probably find a report of the meeting that then took place. I have not seen it myself, but that will probably give you full information as to what took place at the meeting, and then you will be able to judge whether there is a prospect of its being actually carried out or not.

22,255. But you stated that there were to be negotiations for getting some land?—I did say so.

24,256. And if there were no demand, such as we have heard to-day, do you think a committee would be justified in reporting in favour of such a proposal? Does it not show the existence of a demand on the part of the people to get such holdings?—Well, no, I don't think it does, and I will tell you how. The proposal was made by Mr Wm. Keith at Castleton, who is a brother of Mr Keith, solicitor, Thurso. The latter is factor for the estate, and probably he is more anxious to sell than the others are to purchase.

24,257. But we cannot surely imagine that a large and representative body like the County Council of Caithness would give their adhesion to that unless there was a desire on the part of the people to get it done?—Well, if the report is full, you will find that is the very suggestion I made at the meeting last Saturday, viz., that if they found that the landlord was willing to sell, the committee should be authorised to advertise for candidates to come forward and say whether they were willing to take up the lots.

24,258. But is not the procedure under the Act that the Council shall ascertain whether there is any such demand,—you appoint a committee for that purpose?—And we have done so.

24,259. And have they discovered a demand?—No, they have not discovered a demand.

24,260. How then are the negotiations regarding the sale being entered into?—They are not being entered into; they are merely being inquired into.

24,261. You said some transactions were about to take place?—I did not say they were to take place at all; I said the committee was appointed to make inquiries, but it may all end in smoke.

24,262. But it is clear the demand is there?—No, I don't think the demand is there at all, and that is one of the things that the County Council wish the committee to find out,—whether there is such a demand.

24,263. And have not they appointed a committee before now?—They had a committee before, but they did not come to any conclusion.

24,264. Did they make any inquiry with regard to the matter?—Well, I believe they did.

24,265. Supposing there is no demand for small holdings, what in your opinion is the cause for that?—I think it is just simply that there is not that land hunger that is stated to exist. I have never found that myself in all my experience.

24,266. Have you not?—No; I will give you an instance. There is up in the Geise district (a place near where Mr Donald Henderson who gave evidence a little ago lives), one of the nicest little crofts in the county of Caithness probably. It has been beautifully managed by the last occupant, and by his father before him, and it was in excellent order. That man raised himself from a very small position to a position that enabled him this year to take a farm at the rent of £140, and when he left the croft at Whitsunday last it was in about the best order that a little croft could possibly be. I had it advertised in all the local papers. Sir Tollemache's object was chiefly this, that another tenant on the estate, who might have probably a smaller croft, might wish to rise up a little, to get a step up the ladder and take that croft by way of promotion, and that some other person who had not land might come forward and apply for the smaller croft. Strange to say, after that croft was advertised for several weeks, we had to let it to an outsider; one not on the estate at all.

24,267. There was no more application for it than for Rumsdale or those other places?—Yes, there were more; I think I had four candidates for it.

24,268. And that is evidence to you that the land hunger does not exist?—I have not found that it does exist.

24,269. Don't you think it exists in the case where there is a holding made up out of other holdings the size of Oldhall farm? Do you know the case of Oldhall?—I do.

24,270. It is an enormous farm, is it not?—It is a large farm.

24,271. Would you, in the face of the consolidation of that farm and of the medium sized farms, say that there is no land hunger?—I would say that if there was an earth hunger at all it was on the part of the large farmers.

24,272. But you think there is an earth hunger on their part?—Well, several of them have more than one farm, and to my knowledge they farm the land they have uncommonly well.

24,273. Do you concur then that they are letting the land out of cultivation as we heard yesterday?—Well, I think within the last eight years or thereby, it has been going out of cultivation to a considerable extent. Thurso. George Logan.

24,274. Is that, in your opinion, a sign of good farming?—I think it is under present circumstances, because owing to foreign competition it would not pay the expenses to continue to labour to the extent that they did the arable land formerly.

24,275. So then you agree with Mr Tait's evidence yesterday, that it was because they had not labour to use upon these large farms that the large farmers are allowing the land to go out of cultivation?—It is not so much that they have not labour, but they have not the means of paying for the labour.

24,276. But if the land were to go to people who had not to pay for the labour, who do the labour themselves?—Disabuse your mind of that idea; the class of people that you speak of never could labour it to advantage.

24,277. Were they not labouring it before?—Not to my knowledge.

24,278. I don't say to your knowledge and experience?—And I don't attempt to contradict what other witnesses stated; but so far as my knowledge goes it is not so.

24,279. The small holder does not farm to advantage?—Some of them are model farmers; I have given you an instance already in the case of that small crofter in the Geise district; he was a model farmer, and I am glad to say that there are other model farmers; but I cannot say the same of them all.

24,280. But suppose the process of allowing the land to go out of cultivation to continue, where is it going to stop? Would not we have the whole land waste again?—I don't think so.

24,281. You see no prospect of the foreign competition declining in any sense, do you?—Well, I think this year there is an upward tendency; but for the last seven or eight years it has been very discouraging.

24,282. But don't you think foreign competition is likely to be a permanent element in the question?—I am afraid it is, and I am afraid it will tell very much on the small crofter, because he is the one who rears the stirks. He takes them to the market, he used to sell them readily for £9 or £10, but now he cannot get more than probably £4, 10s., or half the price he got before. Therefore it tells more severely against the crofter than against the large farmer.

24,283. I rather think you do not hear anything of small crofters letting their land run out of cultivation?—They cannot afford to let it run out of cultivation, because they have only little patches of land, and must keep under the plough what they have.

24,284. Then, is waste land better than cultivated land?—It is not waste land.

24,285. Is uncultivated land more profitable to the community than cultivated land?—I think if a farmer has a suitable extent of arable land it is more profitable to him under the present state of things where prices are for cattle so low, to allow it to run into permanent pasture, for a time at least, for this reason that he is saved the expense of labouring the land.

24,286. We are back at that again. So that it is all a question of being able to pay for the labour?—Very much.

24,287. And that is the reason why the land is allowed to run out of cultivation in the county of Caithness? That is practically and substantially the evidence of Mr Tait?—To some extent it is so.

24,288. Well then, in reference to certain historical matters. When I was asking you about certain things as to the subdivision of land in Rumsdale and other places in olden times, you excused yourself from giving me any information on the ground that it was beyond your own personal experience,—a perfectly reasonable attitude for you to take up, I admit. But you went on in your statement to give us information about things that happened before you were born?—I only gave it on written evidence.

24,289. Quite so, but you had no hesitation in giving it though it was beyond your own experience?—I have no hesitation in giving it, because it is recorded in the minute books of the trustees, and if you wish to know the names of the trustees I can furnish you with them.

24,290. Quite so, I take it that it is quite correct; but is this not written on the face of the land, the signs of the old cultivation?—Well, I have not seen it myself.

24,291. Is not what is written on the face of the land as good as what is written on paper?—I have not seen it. I have seen what is written on paper, but I have not seen what is written on the land you refer to.

24,292. You have never been up Strathmore, have you?—I have been up Strathmore.

24,293. And you saw no marks of old cultivation?—Didn't I say in my statement that there were certain small patches.

24,294. And is that not then proof that there was old cultivation?—Nobody will deny that.

24,295. Then you said something about it being best that the truth should be known?—It is.

24,296. Do you think the truth has never yet been known?—I hope it is pretty well known.

24,297. Does that imply that other statements are untrue?—I imply nothing; I say it is right that the whole truth should be known.

24,298. This is your statement, not a quotation; it is your statement, that it was best that the truth should be known?—I think I could not have stated the thing more correctly.

24,299. Does that imply that the other statements are not true?—I did not refer to any particular statement at all, I merely say it is best that the truth should be known, and I have given the truth to the best of my knowledge.

24,300. That was the introductory sentence to certain statements you made,—that this was to be the truth and that everything differing from that was not true?—I did not say that at all.

24,301. But that was implied?—You may infer what you like.

24,302. You went on to quote Sir John Sinclair—did you quote Sir John Sinclair? Did you, as a matter of fact, quote Sir John Sinclair although you had promised to quote him?—I made no such promise; I said it was in the time of Sir John Sinclair.

24,303. You went on to quote Sir John Sinclair?—Would you hand me the paper so that I may read my own words. Now you will be good enough just to listen to this; I shall read the whole clause from the beginning: 'We frequently hear in those days of what 'are termed the "good old times." But those who thus 'speak, apparently,—apparently do not really know the 'actual circumstances. Whilst we would all sincerely 'wish to see the crofters, small tenants, and large tenants 'prospering alike, it is best that the whole truth should 'be known; and as a clear and convincing proof of the 'pecuniary difficulties in which the smaller tenants 'constantly were who occupied small holdings in the 'olden time, I append hereto several excerpts from the 'minute books of the Ulbster trustees, in the time of 'the Right Hon. Sir John Sinclair.'

24,304. Oh, I beg your pardon. Is that the whole?—That is the whole.

24,305. It was my mistake, I see. But the report, as a matter of fact, is the report of a factor?—The report is my report.

24,306. But your quotation?—Oh, my quotation is taken from the minute books of the trustees.

24,307. What is quoted in the minute book of the trustees?—I read every word.

24,308. A report by the factor, is it not?—No, it is the record of the transactions.

24,309. Would you kindly read on?—Do you wish me to read the excerpts?

24,310. No; do you not say that the quotations you gave regarding abatements of rent, and so on, were reports of a factor to the proprietor? Is that so, do you remember?—No. First of all the factor gives his report and then the trustees record their decision upon that report.

24,311. But these reports about the necessities for doing that, are the factor's reports to his superior?—That is the basis, and then the trustees proceed to dispose of the questions as laid before them. Mr Henderson, who was then factor, was the father, I think, of the present Mr Henderson of Stemster; he was a most respectable gentleman, and not likely to report anything that was not true.

Thurso. George Logan

24,312. I do not suggest that, but he was the factor on the estate of Ulbster at that time?—He was.

24,313. Then, you said that the transactions you referred to took place between the years 1816 and 1833?—I think between 1815 and 1833.

24,314. Was that the time,—I will put it as euphemistically as you like,—is that the time when changes were being made in the policy of the estates?—I could not speak as to that. I don't know of any changes taking place in the policy.

24,315. Or in the rural economy of the estate?—No, I don't know.

24,316. Or in the people being cleared off the estate?—I never knew an instance of their being cleared off; all were before my day, if there were any.

24,317. But was it during the time these changes took place; do you know of your own knowledge if that was the time between 1815 and 1833?—I could not say, but I can refer you to one of these excerpts in which it is stated that the Ulbster trustees were then not removing but receiving a large number of settlers on the Ulbster estates.

24,318. But you don't know where the former cultivators of Strathmore went to, or when they left?—No, I do not.

24,319. You don't know then whether this statement which you quote synchronised or was simultaneous with the time when these people were being removed, or shortly prior thereto?—I think the evidence is that they were leaving themselves very much.

24,320. Whatever way it was I wish simply to ascertain this fact whether these reports had any bearing on a justification of a policy that was being pursued at that time?—I am not aware of any particular policy that was being pursued; the three trustees who then acted were most respectable gentlemen.

24,321. I don't doubt their respectability?—One was the Sheriff of Haddington, another was Mr Horne of Langwell, and the third Mr James Brown, accountant, in Edinburgh, all gentlemen of the highest respectability.

24,322. We, as you know, had evidence from a gentleman in Wick, who was speaking of his own personal knowledge regarding these times, and he said something different?—I was not at Wick.

24,323. But you said that they required to get abatements of rent?—Yes.

24,324. That was an argument, I suppose, directed against putting them there again?—Well, it showed that they were really in difficulty.

24,325. I wish, then, to test to what extent it showed that. Do you give abatements of rent to large farmers now-a-days?—We do.

24,326. Is it an argument why they should be removed from their present holdings?—No.

24,327. Or why they should not be continued?—No.

24,328. Then why does it apply in this case?—I did not say it applied in that sense.

24,329. Was not it given as an argument against putting people there again?—I never expressed an opinion on that. The part that these persons referred to was away down at the lower part of Strathmore and had nothing to do with the portion I spoke of as being unadvisable to repopulate.

24,330. So then the fact that they had to receive abatements of rent is no argument?—It just showed that they were in pecuniary difficulties.

24,331. And that all farmers are in pecuniary difficulties to-day?—That arises from foreign competition to a great extent.

24,332. Every time will have its own circumstances?—No doubt.

24,333. Then, you are aware that large reductions have been given on the Ulbster estates to crofters within the last ten years?—I am aware of that.

24,334. And that the Crofters Commission reduced rent all over the country?—I am quite aware of that too.

24,335. So that their circumstances in those days were not different in that respect from the circumstances of those days?—I am making no comparison; I was merely stating facts.

24,336. I was asking you about facts?—I am answering you.

24,337. I have no fault to find with your answers; you stated that the small rents could not then be paid?—Well, the evidence is there.

24,338. And you stated, I think, that the rents were then small?—I really don't know what the rents were, but they were bound to be small; these were mere patches that they had.

24,339. Do you mean small in comparison to the amounts that are paid to-day?—I could not compare them.

24,340. Or small in comparison with the rents that were paid in larger holdings than theirs?—My impression,—it may not go for much, but from what I know of Strathmore my impression is that the rents paid in the olden time must have been almost nominal, not much more.

24,341. How do you know that?—I know from the history of the way in which the people lived. If you look at Mr Sage's book, a book which you have no doubt read, I think you will find very clear evidence of that.

24,342. That rents were low compared with rents now?—I don't know that there is any comparison with the last few years.

24,343. But have all rents not gone up, large ones as well as small ones?—Yes, there was a time when rents bounded up very quickly.

24,344. Would it not be a fair test of the rents paid at that time to compare them with the other rents paid at the same time?—I have no objection to the comparison.

24,345. And if that comparison were applied to the large farmers, it would just apply in the same way, would it not?—Very likely.

24,346. Then, you gave us some interesting information of a historical kind, regarding the purchase of the estates.—I wish to ask you a question if you can supply the information; you have got no deer forest on your estate?—We have no deer forest.

24,347. But you have a sporting rental?—We have a sporting rental.

24,348. Now, have you ever compared the grazing rental plus the sporting rental that you get from the estate with the rent they get for a deer forest elsewhere?—I have no doubt of the rents they get from deer forests.

24,349. You have not looked into that?—No, I have not.

24,350. Have you a general impression that land that is let as a deer forest is higher rented than land that is let for both pasture and sporting combined?—Really I have no data to go upon.

24,351. It has not come under your personal consideration?—No, it has not come under my consideration.

24,352. Does the sporting rental exceed the grazing rental per acre?—Largely.

24,353. You stated, I think, that the Dalganachan farm was let at 3d. per acre?—That was Rumsdale.

24,354. That is rather low, is it not?—Well, I don't know,—really I made no comparison; it was merely because you had walked over it that I made the calculation to see how much per acre it was. In short I wanted to give you the fullest correct information in my power.

24,355. How does that compare with Dalganachan, is it less or more?—Part of Dalganachan is let along with Rumsdale; they are let together; Glenmore and Glendhu is the upper part of Dalganachan and forms part of the farm of Rumsdale at this moment.

24,356. You said that 30½ miles of road were made by the proprietor, where were these made?—They started at Harpsdale to Westerdale, then from Westerdale to Strathmore, from Strathmore to Dalnawillan, from Dalnawillan to Glutt, from Glutt to Braemore, and then there is a branch which was formed about 10 years ago from Dalnawillan up to the railway station at Aultnabreac.

Thurso. George Log

24,357. Do you know how many of a population these roads accommodate?—Upon each farm there will not be more than perhaps half a dozen individuals.

24,358. How many householders?—Well, there are the tenants of Glutt, Rumsdale, Dalnawillan, and Dalganachan; there is a holding there, and also at Dalnaha, Achalibster and Westerdale.

24,359. Were they built primarily for the accommodation of the sporting tenants?—The roads were really made, I think in the first instance, very much for the accommodation of the grazing tenants, but the shootings were beginning to rise in value about that time, and in consequence of that Sir Tollemache was induced not only to make the road up to the very top of his own property, but he actually, with the consent of the proprietors of Braemore and of Dunbeath, made 7 miles of road on their properties, and that was in order to form a connection with the county road at Dunbeath, because there was no railway then. Now, that the railway has been formed, that portion of the road may be said to be not so much required.

24,360. I think you said also that, in regard to the employment of certain labourers by the Pavement Company, you made it a condition that they should give preference to the labour of tenants on the Ulbster estate?—That is so.

24,361. Have you ever heard any complaint about that?—No, I cannot say that I have heard any complaint at all. I have heard occasionally perhaps one or two of the tenants up in the Geise district say that they thought they might get more employment from the quarries, but you will observe that the quarry that is now being worked in that district is not on Sir Tollemache's property at all. But in Weydale they are just working as they were before.

24,362. I take it then as the general result of your evidence that you cannot show us any land on the estate under your management that is suitable for the purposes regarding which we are appointed to inquire?—I really do not think it would be advisable to take any part of it for that purpose, because I am perfectly convinced,—indeed, I quite agree with Mr Donaldson who was examined here to-day, and whom I never saw before,—but I very fully concur with the evidence that he gave where he stated that it would be utterly impossible for tenants getting new holdings to pay almost any rent for the first seven years.

24,363. Do you concur with him on any other point of his evidence?—I thought he gave very fair evidence indeed, and to a great extent I agree with what I recollect of what he said.

24,364. Do you give a general concurrence to Mr Donaldson's statement?—No, I cannot say that.

24,365. But only that point?—On that point chiefly. I thought he was an honest witness.

24,366. Oh, we are all honest witnesses.

24,367. You do not concur with the evidence of Mr Henderson and the other witnesses who had rather opposite views to those of Mr Donaldson?—No, I do not so much concur with them, but I think Mr Donaldson's evidence was very sensible and really conveyed the truth.

24,368. As he thought it. Then do you not admit that farm steadings and houses have been built without any assistance from external sources?—No, in my opinion no good or substantial houses and no good steadings have been built on small places without external assistance.

24,369. Are you prepared to affirm that as a fact?—I think I might.

24,370. Without qualification?—For example, Mr Donald Henderson here gave an instance to-day of a house that he himself——

24,371. Do you make that as a general statement, Mr Logan?—No, I am not wishing to reflect upon anybody.

Thurso.

George Logan.

24,372. I am rather referring to what my own knowledge is?—Well, I quite agree with you in thinking that if a person has any means, and any energy and if he gets a bit of land, especially if he gets a bit of good arable land to begin with, and if he happens to come under a proprietor who has either not the means to assist him or who says you can go there, but I am not going to be at any expense in connection with it, I say that if that man had a bit of good land to begin with, he might by degrees be able to put up a little hovel in which he might be able to exist; but it would not be a house that would meet the requirements of the sanitary authorities. In those times good and substantial houses must be put up.

24,373. And you do not know any case where a good and substantial house has been put up without external assistance?—No, I cannot say that I know any.

24,374. And does your knowledge extend pretty widely over Caithness?—Well, it does extend pretty widely over Caithness, but I cannot speak of all Caithness for all that.

24,375. So your opinion is that the thing cannot be done?—That is my opinion.

24,376. Mr Gordon.—I would like you to tell us about the farm of Rumsdale, of which you have been speaking. We have been over the farm, and have seen it, I believe, at a rather favourable time of the year, and during a very favourable year?—I think so.

24,377. None of the witnesses hitherto have spoken of its character during winter. Is it your opinion, or is it within your knowledge, whether the sheep grazed there in the summer time get wintering on the farm?—No, the sheep are generally sent down to the low grounds, to arable farms where there is an outrun.

24,378. Are the whole of the sheep sent down or only a portion?—No, generally the more tender of them; the ewes are sent down and any tender sheep.

24,379. Is it a ewe stock farm or a wedder stock farm?—A wedder stock farm.

24,380. Then, there are no ewes on it?—There are no ewes on that farm.

24,381. Then, it would be one-year olds, or wedder hoggs that would be sent down?—Yes, and some two-year olds.

24,382. Can you tell us what stock is on the farm?—I should think there would be about 1200 head altogether.

24,383. And how many classes?—Three.

24,384. That makes 400 or so of each class?—About 400 of each class.

24,385. The rent of the farm is, I understand, £130 at present?—That is the rent.

24,386. Now, when wintering is taken for hoggs or one-year old wedders down in the low part of the country here, what price does the wintering cost, as a rule?—About 8s. a head.

24,387. That would be £160, therefore, in addition to paying the rent of the land that the farmer would have to pay for the wintering of his stock?—Yes.

24,388. I suppose no provision could be made up there for the wintering of the sheep?—There is no possibility of keeping them there during the whole winter.

24,389. Take the next farm, is that Dalganachan?—Yes.

24,390. Is that a farm of a similar character to Rumsdale?—It is; it is not quite so high, but in character it is very much the same.

24,391. Could the sheep that are grazed on it during the summer be wintered there also?—No, it is almost exactly the same as Rumsdale.

24,392. Is there as much arable land or green land there as would grow hay sufficient to winter the sheep, or would you have to import it?—You would have to import it.

24,393. That is to say to keep the sheep over a storm?—You would require to send up hay every year, or take down the sheep.

24,394. Therefore, that is not apparently a place where crofters or small tenants would readily thrive?—I have said already that it is not at all a suitable place; in my opinion they could not live, they might exist, but they could not profitably live.

Thurso.

George Loga

24,395. We saw the glen further down than that. Now, there is a place opposite Loch More?—Is it Dalnaha?

24,396. Dalnaha was one of them?—It might be Ascoraclate.

24,397. Yes, that is the place. Is that a place where wintering can be done,—where sheep that are grazed can be wintered?—Well, the tenant might grow a little hay there.

24,398. There is more arable land there?—Yes, there is more green ground, and by enclosing it and keeping the sheep out from the grass he would be able to cut it at the usual cutting season, and dry it for winter use.

24,399. Well, come a little farther down the glen, we come to Dalnaha, and the next place below that is Dirlot?—Yes.

24,400. We saw that place too, and we have heard nothing about it to-day, much to my astonishment. Is it not possible to set down one or two small holdings there comfortably, do you think?—I think it is quite possible.

24,401. The character of the land, the altitude, and the fact that there are some buildings there, would seem to point to that place as being not at least unsuitable for small holdings?—Yes, but you will observe that you could not get the house that the tenant of the farm has; he needs that for himself, and he could not part with it.

24,402. That is to say that if the new holdings were to be confined to the arable land, then the tenant of the grazings would require the house for his shepherd, is that what you mean?—He would need that certainly, and what is more, he would need a very large abatement from his rent.

24,403. Oh, no doubt; I quite understand that. Well, come a little farther down now, to Skinnet. We heard to-day from the witness, Mr Henderson, that the whole of the ground which was at one time occupied by small holdings is at present in pasture; that I understood to be his statement. But in answer to a question by Mr Sutherland lately you stated that the previous tenant, who is now dead I am sorry to say, Mr Waters, improved 200 acres upon that farm; is that so?—That is so.

24,404. I think you farther stated, or at least the inference was that this land was more easily reclaimed because it had formerly been under cultivation by other small tenants?—No, I don't say it was under cultivation by small tenants.

24,405. I don't say you said so, but that was the impression on my mind?—I did not refer to small tenants; it was in the time of Mr Waters and his brother before him, I understand, that it was under the plough.

24,406. And these 200 acres which Mr Waters again reclaimed or reclaimed for the first time, for the first or second time, was not the land to which Mr Henderson referred as being now under pasture?—Really I don't know what he referred to.

24,407. Well, he referred to the land which was occupied at one time by small holdings, and said it was now all under sheep and not under arable land?—That is not my understanding at all; on the contrary, what is under pasture just now is all required in connection with the farm.

24,408. That is not exactly what I mean. Mr Henderson said, in answer to me I think it was, that the land which was formerly occupied by small tenants was now under sheep, and that the locality of that land was mainly above the road and partly below it, between the road and the river. It was not under cultivation?—It has never been under small tenants since ever I knew the property, so I cannot speak to that.

24,409. I put the question again to you. Are the 200 acres which you stated were improved by the tenant now under cultivation?—Chiefly, I think almost all of it is.

24,410. Well, there is another question and only one that I want to put to you. We heard from Mr Henderson, in answer to Mr Keith, the amount that was expended upon the holdings of his small croft?—Yes.

24,411. He presently holds a farm of £21 rent?—Yes.

24,412. Can you tell me what was his previous rent?—Well, he added one farm to another.

24,413. But can you tell me was that the rent when he put up these houses?—Very much the same; Henderson himself paid something like £10 for his own place.

24,414. And was it upon his own place that the holdings were erected?—Yes.

24,415. Previous to the addition?—No, I think about the same time.

24,416. Now, we find here that between Sir Tollemache Sinclair, the proprietor, and Mr Henderson, the tenant, an expenditure was made on holdings of something like £90?—Yes.

24,417. That refers to holdings upon a £21 croft?—Yes.

24,418. You told us the rent of Aimster?—Yes, £240 or £280, I think.

24,419. And I want to get at the relative cost of the buildings necessary to house a farm like Aimster and a small farm like Geise. Now the one rent is about £400, is it?—The old rent was £340 or so, but I think the new rent is £280. I may be confusing the two rents.

24,420. It is £280 in the valuation roll?—Yes. It was £346 before.

24,421. £346 would be seventeen times Mr Henderson's rent, and £280 would be about fourteen times. Now, how would Sir Tollemache's expenditure in connection with each of these places compare; would it be most for the £21 or most for the £280 rent?—I think in proportion it would be less for the large farm.

24,422. That is what I would think myself, but it appeared as if it was larger, that the expenditure would be greater for the big farm than for the little?—I find, according to a hurried statement that has been made up for me just now, that the sums expended by Sir Tollemache Sinclair, within the last few years, upon Henderson's croft in Geise, are as follows:—

Fencing flags,	13	0	11½
Dwelling-house,	50	16	0
Offices (towards the cost of the buildings),	10	0	0
Drains and ditches,	12	11	4
Paid for ridging dwelling-house,	1	3	0
Total,	87	11	3½

24,423. Now, Mr Henderson said he expended shilling about with the proprietor, that would make a total expenditure of £175?—Yes.

24,424. Can you tell us what Sir Tollemache's outlay was when Mr Morris went into Aimster?—The whole houses and steading were put up there before then, so that it was merely repairs that were needed in that case, whilst it was new houses in Henderson's.

24,425. I would not have mentioned the matter, but you brought it out yourself?—Well, that is the state of the matter.

24,426. Mr Donald Henderson, Geise.—You stated that Sir Tollemache proposed to divide the farm of Bleachfield and Glengolly among the crofters?—I don't say he proposes that now; I say he did eight years ago.

24,427. Was such a proposal at that time advertised in any of the local papers?—It was.

24,428. Could you mention to satisfy the Commission a single individual that ever saw such a proposal?—It was advertised in the local papers; if you don't read the local papers I cannot be accountable for that.

24,429. But, certainly, some one else might have seen it as well as you, if such an advertisement was ever made?—I think you were all reading the papers very much.

24,430. I wish to explain that I am a crofter representing the whole crofters of the district; I am simply their mouthpiece. Sir Tollemache spoke to me to convene my meeting, and that he was willing to remove any grievance as far as his ability could reach. I called that meeting, at which Sir Tollemache was present, and Mr Logan. I opened up the crofters' question under four heads. One principal question was the smallness of the holdings of the crofters. There was no proposal made at that meeting to divide the farm of Glengolly and to set it for crofters, but simply a park of 40 acres, connected with the farm paying a rent as Sir Tollemache stated of £80 or £2 per acre. The proposal, therefore, of Sir Tollemache was that the crofters should have it if they would pay the rent of £80 for it, so that Sir Tollemache would have no loss by it. Otherwise, the park was to be given by slump to the whole crofters for grazing purposes, and they were to pay £2 for each head for the six months' grazing. That I hold as I would have the truth and that alone to be the proposal of Sir Tollemache. Now, I called meeting after meeting of the crofters to see if by an arrangement we might have the tenants to offer any rent at all. The tenants absolutely refuse to offer any rent as they viewed Sir Tollemache's proposal of £2 an acre, while they, the crofters themselves, were only paying for their lands 2s. 6d., a mere sham, and that he really did not mean it. [Witness].—My lord, I may just mention by way of explanation of this statement of Henderson's that the matter is in this position:—The farms of Beachfield and Glengolly were both advertised, as I have stated, in the local papers, the whole farms. But this, I suppose, is a more recent thing; and since nobody came forward to take up the whole farms, Sir Tollemache, still willing to accommodate them, stated that he would endeavour to make arrangements with Dr Mill's trustees who were tenants of a different farm altogether, to give up a large part of that farm for grazing purposes as accommodation land, the same as we have in the parish of Halkirk, and the same as we have at Thurso Castle. For example, in the parish of Halkirk, Sir Tollemache always keeps what is termed the village park under grass, permanent grass for the accommodation of the feuars' cows. They pay £2, 5s. per head for the grazing during the summer.

24,431. I flatly deny that even such a proposal was made either by Mr Logan or by Sir Tollemache.

24,432. The Chairman.—Is it a fact that this park, when it was proposed to be offered to crofters, was to be at the rate of £2 an acre?—Not at £2 an acre, but it was to be let at the rate of £2 per cow.

24,433. For six months?—For the whole summer grazing, and that is 5s. per head less than they pay in Halkirk, and £1, 5s. less than they pay in the neighbourhood of Thurso.

23,434. I am right in taking it that your answer is that it was to be £2 per cow for six months' grazing?—That is so.

24,435. I am sorry you have not put in the advertisement, as it would have saved us some time; have you got a copy?—I generally retain copies of those advertisements in my letter book, and probably I may have this one.

24,436. Would you kindly look up to see if you have the newspaper or the letter book; and if you have the newspaper put it in, if not put in a copy from the letter book?—I will be very happy.*

24,437. Mr Sutherland.—There is one question I forgot to ask. As a matter of fact, who is the tenant of Rumsdale grazing?—Mr James Macbeath.

24,438. Where does he transfer his sheep to in winter?—To his farm of Gerston.

24,439. He does not put them off his own farm?—He does not need to do that, because he has the other farm.

24,440. Mr Peter Keith, Agent for Sir Tollemache Sinclair.—About the acreage of Achalibster, I think when you were asked about that this morning, you made a mistake as to the extent of the ground?—Then it was a mere verbal error. I recollect the extent of it perfectly; it is 2130 acres.

24,441. I think you mentioned about 5000 acres?—Oh, that is a mistake then.

24,442. About the application to the County

* See after question 24452.

Thurso. George Logan.

Council, with regard to the purchase of land for small holdings, there was a petition, I think, lodged with the County Council to put the act into active operation, was there not?—Yes.

24,443. And how many signed the petition, do you think?—I think there would be about 15 altogether probably, and they were all tenants in the Murkle district.

24,444. I refer to this property of Durran that you spoke about; is it not the case that there were only two or three names to the petition altogether?—Oh, no, there was a petition, or at least there was a statement made that about 15 had signed.

24,445. But the question is as to the petition; is it not the case that there were only two or else three names to the petition?—I am under the impression that they had all signed it.

24,446. Did you know that one of those who had signed the petition was Mr Oliver, who is the tenant of Sybmister and Stanstill?—I really don't know except that it was stated that there had been a petition sent in.

24,447. What is the custom on your estate with regard to the erection of houses on small farms? What contribution does the proprietor give?—The contribution that the proprietor has hitherto been in the habit of giving has been £10 for the dwelling-house, with all the timber, slates, lime, ridging, and flooring.

24,448. Is it the case that those tenants or several tenants with that assistance have erected houses, which they have been enabled to do from the result of their cartages or other labour at the quarries, or by the result of their earnings at the fishing?—Well, we have been advertising lately; Sir Tollemache caused advertisements to be inserted repeatedly within the present year, to the effect that he was willing to build, at his own sole expense, twenty new houses for small tenants upon the estate; and it is with the greatest difficulty that we can get those small tenants to come forward and say that they will even perform the cartages; for this reason that they say they are generally otherwise employed, and they say besides that the houses they have are tolerably comfortable, and, therefore, they feel content with them as they are.

24,449. But about Forss, there for instance, is it from the produce of the crofts that they have been enabled to build their holdings, or from the earnings outside their crofts?—It is chiefly from their earnings at the quarries, and that is the reason why many of the smaller tenants are unable to perform the cartages, their time is taken up either at the quarries or in carting.

24,450. The houses and steadings are erected by them, not only for their farms but to enable them to carry out their work at the quarries or at carting?—Well, they live there, and their families with them; they cultivate their bits of land, and most of them have, I suppose, 15 or 20 acres.

24,451. Then, with reference to the farms of Brawl and Skinnet, they are arable farms?—Yes.

24,452. And in so far as they have common pasture attached, is not that required for the profitable use of the arable portion of the farm?—It is absolutely required.

[After the sitting, Mr Logan lodged a printed copy from a newspaper of the two advertisements referred to in his evidence. These advertisements were in the following terms :—

ULBSTER ESTATES.

Excellent Arable and Pasture Farms near Thurso.

TO BE LET OR SOLD AS FEUS OF SUCH SIZE AS MAY BE AGREED UPON.

With Entry at Whitsunday First, 1886.

SIR TOLLEMACHE SINCLAIR, having been informed that there is a strong desire on the part of crofters and others to obtain an interest in Co-operative or Club Farms, or to obtain leases or feus of arable or pasture farms of moderate extent, and being desirous to meet their wishes as far as possible, has just succeeded in provisionally arranging with the present tenants of the farms of Glengolly and Bleachfield, on the west side of the river of Thurso, and also with the present tenants of the farms of Geiselittle and Todholes, on the east side of the river, so as to enable him now to let these farms in such lots as may be mutually arranged, with entry thereto at the term of Whitsunday first. Thurso. George Logan

1. The farm of Glengolly extends to 248 acres or thereby, of which 234 acres or thereby are arable, and 14 acres pasture.

2. The farm of Bleachfield consists of 88 acres or thereby, of which about 80 acres are arable, and 8 acres or thereby pasture.

3. The farm of Geiselittle extends to 366 acres or thereby, of which about 256 acres are arable, and 110 acres or thereby pasture; also—

4. The farm of Todholes, with outlying pasture, extends to 475 acres or thereby, of which about 225 acres are arable, and 250 acres of pasture.

Offers will be received by George Logan, factor for the proprietor, on or before Tuesday, the 4th day of December next, at 12 o'clock noon, when the proprietor and factor will be prepared to meet intending offerers with a view to arrange the terms on which leases or feus will be granted for such period as may be mutually arranged.

NOTE.—The proprietor cannot sell or let portions of these farms unless he receives suitable offers for all of them.

THURSO, 21*st September* 1885.

PROPOSED CO-OPERATIVE OR CLUB FARM IN CAITHNESS.

SIR TOLLEMACHE SINCLAIR having been informed that there is a strong desire on the part of crofters and others to obtain an interest in a Co-operative or Club Farm, is prepared to let the farms of Rumsdale, Glenmore and Glendhu, in the parish of Halkirk, at the term of Martinmas or Whitsunday next, on conditions similar to those recently granted by the Duke of Sutherland, or on such other terms as may be agreed on.

These farms consist of 11,937 acres, of which a small portion is arable pasture, and the remainder moor of excellent quality.

Intending offerers to state in what mode they would wish the shares to be divided.

The rent paid prior to Whitsunday 1884 was £335, and that offered them by a grazing tenant was £250. The ground carries about 1200 to 1300 sheep, and the stock will be handed over at valuation at the term of entry.

Offers will be received by George Logan, factor for the proprietor, up to 4th December next, at twelve o'clock noon, on which day the proprietor and factor will be prepared to meet intending shareholders, with a view to adjust the terms on which a lease will be granted for such period as may be mutually arranged.

THURSO CASTLE, 21*st September* 1885.]

PETER KEITH, Solicitor, Thurso (44)—examined. Peter Keith.

24,453.—The Chairman.—You appear for the Ulbster estate?—The Mey estate.

24,454. How long have you been factor?—Two years.

24,455. Who was the previous factor?—My cousin, the late Mr Keith. I have been for about twenty years law agent on the estate, and during the factorship of the previous factor I assisted him frequently in the management of the estate, and I know it pretty well.

24,456. Kindly read your statement.—The gross rental of the properties is £3294, 18s., including the rental of the shootings, and there are altogether 192 tenants on the estates, while two farms are at present in the proprietor's hands. Both these farms were advertised to be let last year, but no let was arranged. One of them is likely now to be let. The rental is made up as follows :—

Parish of Bower, . . .	149	5	0
Canisbay, ...	2752	3	0
Olrig, ...	393	10	0

Thurso. Peter Keith.

The following is a classified list showing the graduated rentals of the various holdings on the estates :—

From the above list it will be seen that while there are 170 tenants paying a rental of under £30 there are only 22 whose rental exceeds that sum, and the rent of the largest farm held by a tenant on the Mey and Canisbay property is only £125, viz., for Hollandmey.

Fifty-five tenants had their rents fixed by the Crofters Commission. Most of the others who were paying rents of under £30 were on lease, and the remainder would not apply to the Commission to have their rent adjusted, although it was the wish of the then proprietor and factor that they should do so. Immediately after the fair rents were fixed by the Commission, the landlord voluntarily granted a reduction of 25 per cent. per annum for a period of five years to all his other tenants, including those under lease.

I notice that some statements were made to your honours regarding the farm of Brabster or Brabstermyre. This property was acquired by the late Lord Caithness only about thirty years ago, and I am unable to give evidence regarding the evictions therefrom alleged to have taken place when the property was in the hands of the former proprietor. It is presently held under lease for fourteen years from 1890 at a rental of £112 by two tenants, Alexander Murray and John Angus, both of whom have been for many years tenants on the Mey estates. Mr Murray was born on his present farm of Brabster, and I think Mr Angus was also born there. Mr Murray was a crofter paying a rent of £13 when he took this farm, and his joint-tenant, John Angus, has still his croft adjoining the farm of Brabster, for which he pays a rent of £7, 10s. This grazing is practically in the occupation of crofters and seems outwith the scope of the remit to your honours.

Their lease provides for suitable land on the farm being brought under cultivation by them, and they are entitled at their outgoing to certain compensation for land so brought under cultivation. They are industrious and hard-working tenants, and will certainly cultivate all that is capable of cultivation to profit. I am satisfied that it would never pay smaller tenants to have patches of this farm given out to them to be brought under cultivation, and would simply render useless the remainder of the farm. The farm is well adapted for its present purpose, and it would not pay either proprietor or tenant to have it let otherwise. Thurso.

There are some small farms and crofts on Brabster held by crofters and other tenants. George Bruce, who held a croft there, had his rent fixed by the Crofters Commission in 1890 at £3, 10s. He had 8 acres arable, 3 roods and 33 poles pasture, besides the right of grazing in Brabster moss to an extent of 107 acres. He voluntarily renounced his croft at Whitsunday 1892, as he found he could make a more comfortable and much better livelihood by himself and his family working as servants on a large farm. The croft was at his request taken off his hands, and he was paid compensation for any improvements he had executed on the holding, and he and his family are now employed on the farm of Reaster. This croft adjoins the holding of David Angus, the total extent of which is about 86 acres, whereof 38 acres are arable, and the rent of which is £22, 10s. It was offered to him as an extension of his holding at the rent fixed by the Crofter Commission, £3, 10s., but he would not take it at all. It was then offered to John Angus whose croft is close to it, and is about 25 acres in extent, and the rent of which is £7, 10s., but neither would he have it. It cannot be let as a separate holding, because it is too small, and the houses will not meet present sanitary requirements. It is therefore still unlet. Peter Keith

In 1868 the late Lord Caithness paid for the construction of the road running through Brabster the sum of £1665, 10s. To account of this sum he received from the County Road Trustees £750, and from Sir John Sinclair £105, and the whole balance of £810, 10s. was paid by his lordship out of his own pocket.

Mr Reid is reported to have said at your honours' sitting in Wick that a deputation waited on the late factor with a view to obtaining the grazing farm of Brabstermyre. It is the case that a deputation did wait on him for this purpose, and he offered to give them the farm at a reasonable rent provided they could satisfy him that they had means to stock it and pay the rent, or provided one of their number—whom he named —would become security for the proper occupation of the farm and the payment of the rent. He gave them a fortnight to arrange this matter, and it was only after they failed that it was let to the present tenants.

With regard to the farm of Hollandmey, it extends to over 2000 acres, whereof 65 are arable. It was let with entry at Whitsunday last at a rent of £125 to Messrs Finlayson, who are industrious, hardworking farmers, and so far as that farm is capable of being profitably brought under cultivation the tenants intend to cultivate it.

I have examined the estate rent ledgers at the beginning of this century, and I find that the larger part of that farm was then in the proprietor's hands ; that there were only three crofters and three or four cottars on the farm, the latter paying a rent of only 2s. 6d. each per annum. I find that one of these crofters, John Coghill is entered as having "given up his tack." Mr Reid states that about fifty years ago some people whom he names lost their holdings at Hollandmey, and he also speaks of them as being put out against their will and settling down in any hole they could find. The first he names as having been evicted is Adam Barnie, whose son, Joseph Barnie, informs me that he (Adam Barnie) left his small holding in Hollandmey about sixty years ago for the very much better and larger farm of Longgoe, on the Mey estate, which farm is till this day occupied by his son, the said Joseph Barnie. The next he names as having been evicted is Peter Nicolson. He left his small holding in Hollandmey for the comparatively large farm of Towerhill, on the Ulbster estate. Another who was said to have been evicted is David Nicolson. He went from Hollandmey and became tenant of the large farm of Ha' of Duncansbay, thereafter becoming tenant of Stemster, on the Mey estates, where he died. Another not named by Mr Reid, John Nicolson, son of David Nicolson, left his small holding in Hollandmey and became tenant of a larger and better farm in Auckingill. The three Nicolsons were the last small tenants on Hollandmey besides the three cottars.

Thurso. Peter Keith.

When the tenants left Hollandmey and Crackersfield others could not be got to take their places and pay the outgoing tenants' valuations, hence the farm was let as a sheep grazing farm.

It would not be practicable to divide this farm up into small holdings to be cultivated to profit. I do not believe that any tenant in such a holding would be able to pay a reasonable amount of interest on the outlay on buildings, &c.

Scriam Hill Park was also spoken of by Mr Reid. This is part of the home farm of Barrogill Mains, and is the only natural pasture of the farm (which extends to about 250 acres arable), and is required for grazing the stock of that arable farm. It is very poor quality of land and not at all suitable for regular cultivation. Rigifa, which was also spoken to, is simply a peat moss, and as the present peat banks are getting exhausted, it is required for peats for the estate.

I see it has been stated that all the houses and offices recently built on the Mey estates were put up by tenants, the proprietor supplying only lime and slates. This is not the case. The proprietor in addition supplied them with flooring, tabling, and ridging, and is to pay them at removal full compensation for the wood, including joiner work.

24,457. Mr Sutherland.—Who, the crofters?—Yes, all the tenants. To all tenants the proprietor, in addition to supplying lime and slates, provided them with flooring, tabling, and ridging, and is to pay them compensation at removal for the wood work.

24,458. Is that the ordinary tenants?—Yes, all the tenants. The crofters will get their compensation fixed under the Crofters Act.

24,459. The Chairman.—What would you estimate the cash value of the flooring, and so on, that the proprietor gives in an ordinary case to be?—I have an estimate here, made up by the previous factor, in which he states distinctly the joiner work of the dwelling-house and offices on a small farm; and for the joiner work of the dwelling-house, including wood and workmanship, but exclusive of cartages, the cost is £33. For the offices the joiner work, exclusive of cartages, is £57, 9s. 6d.

24,460. And may we take these figures as typical?—This estimate was made up some considerable time ago, when perhaps joiner work was very much cheaper than it is at the present moment.

24,461. When was it made up?—It was made up at least twenty years ago.

24,462. Just continue your statement, if you please.—Besides, in most cases he gave them a sum of money, and in several cases helped them with the cartages. He also helped them materially in improving any new land, and did the first ploughing thereof, and in some cases supplied them with tiles for drains and flags for fencing. He had two home farms in his own hands, one on each side of the property, and he assisted crofters and small tenants largely from them. But besides the general assistance he rendered to almost all, some of the cottages and steadings—including the cartages therefor, he wholly erected at his own expense, such as that occupied by Hugh Fraser, Gills, which cost nearly £300, and for interest for this outlay and the rental of the whole croft he gets only £7, 10s. a year. Surely a proprietor may expect 5 per cent. on buildings—a decaying property, but here the proprietor did not get even that, and besides gave his land for absolutely nothing.

In the case of John Wares, Canisbay, the proprietor paid £134 for building the dwelling-house in 1868, and the rental he receives for the house and five acres of land is £8.

The proprietors of the Mey estates have all along acted in a liberal spirit towards their smaller tenants, and instead of carrying out any scheme of eviction, they have always held out inducements to the tenants to remain on the estates. At Whitsunday 1892, the grazings of St. John's Head, extending to 338 acres, were taken from the farm of Barrogill Mains and let to the adjoining crofters, although they were of great value as an outrun to the arable farm of Barrogill Mains. (Signed) PETER KEITH.

Thurso. Peter Keith.

The Durran property belongs also to the same proprietor who is at present prepared to dispose of it, but I think I am right in saying that the petition which was sent to the County Council with a view to test whether or not there was any demand in the County for small holdings was signed by only three people, one of whom was Mr Oliver, one of the largest farmers in the county.

24,463. There is one matter I wish to mention to you. It would be a great convenience to us if you would give us a sight of the estate plans on the estate you represent?—Yes, I will do so. There was a farm on the Mey estate wholly improved by the proprietor out of the heather; a farm of considerable size now.

24,464. What is the name of it?—Phillips Mains.

24,465. Is that the home farm?—It was the home farm for some time; it is likely to be let now. Its extent is 318 acres arable with 45 of pasture. There was a good steading put up on the place and it was well enclosed and well drained, and the rent we can get for it now will not pay interest on the expenditure on buildings and steading alone.

24,466. Mr Sutherland.—You accounted for certain of the tenants who Mr Reid stated were upon the Holland-Mey farm; how many did you account for?—I accounted for those who left last, as I assumed that it was those he referred to.

24,467. He mentioned eight; how many of the eight did you account for?—There were three of them cottars paying only 2s. 6d. a piece, and I accounted for I think the four others.

24,468. And how do you account for the cottars?—I have no record of what became of them excepting that they paid 2s. 6d. of rent, and their rent stops in the rent ledger.

24,469. You do not know what became of them?—No, I do not, but I know that they had nothing but just simply their houses; they had no land. They are simply called cottars.

24,470. I am not talking of them as cottars or as called by any other name; I am talking of them simply as human beings. How many of those in Holland-Mey had actually secured places before they left?—Every-one of those I have mentioned.

24,472. You speak with confidence regarding Barnie's case; do you speak with equal confidence regarding the others?—I do, from the information he supplied to me, he himself being sixteen years of age when he left the place, and it was four years after when the others left. The places were then offered to any one who would take them, but no tenants could be found who were willing to pay the valuations due to the outgoing tenants.

24,473. Did they get these from the landlord?—Doubtless they did, as was the custom.

24,474. Did that custom apply to this period, or only to a more recent period?—It applied then, at all times. There are papers by the factor at a very old date showing that the tenants are entitled to meliorations for the woodwork of their houses.

24,475. Can you say with any reasonable degree of confidence that you are of opinion that they did receive such meliorations?—I do. I say they were entitled to receive them, and as no incoming tenant could be found to pay them, the proprietor had to give them compensation for these.

24,476. But you assert that they received such compensation?—Such compensation as they were entitled to.

24,477. Of the nature you state?—Yes, of the nature I state. I don't know the amount.

24,478. Have you any reasonable theory to suggest with regard to this exodus on the part of the Holland-Mey tenants?—Yes, I think probably their houses would be very much decayed and possibly no tenant would care to give them valuation for the timber, and the work on the new houses, and the land was not worth very much for cultivation, and as they were offered very much better land elsewhere, in good arable farms they naturally preferred that.

Thurso. Peter Keith.

24,479. They were very substantial men?—They must have been before they could have taken these places.

24,480. And also judging from the nature of the ruins we see on the farms?—Judging from the farms which they took after they left this place, one would consider that they were men of some means.

24,481. You said that Holland-Mey was the biggest farm on the Mey estate; is that the farm rented at £125?—Yes. I should perhaps say regarding their having means, of course the conditions of living then were very different from what they are now. They would probably save a great deal of money now spent on ordinary maintenance, food, and clothing; and there was probably a great deal less artificial manure and feeding stuffs used in these days.

24,482. That makes it all the more difficult to understand why they left?—They left for better places.

24,483. How do you account for the fact that there is no such desire on the part of the people now-a-days to leave the place?—I believe there is the same desire yet, where they can get bigger or better places. The matter was put to the test in the case of Brabster where they were offered this farm not at the highest rent nor the lowest, but at a medium rent provided they would satisfy the factor that they could stock the place and use it properly; and he agreed to accept one of their own number as security and gave them a fortnight to consider it; and yet they refused to comply with the conditions.

24,484. It would altogether depend on the conditions?—The only conditions were that they would give security for the proper use of the farm and the payment of the rent.

24,485. Those are all the conditions that, in your opinion, weighed with them in not making the application?—They either could not or would not satisfy the factor that they could pay the rent and properly use the place; and this tenant whom he named refused to become cautioner for his neighbouring tenants.

24,486. That depends, I am sure you will be prepared to admit, on the nature of the satisfaction wanted by the factor?—I don't think he would be difficult to satisfy, especially seeing he was perfectly willing to accept one of themselves as cautioner. It is the case also that this man whom he wished to accept as cautioner came afterwards and said he would take the farm himself if he would get it excluding the others, but he was not willing to become security for the others.

24,487. It is adjoining, I suppose, the smallest holders on the estate?—No, the Slickly holders have pretty extensive crofts. I can give you the acreage of their crofts if you like.

24,488. What I wanted more was the boundary between the Slickly people and the Holland-Mey farm. I think if you can give that to our Surveyor it will be useful?—Yes, I can do so, the smallest holdings are on the island of Stroma, chiefly fishermen paying £1 or £2 for the crofts.

24,489. In your opinion is not part of the farm of Holland-Mey, beyond what is actually under crop, fit for cultivation?—Yes, there are only three fields in cultivation at the present moment, but there are other three which are to be cultivated just now, and the arrangement with the incoming tenants is that they will cultivate these three fields, and more if they find it profitable.

24,490. Would you kindly tell us whether these fields were cultivated before?—They were not cultivated during Mr Purves's tenure of the farm, and he was twenty-one years there.

24,491. And is it a condition of the new lease that the incoming tenant shall keep these under rotation?—It is a condition that he shall cultivate them.

24,492. Or is it limited merely to his outgoing crops?—No, he has to keep them in regular cultivation.

24,493. Is it a fact that it was a condition in the old lease that the tenant should leave so much in cultivation?—It was a condition that if the tenant would find it more profitable to leave it in pasture as he got it he would be at liberty to do so, but during the last five years of his lease he was unconditionally bound to cultivate the whole of these six fields which were previously uncultivated. Thurso. Peter Keith

24,494. In order to give them to the succeeding tenant in rotation, I presume?—Yes, that would be the reason, no doubt. But he afterwards asked permission to depart from this condition. He was a very experienced farmer, and found it would not in his view be profitable to cultivate those fields, and that they would be of infinitely more value to him as good pasture land in connection with the farm then under cultivation. He, therefore, asked permission to depart from that condition of his lease; and he was allowed to depart from it until the last year.

24,495. In fact if he let it run out he would not have to pay any labour for the cultivation of it?—That may have been one of the circumstances, but that could not have been the chief object. The chief reason was that the land was very valuable ground as a sheep run for the remainder of the farm.

24,496. Is the condition in the new tenant's lease the same?—No, there is no such condition, his condition is to cultivate all those six fields, and as much more as he may find it profitable to cultivate. Of course, if he were to ask permission, if he found it was not profitable to cultivate any one field he might get permission so to do, but at the present moment he is bound to cultivate the whole.

JAMES MACKIDD, Farmer, Thurso East (67)—examined. James Mackidd.

24,497. The Chairman.—You are a farmer?—Yes.

24,498. And your farm is Thurso East farm?—Yes.

24,499. What statement do you desire to make?—I have no statement to make.

24,500. Your name is given up to me as that of one wishing to make a short statement; is that not correct?—Well, I have no particular statement to make, but that I am the tenant of that farm, and I am ready to answer any questions that may be asked of me.

24,501. Mr Gordon.—Are you not tenant of some of the hill farms?—I am joint-tenant of Dalnaglaton.

24,502. We were over that place. Is it a ewe stock farm?—Yes.

24,503. And do you winter your ewes up there?—Some of them.

24,504. What is your rent?—£155.

24,505. How many ewes have you?—About 700 in the summer time, and about 400 or 500 in the winter time.

24,506. In keeping up your stock, how many gimmers or ewe hoggs have you?—140 to 150.

24,507. Where do you winter them?—In the low ground. We let them out to wintering.

24,508. Have you two shepherds at Dalnaglaton?—Yes, two hirsels.

24,509. Now, as to your ewes there, do you find it necessary to feed them at any time during the winter, to hand feed them?—I am sorry to say too often.

24,510. Are you the highest up tenant in the glen of Strathmore, who keeps a ewe stock?—I am.

24,511. And at your place you find it necessary to hand feed them?—Yes.

24,512. Is that usual or only occasional?—Well, two years ago I had to send up, I suppose, about 600 or 800 stones of hay to feed them during the storm. I could not get them taken down. As a usual thing they have to be hand fed every year; we send up oats and oilcake for that.

24,513. Do you winter the hoggs upon Thurso East farm?—No, I let them out to wintering.

24,514. What do you pay for the wintering?—7s. 6d. last year, and 7s. this year.

24,515. That would be from £50 to £60?—Yes,

about £60. This year I have about 180 out at wintering.

24,516. Fully £60 has thus to be added to your rent?—Yes.

24,417. The main thing for me to know is as to the wintering up there. You say, as a rule, the stock has to be hand fed?—Yes.

24,518. Have you not enough of hay ground on the farm to keep the sheep,—within the farm?—No, and you cannot depend on getting a good crop out of the ground up there.

24,519. Do you mean a crop of oats, or a crop of hay?—A crop of oats, or a green crop either.

24,520. Is it liable to frost?—It is liable to mildew and frost.

24,521. Do the shepherds cultivate at all?—Not an acre; not an inch.

24,522. In point fact, they do not?—They do not.

24,523. And is the reason why they do not cultivate their fear lest it should be frosted, and they would not get the good of the crop?—It is perhaps not once in twenty years that they could get anything out of it that would be worth cutting.

24,524. It is no doubt a fact that we saw very good crop in Rumsdale?—This is an exceptional year; I have not seen the like of it for twenty years.

24,525. Very good corn, turnips, and potatoes?—But if it was last year or the year before, or the year before that, it would have gone all to rot.

24,526. And, as a matter of fact, your shepherds do not cultivate?—They do not. All the food they get to live on is sent up to them.

24,527. Mr Sutherland.—Why is it that you do not winter the sheep on your own low ground farm?—I am only the joint-tenant of this other farm, and I don't want to interfere with my own farm, which is a different concern altogether; I don't want to mix up the two together, because the farm I have at Thurso East is solely my own.

24,528. But that is the sole reason why you have to pay for the wintering of your sheep?—Well, it is not the sole reason; it might be more profitable for me to pay for them out at the wintering than even to winter them on my own farm.

24,529. But you could if you wished make an arrangement to winter them on your own farm?—I could by charging the other tenant with an account of that.

24,530. You don't want to mix up the accounting of the farms?—No. [Mr Gordon.—I think you are getting them wintered more cheaply than you could at home?—That is my opinion.]

24,531. What is the general elevation of the land up there?—I think about 500 or 600 feet above sea level.

24,532. That is the house of Dalnaglaton?—Yes.

24,533. It is not so high up then as Dalganachan?—Well, there is only two miles of difference between the two places.

24,534. The house at Dalganachan is in the hollow, is it?—Yes, but some of the farm is on the high ground.

24,535. It is above the level of the river, is it?—It is a little above the level, but some of the low ground is liable to be covered with water from the river.

24,536. You stated also in reply to a question by Mr Gordon, a fact of which we have some general knowledge, viz., that this is an exceptional year?—I did.

24,537. And then that was the reason why there were such good crops at Rumsdale?—Assuredly; if you had gone there last year you would have seen a different state of matters.

24,538. Two years ago, you said you had to send up hay?—Two years ago I had to send it up to Altnabreac.

24,539. Was not the winter two years ago an exceptional winter?—No, it was not, it was just as bad last year, or nearly so, but I made other provision.

24,540. That was an exceptional winter too?—No, it was not an exceptional winter.

24,541. Have you more severe weather in winter there than in any other place?—Yes, I suppose we have, because it stands so high; the snow lies there weeks after it is away from here altogether.

Thurso. James Mackidd.

24,542. Naturally, because it is 600 feet while this is at sea level. But do you know of severe weather there when there is no severe weather elsewhere?—Often; I have often been up there when it was torrents of rain and very windy weather, and down here it was beautiful sunshine.

24,543. Do you know of any place, in your experience, where sheep are wintered at a higher elevation than Dalganachan?—There may be sheep wintered at a higher elevation, but they must take a part of them away to the wintering in the low ground; they cannot winter the same number as they graze in summer.

24,544. The pasture is wetter, of course, in winter. Then, with regard to your statement that you could not raise hay, you see the marks of the old cultivation along the river, don't you?—I have often walked over it.

24,545. Have you seen the plough ridges?—I have seen a lot of sheep drains.

24,546. And plough ridges?—I cannot say I have ever seen plough ridges, but I have seen a lot of sheep drains grown up and filled up again.

24,547. You saw no evidence of old cultivation along the river?—I could not say; I did not look for it, but I saw plenty evidence of sheep drains.

24,548. Are you prepared to deny that there was cultivation?—No, I am not, because I have heard of cultivation there, and I have heard of the people there being obliged to bleed the cattle for blood to keep themselves alive during the winter many times.

24,549. When did that happen?—It might be perhaps half a century, or maybe three quarters of a century ago.

24,550. But you believe hearsay rather than eyesight, do you?—It is not eyesight.

24,551. I am referring to what is visible to the eye, what we see?—What about?

24,552. The marks of old cultivation along the river?—The cultivation along the river side is principally, in my opinion, old sheep drains.

24,553. You did not see any marks of field cultivation?—I could not see a mark of field, but I saw the mark of old houses.

24,554. What had these houses been do you think?—I cannot tell you.

24,555. Mr Peter Keith.—If there had been cultivation there, is it not likely that that cultivation had not been to profit?—Most assuredly it was not to profit, seeing it was abandoned. [The Chairman.—Does that follow?—If there had been cultivation.]

24,556. Is it not the case that supposing there was cultivation there, the spring frosts are very much later there than here?—Maybe from a fortnight to three weeks or a month later than they would be here, in consequence of the severity of the weather and the quantity of snow lying on the ground.

24,557. And would the young crop not be very likely to be killed by the frosts in spring?—I have no doubt it would.

24,558. Assuming that they survived that and came to harvest, is it not the case that the crops would be very much later in ripening up there than here?—There is no doubt about that. Look at the reclamations made by the Duke of Sutherland.

24,559. Mr Sutherland.—What do you wish to say about these reclamations?—They are going all to waste again.

24,560. Did you see the crops that were raised there?—Many a time, and I was there when the reclamations were going on.

24,561. Do you know the Achintoul farm?—Yes.

24,562. Do you see the crops they raise there? Is there better in Caithness?—I know that: I am referring more particularly to Kinbrace. I was one of the party invited by the late Duke of Sutherland to come up there and see the reclamations when they were going on.

24,563. Have you seen the crops growing there?—I have seen the crops two or three times a season.

Thurso. James Mackidd.

24,564. Is there a better crop in Caithness than grows there?—Oh, well, I pity Caithness if not.

24,565. Mr Keith.—Then, at the low ground there beside the river, is it not the case that the river very frequently overflows its banks?—Very frequently.

24,566. And spreads over the clean ground beside the river?—Yes.

24,567. You are tenant of Thurso East farm? What is the acreage of it?—About 510 acres I think.

24,568. You entered it in 1874 on a nineteen years' lease?—Yes. I entered into a new lease last Whitsunday.

24,569. And at the time you entered the great part of it, almost the whole of it was under cultivation?—All except about 60 acres or thereby of hill pasture.

24,570. And did you continue to cultivate it?—Yes.

24,571. On what shift?—On the fifth shift.

24,571. And have you stopped cultivating a portion of it at present?—I have thrown about 250 acres of it out into permanent pasture, with the consent and approval of my proprietor.

24,573. That was recently done?—It was done, some eight years ago and some six years ago.

24,574. What was the cause of your doing that?—Because it was not paying me. The amount of expenses incurred for manures and labour and every other expense connected with it was so heavy that I was losing money yearly.

24,575. And you consider it was better to give the land a rest?—I asked my proprietor if he would allow me to throw it out to grass, and I got his consent at once. I told him I was losing money by it.

24,576. And you considered also probably that a rest would improve it?—Yes; it might improve it, and that was one of the reasons I stated; I thought if it was put out in permanent pasture it might improve the value of the land, and so it has.

24,577. The Chairman.—But your main motive was because you could not cultivate the land to profit?—That is so.

24,578. Mr Keith.—And is it the case that it is possible to cultivate only the best arable land of the county to profit?—I say that one third of the land in cultivation in this county just now should be out in pasture. I distinctly say that: it is my experience in regard to the farm of Thurso East. When I cultivated the whole of it, I could only keep about 300 sheep and about 60 head of cattle; now when I have thrown it out to pasture I have concentrated my efforts upon the good land, and am able to carry about 450 sheep on the same farm and about 80 to 90 head of cattle, with one half of the turnips I raised before.

24,579. Mr Sutherland.—What proportion do you say should be let out?—I say one-third of land in permanent cultivation should be in pasture, because it will not pay.

42,580. The Chairman.—You mean in view of the present prices and in present circumstances?—And having regard to the seasons. Our climate here is very variable.

24,581. Mr Keith.—It is not the case that two years ago the turnip crop for instance, in this county, was a complete failure?—Two years ago the turnip crop, part of my own and I may say of all in the county, was a complete failure.

24,582. And the only profitable way of occupying the arable farm is to throw some of it into pasture?—Just so. By throwing mine into pasture I was enabled to dispense with two pairs of horses, which was a saving of £150 to £160 a year to me.

24,583. Supposing you lost the 250 acres of this common pasture, what reduction of rent would you expect for that pasture ground taken off?—I could hardly ask my proprietor to divide my rent in two.

24,584. What do you consider an expert would award?—I should say I would get a reduction of, at least, £100.

24,585. Have you an idea of the cost of forming a farm out of hill ground, i.e., to reclaim it, trench it, and drain it, and to erect the houses and necessary buildings?—It depends on what sort of ground it is.

24,586. The Chairman.—Have you ever sat down to make an estimate of that on paper?—No. Thurso. James Mackidd.

24,587. Have you ever sat down to consider it with paper and pencil?—I could do it; it would depend very much on the nature of the ground

24,588. But you have not considered the problem on paper?—Well, I have considered it so far, but as I said before very much depends on the nature of the ground.

24,589. Mr Sutherland.—And have you ever actually reclaimed any land?—I have not, but I know what the cost of reclaiming ground is pretty well.

24,590. Mr Keith.—If this particular portion of your farm was divided off into lots, have you any notion as to what the necessary work would cost?

24,591. The Chairman.—The question is of great importance, and if the witness was able to say that he had sat down and considered the thing, making up a debit and credit side and bringing out the result it would have been important; but I rather gather from him that he has not done so?—I have not, because I require to be told what ground it is that is to be improved.

24,592. And the kind of building and steading wanted, and then you would require to be asked as a skilled man to make up a statement and account showing debit and credit and bringing out the result?—Yes, that is so.

24,593. Mr Sutherland.—Have you formed any idea in your own mind as to how long the circumstances that will operate in the way you suggested (throwing land out of cultivation) is likely to go on? Do you see any hope of any change?—I do not expect they will get better; my opinion is that they are going to get worse.

24,594. That would, therefore, necessitate the throwing of more land out of cultivation?—Certainly, and I say it is the only profitable way you can use it. This county is what we call a rearing county, that is to say you rear cattle; it is not a county adapted for fattening cattle, as it is too cold for that.

24,595. Would the operation stop anywhere provided the tendency was that way; or would you put all land out of cultivation?—No, but I would only cultivate the very best land.

24,596. Where would the necessity for the operation cease?—I have given you an example of that in my own case. I had 500 acres under the plough when I cultivated, and I wrought away at it for ten or twelve years, and found I was losing money upon the thin ground. I, therefore, asked permission from my landlord, and he allowed me to throw so much out, and I am able to carry more stock now when I am only cultivating one half than I was before.

24,597. How far would that tendency go on in your opinion? Would it go on until the land went out of cultivation altogether?—I don't think it should do that, because I think really good land from which you can depend upon getting a crop ought to be kept in cultivation; but where you have to cultivate thin land, and have no certainty in our variable seasons of getting a crop out of it, then I think it is time to throw it out.

24,598. How much, in your opinion, of land that is really fit for cultivation is in Caithness?—I know a great extent of Caithness for I have had a long experience, and I believe that fully a third of it now under the plough should be thrown out into permanent pasture.

24,599. That is under the circumstances which exist to-day; but suppose matters get worse, would not you put more out of cultivation?—I would put all the bad land out that is not worth cultivating; I certainly would.

HELMSDALE, SUTHERLANDSHIRE,

WILLIAM MACDONALD, Crofter, Navidale (56) —examined.

24,600. The Chairman.—You are a crofter in Navidale?—Yes.

24,601. Was your case dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—No.

24,602. Have you a written statement?—Yes.

24,603. Just read it if you please.—We would beg to submit the following statement in respect to the parish of Kildonan. It may be said to contain about 210 square miles of land, comprising mountain, heath, hill pasture, arable, and rocky ground. Excepting the village of Helmsdale and the adjacent townships of Navidale, East and West Helmsdale, Gartymore, and Marrel, there are comparatively few people living beyond these places. It may be described as a wilderness, unless a shepherd or gamekeeper's house may crop up at intervals of miles. Shooting lodges have appeared more frequently within the last few years. At Badanloch there is a large establishment with the usual dependents nestling around, standing in bold relief amongst a vast tract of country wholly devoted to sport. A few hundreds of sheep are now kept where thousands were reared annually since the clearances. In the beginning of the century the following places were occupied by prosperous and comfortable tenants and sub-tenants in that and the surrounding districts, viz.:—Rumsdale, five tenants; Garvault, two tenants; Truderscaig, twenty tenants; Halamdary, six tenants. In this place there was a tacksman of the name of Macleod who rented the township for £5 sterling, and sub-let part of it to other five tenants at £1 each. Gearnsary was on the same footing; the tacksman was Macpherson, and it was sub-let to other four tenants. Breackachu had also five tenants; the tacksman was Gordon. In Fenafall [Fe-na-fola] there were two tenants, Andrew Gordon and John Grant. In Dalcharn, two tenants, Alexander and Robert Gordon. A number of tenants occupied the following places:—Borrabol, Altandoun, Askaig, Brenakyle, Reisg, three tenants, Tomich, Achrimsdale, Achin, Fairanich, Ceanna-bhaithe, Leiribol, Langal Park and Loiste.

In West Badanloch, the following tenants were burnt out in one day by Donald Bannerman alias 'Sgrios' and his fire brigade, under the command of the notorious Patrick Sellar:—Donald Gunn, William Macbeath, Adam Gordon, Angus Gunn, John Gunn, Donald Macdonald, Benjie Sutherland, James Gordon, Hugh Matheson, John Sutherland, and Widow Matheson.

In Badanloch there were also Murdoch Mackenzie, Donald Mackay, Alexander Mackay, Neil Mackay, John Gordon, Samuel Matheson, John Mackay, and Mr Macpherson, Schoolmaster.

In Badaclamhan, William Gunn, Robert Gordon, Hugh Gordon, and Kenneth Macleod. In Achnahuaigh, Lieutenant Gunn and Robert Gunn, brothers, Robert Mackay and Widow Matheson. In Claggan, David Ross, Miller, and Robert Macdonald. In Torrogordston two tenants; in Ellich, two; in Corrish, three; in Airidh-Chlinidh, two (Mackays); in Griamacharry, four (Gordon, tacksman, John Mackay, Alexander Grant, and Joseph Mackay, the last two were officers in the British army, along with four sons). Cnocfinn is a large place and had a considerable number of well-to-do people living in it. Achintoul had six tenants; Reannacknarach, two; Achenaiken, two (Alexander Gunn and David Gunn); Kinbrace, five; Suisgill, four; Dalbuie, one; Achnanrinnan, two; Kildonan, five; Dieble, Dalhalomey, Balvalliach, Bady, Costelli, Canikyle, Skalapsdale, Preseneim, Achanacunaig, Coolen, Torrish, Kil-Pheadair, Corrag, Saliscraggy, Daliel, Caen, Balnakyle, Brecken, Killearnan, Ullipsdale, Guillable, Craggy, Eldrable, Connachie, Crotch, and Gruidstary had also their respective quota of tenants allotted to them. Between Caen and Kildonan there were about eighty-two families. Cill-Pheadair and Caen, which are parts of Navidale, have an area of 3200 acres. Twenty-one families originally occupied land in this district and lived in comparative comfort, each one possessing four horses, six cattle and fifty sheep on an average. The following are the names of tenants:—John Macpherson, Widow Polson, William Polson 'Bain,' George Bruce, Alexander Ross, John Gordon, Donald Mackay, John Mackay, Charles Polson, John Polson, Widow Fraser, John Gilchrist, William Polson, Alexander Polson, George Gunn, Angus Macleod, Donald Sutherland, William Gordon, George Munro, Alexander Murray, Donald Ross, Miller, Cill-Pheadair, and John Gordon, tenant. The farm of Kildonan comprises an area of 8960 acres of pasture and arable land. There are only about 30 acres under crop there, and in Torrish two. The farm of Suisgill has 5987 acres hill pasture; the farm of Kinbrace, 4665 acres, and is divided into two farms, Kinbrace and Burnfoot, with 71 acres under crop, 36 and 35 respectively. The farm of Achintoul has 14,894 acres, of which 513 have been reclaimed, and is divided into two farms, Achintoul and Blarmhor, 410 acres belong to Achintoul and 93 to Blarmor. The 93 acres are nearly all cultivated, except a few acres of deep moss, and out of the 410 acres about 30 only are cultivated, the rest being under sheep, cattle and horses. A great part of it is deep moss and cannot be ploughed by horses. Tordu and Claggan have 7385 acres, divided into two farms, Harvieston and Claggan. Harvieston has 200 acres of reclaimed land, 50 acres of which are under crop, including meadow hay, the rest under sheep, cattle and horses. Claggan has 55 acres of reclaimed land, of which two or three acres only are under crop, the rest being under sheep, cattle and horses. Badanloch has 6570 acres, of which 153 acres are reclaimed land; about one-half is under meadow hay, the rest being under sheep and horses. Bannockburn, Lochside and Cnocfionn have 4890 acres, of which 325 are reclaimed land, only 3½ acres being cultivated, and about 20 acres used for meadow hay. There are three dwelling-houses with steadings attached, all of which form one farm in the hands of Mr John Gunn of Aldie: all under sheep.

24,604. Are any of the dwelling-houses occupied?—Not that I am aware of, with the exception of one that the shepherd lives in. Halamdary is now in the hands of the proprietor as a shooting. It carried 1000 sheep (all cleared away).

24,604*a*. Is it part of a forest?—It is a deer forest as far as I understand.

24,604*b*. Are there no sheep on it?—No.

24,605. Then, is there old arable there?—Yes, there is arable land which had tenants at one time. The following places which are now occupied by J. G. Muir, Esq., the shooting tenant at Badanloch, carried sheep stock as follows:—Achnamoine, 400; Breackachu, 600; Badanloch, 700; Garvault, 700; Gearnsary, 400; Griamachany, 500; and Airidh-Chlinidh, 300; total 3600. On the same ground there are only 700 sheep at present. The above figures show the winter stock only; it was nearly double during the summer months, and these few sheep are only kept to show that nominally it is a sheep farm, whereas it is actually a deer forest.

24,605*a*. Is there a stock of deer on it at present?—Yes.

Helmsdale, Sutherlandshire.

William Macdonald.

24,605*b*. And is deer stalking being carried on at present on this ground?—Oh, yes. The following places now tenanted by E. Sykes, and Sykes and Pilkington had also sheep stock amounting to 3000. Altandoun, 2000; Borrobol, 500; Dalcharn, 500. At present there are only about 1500 on the same ground, and it is actually a deer forest. The rents paid by J. G. Muir are:—Badanloch sheep farm, £500; shooting and angling, £1290; Edmund Sykes, Altandoun, sheep farm, £300; shooting and angling, Borrobol, £535; Frank Sykes and Edward Pilkington, Borrobol, and Dalcharn sheep farm, £350. Proprietor, Halamdary shootings, £90. Frank Hardcastle, Suisgill, shooting and angling, £870. A. H. J. Bruce, Killearnan and Suisgill, grazing farms, £595; shooting and angling, £425. Thomas Scott, Garvault, grazing, £70; shooting, £70. John Hick, Achintoul shootings, £317, 10s. Alex. Macfarlane, Torrish and Navidale, shootings and angling, £725 (Navidale is disjoined for the shooting now, we have not got the new valuation roll and cannot find out the exact rent, but so far as our information goes it is £725). John Gunn of Aldie, Bannockburn, Knockfinn and Lochside, sheep farm, £140. Craggy, which forms part of the grazing farm of Killearnan, had alone 1800 sheep which have been reduced to 850 or thereabout. The townships of Achrantal, Tuarrie, and Halgarry are situated in this district and have been omitted from those referred to above. They are on the farms of Killournan and Suisgill. The rental of crofts in the several townships along the seaboard of the parish amounts to £439, and these formerly belonged to the parish of Loth but have been added to Kildonan after the clearances for the semblance of population. The parish church which is situated at Kildonan had to be vacated, and a church manse and glebe erected at Helmsdale. The making of the glebe also disturbed a tenant whose entire improvements were confiscated for that purpose. The farm of Navidale is bounded by a dyke which separates it from the common grazing of the crofters. It can easily be seen that where the dyke begins at Alt Scriegle the old parish boundary, the burn, with all its grazing advantages, was taken into the farm. And very recently a large piece of the best ground was cut off from the common pasture and enclosed for the erection of a gamekeeper's house and garden.

As an illustration of the prohibitive measures adopted by sportsmen, a young woman of eighteen years of age was crossing a moor about the end of last August carrying a bundle of clothes to her sister, who was in service with a forester. When she was sighted by the sportsman he ordered one of his gamekeepers to order her off the ground, and she was told most emphatically to never come that way again. The route the young woman was taking was a well known old drove road, and instead of her being permitted to walk a distance of four miles, she was compelled to travel fifteen miles by the highway. Another is that the freshwater lochs which have been open to the public since the creation of the world or time immemorial, have been lately closed against fishing, and anyone who does not pay fabulous rents to his Grace for permission to do so, cannot entertain such an idea.

(Signed) Wm. Macdonald, Alex. Gunn, Donald Watson, William Matheson.

24,606. I take it you are a native of this district?—Yes.

24,606*a*. Where were you born?—I was born in Caithness, in Strathmore, but I was brought up in the parish of Kildonan here.

24,607. And have lived here all your life?—All my life.

24,607*a*. You have given us a great deal of information in that paper, going back to the commencement of the earlier years of this century?—Yes.

24,608. May I ask you where did you derive that information?—We had a committee who gathered this from a few old people living still, a very few, who are able to give this information.

24,609. The information as to the past was obtained from them?—Yes.

24,610. How many of these people are there?—There are not very many now; I suppose nine or ten would be about the outside of the number.

Helmsdale Sutherlandshire.

William Macdonald.

24,611. Who did the committee get the information from principally?—There are one or two people on the Strath of Kildonan here, natives of the Strath, who had lived there without being removed from it; that is at the top of the parish. One of the delegates is here present, William Matheson by name. We have got a good deal of information from him, and from an old woman there called Isabella Elder, I think.

24,612. What is her age?—I am not exactly sure, but she will be about eighty.

24,613. Between eighty and ninety years of age?—I am told not more than fifty or sixty, but I think she is an older woman. Her father lived in Badanloch, and they were never removed.

24,614. But you got your information mainly from old witnesses who can remember the clearances, some of them at least?—Oh, yes, some of them, but others again had it from their fathers or predecessors.

24,615. And were all these people that you got information from people of the district?—Yes.

24,616. Whose parents if not they themselves were witnesses of the clearances?—Yes. Most of the people who live here now are the descendants of the people here on the Strath.

24,617. The statements made in that paper so far as not dependent on your own knowledge are, I take it, correct to the best of your belief?—Yes, from the best information we could get about the state of matters in those times.

24,618. And your paper deals with matters from about the commencement of the century to the present time?—To the present time.

24,619. Is it the fact that the modern part of your paper is within your own knowledge?—So much of it; other parts have been got from people who are more intimately acquainted with these matters and have been witnesses of what had taken place.

24,620. Now, may we gather from your paper that in your judgment there is a considerable area of land which we ought to inspect and consider with a view to the purpose of this remit?—Yes.

24,621. To what particular purpose is such land suited?—In my opinion it is suitable both for agriculture and for grazing as well, as it had been formerly.

24,622. Both for rotation of crop and for extension of grazings?—Exactly.

24,623. Is some of the land suitable for new settlements?—Yes.

24,624. Where would you direct our attention particularly to land suitable for that purpose?—The principal part of the land, the old arable and a great deal of the land that could be reclaimed, is not on the strath proper but on the branches that lead off from the strath, for instance on the Badanloch side and Altandoun; there is a good deal more arable land in that direction than on the main river.

24,625. That is in the valley of the river Helmsdale?—Yes.

24,625*a*. You invite our attention then to smaller glens running up from glen Helmsdale?—Yes.

24,626. And you mention particularly Allt-an-duin and Badanloch?—Yes, but there are several places on the river Helmsdale itself which could be very easily reclaimed that had been reclaimed before; and then there is a good deal of reclaimed land which cannot be distinctly made out now as it has gone under heather and rush now.

24,627. Then, you say there is both land which has been reclaimed but now run out that could be restored, and also land not yet reclaimed which could be reclaimed to profit?—Yes.

24,628. And you and those who act with you can show us both, I suppose?—Oh, yes.

24,629. You mentioned the farm of Kildonan with 8900 acres, of which 30 acres are arable, and 2 other arable at Torrish. Is that arable land of 30 acres all under crop now?—Yes, but that does not include all the old arable land in the district.

Helmsdale, Sutherland-shire. William Macdonald.

24,630. As to the old arable land, can we still see traces of the cultivation on it?—Yes.

24,631. Then, you mentioned the farms of Achintoul and Tordu and Claggan; also Harveston and Claggan. You said there were 200 acres reclaimed, 50 of which are under crop?—That includes meadow hay.

24,632. The remainder is under permanent grazing?—Yes, under sheep and cattle and horses.

24,633. And is it land suitable for the purposes of the remit?—Well, it had been reclaimed for the purpose of cultivating it.

24,634. Reclaimed by whom?—By the Duke of Sutherland.

24,635. Was it part of his well known reclamations?—Yes, on the Strath of Kildonan.

24,636. Part of what are known as the Kildonan reclamations, but now run into grass?—Yes.

24,637. Why has it been allowed to run into grass do you think? Is it because it could not be used as arable to profit, or for what reason?—I think there could have been very much better land reclaimed on the Strath of Kildonan than the lands that had been reclaimed by the Duke. I do not believe that most of the land that had been reclaimed by his Grace the Duke of Sutherland is the most profitable for cultivation.

24,638. You think there is other land that could have been more profitably reclaimed?—Yes.

24,639. Is it your view that a large part of the land that was reclaimed should have been let alone?—I think so.

24,640. Then, would you touch it now?—I think it would be more profitable just to leave it in grass.

24,641. Can you point us to the land that you think might have been more advantageously reclaimed by the late Duke than the land what was reclaimed?—Oh, yes.

24,642. Where is it?—There is better land on the Badanloch side.

24,643. In what farm is the Badanloch land?—Alltandoun and Fearnaich, and several other small places that I have not got the names of. I know the places because I have travelled the ground. Then there are several parts of ground attached to these places that have never been reclaimed and could easily be reclaimed; they do not require anything, but just to drain and plough it.

24,644. You think that land might profitably be reclaimed now?—I think so.

24,645. Either by proprietor or by tenants?—Or by tenants.

24,646. Have you made any estimate of the total area of land in this district, and of what you have been speaking in this document, that we ought to consider and inspect?—About the area I am not clear; I could not distinctly say the number of acres as I am not clear about that.

24,647. But are there considerable tracts of ground?—Yes, there are.

24,648 Is there a demand in this quarter among crofters and small tenants here for additional land?—Yes, if they can get it on advantageous terms.

24,649. You mean by advantageous terms, at a fair rent?—Yes.

24,650. And do you also include under that expression assistance, or do you not?—In some cases, no doubt assistance would be required; in other cases it would not.

24,651. Take the majority, what would the prevailing rule be?—I think in the majority of cases there would be assistance required; but in a great many cases men with rising families would be able to take places without any assistance at all.

24,652. Do you think, having regard to the effects of the Education Act of 1872, young men would be willing to take crofts and endeavour to make them profitable, rather than push their way elsewhere?—I think it would be quite as safe for them to take crofts as to try and make a living otherwise, seeing that the competition for every position in life is so very keen.

24,653. I quite follow that, but what do you think is the prevailing feeling among the young men of the district?—I think they would take good crofts.

24,654. They would be quite ready to take good crofts and endeavour to work them to a profit rather than look to pushing their fortunes elsewhere?—Exactly.

Helmsdale, Sutherland-shire. William Macdonald.

24,655. You think that feeling is as strong in the breasts of the younger generation as it undoubtedly is in the minds of older men?—Yes.

24,656. You mentioned a number of sporting subjects which formerly carried a much larger number of sheep than they do now?—Yes.

24,657. Are you of opinion that such a number of sheep as these lands carried in former times, they could carry still if the sheep were put upon them?—No, I do not think so. I believe that the ground has deteriorated in such a manner that it would not carry the same stock now, because in a great many cases as I have before stated where the land was once green it has now grown under heather and rushes, and a great part of it has grown under fog. So that it is of no use as aliment.

24,658. Then, what would you propose with regard to these lands?—What I would propose is that these lands be reclaimed again and put into rotation, and I have no doubt they would grow both grass and corn. I may state that there are crops growing 600 or 700 feet above sea level as good as are in the county of Sutherland to-day. The railway at the county boundary between Caithness and Inverness is, I understand, 700 feet above sea level, and between four and five miles from the side of this, that is at Achintoul and Blairmore, Burnfoot and Kinbrace, there are lands that grow as good crops as can be got upon the coast side.

24,659. In short, is this your view that the height above sea level is of less consequence than the situation of the ground where the crops are grown, protected from particular winds; that is to say, that you may have ground at a very high level which will grow good crops, because it lies behind hills or high grounds that protect it from prevailing winds?—Well, of course, these places, I have no doubt, are more subject to adverse climate than the low lying ground on the coast side; but at the same time these places have been giving good crops in the past, and I have no doubt that, with the great difference in cultivation now and the increase of knowledge about cultivation, it could be cultivated at the present time to great advantage.

24,660. In short, you think the mere fact that particular land is very high above sea level, is not necessarily against it yielding a good average crop if it gets a fair chance?—No.

24,661. Are the people for whom you speak well acquainted with the system of rotation?—Yes, and they state that the whole of the small crofters along the seaboard here at the present time try as far as their crofts permit to cultivate on the five shift system.

24,662. They carry that rule as far as the size of the crofts will allow them?—Exactly.

24,663. Is that system pursued even upon small holdings?—Yes. In former times they cultivated the whole of their crofts; but the land came to be so very unprofitable that it did not in some cases return the seed that was put into it. The people saw the advantage of sowing crops and then leaving it out in grass for two or three years.

24,664. And that has been more extensively followed of late years?—Yes.

24,665. Is there much land within the area now under forest suitable for cultivation?—Yes, as I mentioned the heights above Badanloch, Allt-an-duin and these places had all been tenanted, e.g., Truderscaig, where there were twenty tenants near the loch, is as good a place for crofters I suppose as on the whole Strath.

24,666. What are the names of the deer forests you have been alluding to?—I am not aware that they have any particular names farther than I have mentioned in the paper.

24,667. How many deer forests have you been dealing with in that paper?—In this statement there are no deer forests that have not a few sheep upon them, with the exception of Griamacharry, Halamdary, and Gearnsary.

24,668. You think there are not nearly so many sheep there as there might be?—Not nearly.

Helmsdale, Sutherlandshire.

William Macdonald.

24,669. And I understand these forest lands are almost exclusively used for deer, and that the sheep are a comparative trifle in point of number, and of the use they make of the ground?—Exactly.

24,670. May I ask, where did you get these rents? Are they taken from the valuation roll?—From the valuation roll for 1892–93; the new roll has not been issued yet.

24,671. You gave us the names of a great number of townships and of persons. Were all these you mentioned occupied towards the beginning of this century?—Yes, I believe the evictions commenced about the year 1812, but there were three distinct evictions upon the Strath of Kildonan.

24,672. And you think the lands which were occupied by these townships and the inhabitants might be again occupied to a profit?—I do.

24,673. Mr Gordon.—What sort of holdings would you propose to make up there?—It depends very much upon the quality of the land, because the quality of the land is not the same in all parts of the strath. Another thing which would have to be taken into consideration is, that where land suitable for reclaiming would be put into crofts, the crofts would require to be made larger; but in good land I think from 25 to 30 acres or say 30 acres would be a good sized croft.

24,674. Thirty acres of arable?—Arable land; I think that would be better than less; because it could be worked upon the six shift system.

24,675. Now, along with that would you propose to have pasture?—Yes, by all means.

24,676. So many sheep?—Yes, and cattle and horses.

24,677. Your proposal would be to have a small farm of about 30 acres that would keep a pair of ponies or small horses?—Yes.

24,678. And how many sheep would you have?—I think before it would pay a man to keep sheep he would require from 80 to 100.

24,679. That is small enough I think. Have you any idea here of working a club farm?—Well, it might be tried here.

24,680. Eighty or 100 sheep give the same work in looking after them as 300 or 400 sheep?—Yes, but if the land was made into small crofts they could not give 400 or 500 sheep to each tenant.

24,681. The difficulty arising out of small tenants on the hill is the fencing if you keep your sheep separate?—It would not be necessary to fence on the hills for tenants; they might have it in common.

24,682. That is a qualified kind of club farm. Supposing you had four or five of these tenants, their sheep could make a hirsel, with a single shepherd for the lot; but it is an expensive and troublesome way of keeping sheep, to have 80 sheep attached to a small holding with so much hill pasture, because there is the continual difficulty of herding them and keeping them on the hill?—There is that difficulty, no doubt; but fencing would incur a great deal of expense.

24,683. It would be beyond their power to raise the money to fence for 80 sheep. You would require to formulate some idea in your own mind so as to work it on a larger scale than 80. If you could work it either as a club farm or a common in which six 80's would be under one man, that would be better. Have you any idea how that land was occupied formerly?—A good deal of it was occupied on the runrig system.

24,684. It would be mostly cattle in those days?—They had all sheep, more or less.

24,685. It is a fact that you must know if you travelled over the country that the crofter's sheep are never so good as the tacksman's sheep?—For a very good reason, because they have not such good ground to feed on.

24,686. They are not so particular as to taking the breeding of the sheep, and at that season of the year it is almost an essential requisite that the sheep should be in the form of one flock as much as possible, because when they take down the ewes in the autumn it is a very difficult thing to keep them separate, and every man has not as good a tup as his neighbour, and the consequence is that, as a rule, the stock deteriorates from that cause alone?—They could keep these sheep on their own farm the time the tups were out.

Helmsdale Sutherlandshire.

William Macdonald.

24,687. That would involve care and knowledge, whereas if you went into the club system you would find it would pay them better, because they would be able to farm their grazings exactly as a tacksman would do?—Yes, I have no doubt of that.

24,688. Another difficulty I see from the map is that there is no road up to the townships you have mentioned up at Badanloch?—There is a road that goes to Badanloch by Garnsary and Halamdary on to Strathnaver.

24,689. Is there a new road?—Yes, and those places are not so very far distant.

24,690. They are about eight miles from the main track?—Possibly this time their could be roads made to these places if they were tenanted.

24,691. The farthest west ground you speak of is Truiderscaig?—Yes, nearest the march of Strathnaver.

24,692. You say there were twenty tenants there; they must have had very small holdings?—About the size of their holdings I cannot speak, but I have heard from old people that it was one of the best places, and that the people there were as well-to-do as in any part of the heights of Kildonan. A good deal of the ground that had been reclaimed was under crofters a century ago, but has now gone under heather and rushes in such a manner that it cannot be made out now. Of course, there are some places where it can be made out, even among the heather.

24,693. It has gone back to a condition of nature?—Yes.

24,694. Well, the first thing to help that would be to stock it with cattle, more or less, and, of course, renewing the grass to begin with. But I have no doubt, from what we have seen of the country that land under sheep has deteriorated?—Yes, it has very much.

24,695. And it would not now keep so many sheep as it did when these people were turned out?—Not nearly so many.

24,696. Are you aware from your own knowledge or from the knowledge referred to in your paper whether these places were under a tacksman?—The whole of them on the upper part of the strath were, but farther down they were sub-tenants. From the height to the strath there were tacksmen who lived there; lower down a few of them lived at the seaside, but had farms there. But there were parts of the strath which had tenants, e.g., two places followed Netherdale; they were sub-tenants of the tenant who held the farm of Netherdale. He had some tenants on the farm of Netherdale itself, on the home farm; five sub-tenants who were evicted in the same year as those people from Caen and Cill-Pheadair were; that is, as far as I can learn, in the year 1826.

24,697. Is the part of Navidale from which the tenants were evicted, arable or grazing?—Part arable and part grazing.

24,698. Did any evictions from Navidale take place in the valley of the Helmsdale river?—They were both in the valley, Caen and Cill-Pheadair that is the two grazing parts.

24,699. And the others were round on the arable side?—Exactly so.

24,700. You have given us an idea of what you think would be the size of the croft out at the upper end of the country; would it not be advisable to have smaller crofts near the sea here?—Small crofts might do, but I think any man who is following land would require from 25 to 30 acres if he was wholly dependent on the land.

24,701. I quite agree with you, but is there any demand for small crofts by labouring men round about the parish?—Yes, there are plenty young men who would take land on advantageous terms if they could get it.

24,702. Is there any fishing population?—Yes.

24,703. In my part of the country the fishermen don't care for land, but in this part of the country I think they do?—As far as I know, at the present time I don't believe any of the fishermen here are in any way connected with crofts. At one time, thirty years ago or more, all the crofters in the townships hereabouts with very few exceptions were fishermen and had boats of their own; but these old people died out, and the young people did not take any interest in the fishing at all.

24,704. And, in point of fact, at the present time the crofters and the fishermen are two distinct bodies?—Two distinct classes.

24,705. Mr Forsyth.—You have mentioned the size of holding that you think would be desirable,—25 to 30 acres arable, with a pair of horses, and 80 to 100 sheep. Would you also include some cattle?—Yes.

24,706. Are there many people in this district who you think would be willing to take up holdings of that kind on fair terms?—There are.

24,707. And could you get many holdings of that kind in the Kildonan district without touching these reclamations at Auchintoul?—Oh, yes.

24,708. All on better land?—Better land.

24,709. What capital do you think would be necessary to start a farm of that kind on the hill, from the beginning with reclamations? Have you given any consideration to that?—I don't know, in some places more capital would be required than in other places; a great deal would depend on the amount of arable land that would fall to the croft that a man might get.

24,710. By that you mean land ready for the plough? Exactly. In other cases, with land to be reclaimed they would require more capital.

24,711. Then as to the fencing of arable and the buildings (we will come to the stock afterwards), what would you put down for that?—A man would require from £150 to £200 to begin with.

24,712. For buildings?—There are plenty men who would take land and who would be able to do a great deal of the necessary work themselves so as to save money. At the same time I believe that if crofters who would be willing to take holdings on the strath were allowed to remain where they are until such time as they get provision made for themselves on these new crofts, it would be far cheaper for them.

24,713. Then as to stock?—In a good many cases people who have had crofts before going there would have part of the stock already. Then, of course, they would just have to lay out so much capital in buying the remainder; they could not get the stock for such a place all at once; it would be put on by degrees.

24,714. It would be a question of a considerable amount of capital, and do you think that in some cases they could provide that themselves?—In some cases.

24,715. And in others they would require assistance?—Yes.

24,716. Have you considered how the assistance might be procured? Have you contemplated Government loans?—Yes, I have; I think that Government ought to give loans to people if these places were given as crofts.

24,717. Then, there would be, of course, even from the first some rent for the land, and in some shape or other there would be interest on the stock, so that I take it it would be rather a hard pull at first. You have considered the difficulties for the first few years carefully, have you?—Yes, I have no doubt there are difficulties, but with industry I have no doubt the people would come to be well enough in a few years,—better than they are now.

24,718. But at the first, I think you will admit, it would require a good deal of hard work and a good deal of skill and energy to pull through?—It would, certainly.

24,719. But still, you think there are people who would face these difficulties?—Yes, I do.

24,720. Then, as to the Sutherland reclamations at Auchintoul. You stated, I think, that they were made upon land which you think it will not pay to cultivate?—Yes, a good deal of it.

24,721. You would not be prepared even at a fair rent, supposing these lands were in the market and available, to touch a portion of them yourself, you or any other?—Not a good part of them for cultivation.

24,722. But only for grazing?—Yes.

24,723. You are persuaded that the land was badly chosen and that better is to be found?—Yes.

24,724. Of course, we are naturally rather surprised to hear that; we had thought that the best experience and skill would have directed the reclamation to the best places?—I don't know, but a part of this land would be profitable for crofts, but then it was never properly reclaimed, because the stones were never taken out of it; I believe that although the surface has been made even, underneath the surface it is just very much like what it was in a state of nature.

24,725. Then, as to smaller holdings, that is to say the holding which a man would not live by, but which he would have as an assistance while he laboured elsewhere; is there a fair demand for labour here?—No, labour is only to be had here maybe for a few weeks during the fishing time; there is no permanent labour to be got in this county, and I think for any man who is taking land, it would not be profitable for him to depend partly on his croft and partly by labour otherwise.

24,726. That is to say, you think the demand for labour not being large it would not be advantageous in many cases to take a small croft and trust to getting labour elsewhere?—No.

24,727. You mean that the man would probably have to go far away, perhaps entirely south, to get work?—Exactly.

24,728. Therefore, you favour a holding more of the nature of a small farm, a self-sustaining croft? Certainly.

24,729. And you think a good many such could be laid out in the Kildonan district?—I think so.

24,730. And that inhabitants would face the difficulties?—I think a good many would.

24,731. Mr Sutherland.—Will you look at this map (shows coloured map). The blue on the north side is the crofters in Navidale, and this is Kildonan parish. Is that, in your opinion, an accurate description of the distribution of the population in the parish?—That is quite accurate as regards Navidale.

24,732. How many families are in Navidale?—Twenty-two.

24,733. Can you give me the acreage of the whole of their holdings, common and all?—Not exactly, but I can give you a rough idea of what was laid out as crofts for the tenants at the time of the eviction.

24,734. No, but I wish to know the present area of the whole of these families?—In the most of cases I should think from two to three or three-and-a-half acres.

24,735. Is it a square mile?—Less than that.

24,736. It is less than 600 acres?—Less than 600 acres.

24,737. And what is the area of the Navidale farm?—I think there are about 90 acres of arable.

24,738. But the whole farm, grazing and all?—I cannot be sure; I have not got the area of it.

24,739. Is it 10,000 acres?—Well, I should think so, but I cannot be certain.

24,740. How many families occupy that?—The 10,000 acres do you mean?

24,741. Yes?—Only the one.

24,742. And the twenty-two families have less than 600 acres among them?—Exactly.

24,743. That is a correct statement of the distribution of population in the Navidale district?—As far as I know.

24,744. An approximate estimate?—An approximate idea.

24,745. It is not very far wrong, is it?—I think not.

24,746. You referred to places where there were people before but where there are none now? I presume it is to give us an idea of places where people could be reasonably expected to live again?—Exactly.

24,747. Then, with regard to the information, I think you stated that the Sutherland clearances were from the year 1812?—Yes, to 1826. 1812, 1815 and 1819 were the dates I think.

Helmsdale, Sutherlandshire.

William Macdonald.

24,748. So that they will be within the memory of people who are between seventy and eighty years of age?—Yes.

24,749. And you have a great many of these in the parish?—Not a great many.

24,750. Between seventy and eighty years old?—There are a good few.

24,751. Don't you know a person who can tell you the name of every family that was up in Kildonan strath?—Yes.

24,752. And you have conversed with such often?—Yes, but there are not many of them left now.

24,753. But, as a matter of fact, you have seen and conversed with people who were eye witnesses of the whole thing and who were put out?—Yes, the statement I got as to the eighty families was from an old schoolmaster, John Ross, in Navidale, who died three years ago.

24,754. Your opinion then is that there is plenty land for the purpose that we have been appointed to inquire into, and that there is plenty demand for it?—Yes.

24,755. Then, with regard to the fitness of the land for the purpose concerning which we are inquiring, do you think there is any very great doubt about that?—No doubt at all.

24,756. What makes it less doubtful in this neighbourhood than anywhere else do you think?—Because the old people who are living now have given a distinct description to their children of the land and of what it was able to produce, so that even the young generation knows the history of the strath in great measure as well as those who have been before them.

24,757. That would be an argument no doubt with regard to the old distribution; but, with regard to a new distribution, what makes it perfectly plain in this neighbourhood that it would be a success? Has it not actually been tried?—It has been tried; as I said already there are some of the finest crops growing at the height of Kildonan that are to be seen in the strath to-day, and I have no doubt that if the whole strath had been cultivated there would have been just such crops on the other parts.

24,758. Were you acquainted with the land up there where the corn is growing now, before it was reclaimed?—Yes.

24,759. What was it like,—take Auchintoul?—It was a piece of barren moor, except what was reclaimed or part it that is within the farm of Auchintoul proper; but what was reclaimed was only a black barren moor, with stones upon the surface here and there, only it was not steep. It was going to the foot of the hill, but it was not high. But for all this land you would not give 2d. an acre if you had seen it.

24,760. What can we see there now if we go?—Very good crops.

24,761. As good as you can see at the coast?—Yes.

24,762. Good and ripe?—Yes, and in good condition.

24,763. So that is conclusive is it not in your mind that there is every possibility of crops being raised in these places you referred to?—Quite so.

24,764. And you stated that these were, in your opinion, not at all the best places to make the experiment?—I think so. I think there are a great many places in the Strath of Kildonan, that could have been cultivated to a far greater advantage than these places.

24,765. You have heard no doubt about the expense at which these reclamations were carried on?—Yes, I have heard a good deal about it.

24,766. Have you heard what it cost per acre?—I am not prepared to say exactly what it did cost, but I know it cost a great deal of money.

24,767. Have you ever heard it stated that it cost £40 per acre to reclaim?—Yes, I have heard that too.

24,768. In your opinion was it necessary to expend so much money as that to reclaim it?—Well, I don't think so.

24,769. Do you ever hear of crofters getting advances to enable them to reclaim land?—All the advance that I am aware of which the crofter got to reclaim land was in the year 1847 or 1848 if I remember well,—the year when the disease first came into the potatoes in the north. In that year there was a good deal of destitution along the coast side here, through their being no work on the place and the people having no crofts, and the Duke of Sutherland at the time had the matter laid before him by his late factor, Mr Gunn. He gave so much money for the purpose of reclaiming pieces of land within the crofts of tenants that had not been reclaimed before.

Helmsdale, Sutherlandshire.

William Macdonald.

24,770. Do you know anything of the cost of that reclamation?—Yes.

24,771. How much was that per acre?—It cost about £9 an acre.

24,772. So that when a crofter reclaims land it costs £9 an acre; when it is reclaimed on a very large scale like this it costs £40 per acre?—Yes, I may state in regard to this money that was advanced at the time to the crofters, they were getting I believe something like 1s. 2d. for six square yards for trenching it,—either 1s. or 1s. 1d. I am not quite sure. Then, they have been paying for that money since 1847 I think, at the rate of five per cent. up to this date.

24,773. So that there would be no loss then so far as the landlord is concerned?—I think it is all profit.

24,774. To the person who advances the money. Then I was going to ask you whether, in your opinion, it is necessary to expend £40 to reclaim an acre of land?—Not at all.

24,775. It could be done at a third of the money, is that your opinion?—Yes, and in some cases less.

24,776. So we need attach no weight, in your opinion, to any evidence as to what it would cost up there to reclaim land?—No, not the smallest.

24,777. Then, with regard to the crops that are the product, I think you gave some evidence. I did not quite follow you in the evidence you gave with regard to the newly reclaimed farms. I presume there has been a redistribution of them since they were first made in some measure?—Yes, there is.

24,778. And you stated, I think, that some of them had gone out of cultivation?—So they have.

24,779. If I remember rightly I think it was three people who were crofters proper who got any of these farms, is that so?—Yes.

24,780. Do any of these three crofters allow their land to run out?—No.

24,781. Are they not, as a matter of fact, the only tenants who have kept the land in cultivation?—Exactly.

24,782. And all the others have allowed theirs to run out?—They have all allowed it to run out except these three crofters.

24,783. The three crofters are the only people who have kept the reclaimed land in a cultivated state?—Yes.

24,784. Some of the reclaimed farms have been put together, have they not?—Yes.

24,785. I think you mentioned a case in which a proprietor in Ross-shire held three?—Yes.

24,786. And has he kept them in cultivation?—He has only three-and-a-half acres under crop.

24,787. And he is a man of skill?—Yes.

24,788. And of capital?—Yes.

24,789. And he has allowed it to run out of cultivation?—Yes.

24,790. He has got three houses in his possession, I think you said?—Yes, with steadings attached.

24,791. And he is non-resident?—Non-resident.

24,792. I did not fully understand the arrangement; you were in some doubt I think as to whether Badanloch was a deer forest or not?—Well, I am not clear about the part,—of course, I have been there at one time, that is before Muir got it, I knew that the upper part was kept as a deer forest then, and at Allt-an-duin too it was the same, because they had so many calves which they reared annually.

24,793. What sort of calves?—Deer calves; they brought them there in the morning and at night. The keeper allowed them to stray over the hills during the day, but he went out with a horn in the evening, and blew the horn and all the deer ran home and got their feed of oats. I am perfectly well aware of that.

Helmsdale, Sutherland-shire.

William Macdonald.

24,794. But the place is either a deer forest, or it is not a deer forest?—I believe it is a deer forest.

24,795. How is it entered in the valuation roll?—I think it is entered as a sheep farm, but I am not certain.

24,796. But, as a matter of fact, you said it carried at one time a stock of 3600 sheep?—Yes.

24,797. You are certain of that?—Yes.

24,798. Absolutely certain, and now it carries only 700?—Yes. I stated already that these sheep were merely kept for the purpose of showing that it was meant as a sheep farm, whereas it was really a deer forest.

24,799. You also mentioned that Allt-an-duin, Borrobol, and Dalcharn at one time carried a sheep stock of 3000, and at present they carry only the half of that?—Half of that.

24,800. Is that from the same cause do you think as Badanloch,—the reduction in the stock?—Well, of course, the tenants are shooting tenants.

24,801. And have the shooting tenants got the nominal grazing also?—Yes.

24,802. So that they are not resident grazing farmers even?—No, they are not.

24,803. Now, I wish to hark back for one moment to the distribution of the population that there was; and you did, certainly, mention a number, that was a large number for Truderscaig. The holdings were small, no doubt, but were they so small as the present Navidale ones?—No, they could not be so small.

24,804. So the people were to be improved by being put out of larger holdings into smaller ones?—Exactly.

24,805. Then as to the situation, it is not a question of altitude?—No, it is not.

24,806. You are aware that at West Helmsdale, close by here, land is cultivated at 800 feet, and you are aware that Forsinard, 30 miles inland, is only 600 feet above sea level?—I was led to believe that it is 700.

24,807. The top of Gartymore where the land is cultivated is 100 feet higher than Forsinard, so that the question of elevation could not determine the success or non-success of the holdings?—No.

24,808. Now, as to the question of assistance; taking the concrete example we have had in this neighbourhood of three crofters taking some of these newly reclaimed farms,—are you aware that they got no Government assistance?—None, that I am aware of.

24,809. We have got the example here already of the reclamation; we have now got the example of crofters taking it, and by your admission they are the best farmers up there?—Of course, they are.

24,810. You have no doubt of that?—No doubt of that.

24,811. And they got no Government assistance?—No.

24,812. And have you any reason to suppose that they have improved their circumstances very much by the change?—I believe they have very much.

24,813. And are you of opinion that their case would not be a solitary one if others had a like opportunity?—No, it would not. There are many young men, who, if they got the opportunity, would just succeed fully as well.

24,814. And I have no doubt whatever, there are a great number of people who would take the opportunity if they got it?—I think so.

24,815. Then, with regard to the grazing the people of Navidale have got,—we will call it grazing by courtesy,—what is your opinion with regard to it? Could it be enlarged?—Most certainly.

24,816. Profitably?—To a very great extent.

24,817. Have you made any application for an extension of your grazing?—Yes.

24,818. What application have you made?—We have applied to the Crofters Commission.

24,819. What did you apply for?—We applied for so much of the grazing farm of Caen. I may state for your information that the inhabitants of Navidale and of Caen held the whole of the grazing land from a small burn called the Esk, on the east side of Navidale, out to the county boundary between Caithness and Sutherland, west as far as Presshill, and then down by the Caen burn. That was the march that bounded the grazing of the tenantry at that time.

Helmsdale, Sutherland-shire.

William Macdonald.

24,820. What time was that?—That was before the clearances.

24,821. And were there fewer or more tenants then than now in Navidale?—Fewer at that time.

24,822. And is this the result then, that the more tenants have got smaller grazings than the fewer?—Yes. I may state that there was a small strip of that grazing following a place Kilbreck, where there was one tenant. His small strip went up adjoining the march between Caithness and Sutherland, exclusively for himself. At the same time the tenants were not permitted to allow their cattle or horses or sheep down the east side of the sheep farm of Navidale, but they had the whole run of the hill as a common, between Navidale and Caen, before the evictions.

24,823. You have shown your desire to get an increase of the grazing by applying for it?—Certainly. We cannot keep any yeld cattle where we are during the summer months without sending them away. We send them up to the height of the Strath of Kildonan, and pay 7s. 6d. per head for them.

24,824. And is this a sample of your grazing we see out of the window?—Yes, that is just about the best of it you see there.

24,825. You have shown your desire to get increased grazing by applying to the Crofters Commission for it?—Yes.

24,826. Did you ever think of applying to the landlord for it?—We applied to the landlord, and a deputation waited upon the factor, and accompanied him over the whole ground to show it to him.

24,827. What was the result of the application?—The result of it was that we never heard anything more about it.

24,828. And when was the piece taken to build the gamekeeper's house?—About eight or nine years ago, or perhaps six or seven years ago.

24,829. Mr Alfred N. Macaulay, Agent for His Grace the Duke of Sutherland.—Have you been in the way of seeing the crops in the Kildonan district for the last few years, say five years?—Yes.

24,830. How did these crops for the last five years compare with the crops of this year?—I may say that the crops for the last five years on these places, have just compared very much as the crop of this year will compare with the crops of the last five years on the coast side here.

24,831. But how are the crops this year? Are they better relatively than the crops that there have been for the last five years?—Well, they are better.

24,832. Now, with regard to the potatoes which form a staple of the people there, how do those grow on these farms?—Potatoes in some parts grow very well, and in other parts they did not.

24,833. But in this special place you referred to, where there are now three typical crofters?—I don't suppose they plant many potatoes, if any at all.

24,834. Those that they do plant?—They are just subject to the climate as in other places.

24,835. Are they better this year than the last five or six years?—Of course, they are.

24,836. Is it not the fact that for the last five or six years they have been a failure?—They have been a failure in a good many other places as well.

24,837. But in this special place?—Well, yes, of course.

24,838. With regard to these three crofters that have been spoken of, I presume you are satisfied with their success? You are satisfied that they have done well?—I am quite satisfied.

24,839. Do they depend wholly on their crofts?—Yes.

24,840. They do not do anything outside of their crofts?—Not that I am aware of.

24,841. What are their names?—Adam Bannerman, Gordon Henderson, and William Sutherland,

Helmsdale, Sutherlandshire.

William Macdonald.

24,842. Now, with regard to Sutherland, is it not the fact that he is a road contractor?—Oh, well, of course, that is quite true; his father was before him.

24,843. It is the fact that he is a road contractor?—Yes, he is a contractor, but he simply took the contract that his father had. The road was just opposite his own croft, and it did not prevent him from labouring his croft.

24,844. Is it not the fact that he drives the sportsmen up there, and makes a considerable income from that source?—Well, I think that the arbitrary power of the proprietor has been carried to a very great extent, but I think it would be a great stretch of arbitrary power if that man was to be prevented for earning money were he could get it.

24,845. I do not object to a man earning money, but I want to get at the fact, and the fact is that he is not dependent on his croft?—Oh, well, of course, that does not at all say, but that his croft would maintain him without having anything to do.

24,846. The fact is that he does not live by the croft alone?—But then he has the time to spare.

24,847. Then, with regard to Henderson's croft, does he cultivate this place?—He cultivated so much of it.

24,848. How much probably?—I am not exactly sure.

24,849. It is not the fact that he has allowed a great part of it to go out of cultivation for some reason or other?—He has only allowed part of it.

24,850. Then, with regard to Lochside, do you know the previous tenant on the holding?—Yes, I knew him by sight; White was his name.

24,851. Did he cultivate this land?—No, part of it he did.

24,852. Did he not cultivate a considerable portion of it?—Not altogether, he only cultivated part of it.

24,853. How much more than is cultivated at present?—I am not clear about how much more he cultivated.

24,854. There are only 3½ acres cultivated now, is it not the fact that a considerable portion of that land was cultivated by the man who was there before Mr Gunn?—Possibly it may be, I am not aware of that.

24,855. Do you know with what success?—No, I am not aware what success he had.

24,856. Is it not notorious that the man who was there before did not succeed?—That might be quite true without being the fault of the land at all; it might be more the fault of the man than of the land.

24,857. We will get the fact, though it is the fact that he did not succeed. Then about Bannerman, has he been a success do you think in his holding?—I think so, I have no reason to believe otherwise.

24,858. The Chairman.—Is there any demand in this quarter for holdings where the occupant would live partly by his holding and partly by his labour?—I am not aware of that; as I have already stated, in this parish there is no constant labour to be got, so that a man as I have said maybe would require to go out of the county altogether to get labour, or to the farthest west end of the county so that I don't think it would be advantageous for a man to have a croft of that kind.

24,859. We have heard a good deal elsewhere about the time taken to bring land which had to be reclaimed into a state to yield a profit. What is your view of that? Suppose you had a croft consisting of old arable which you wished to put into a state of cultivation to a profit. How long would it be with average chances and average weather before you would expect to get a profit from the land you had to till?—I don't think it would take very many years. It would not take very many years on old arable land.

24,860. Take old arable of the kind you have had in view; how long would it be?—I have seen in a part of the country where old land that had been for about fifty years, I should say lying waste, was in the spring or rather in the latter end of winter simply ploughed and then sowed, an excellent crop of oats cut in the following harvest; but that is only one case, and in some places I don't think there would be a crop at all the first or even the second year; but I have no doubt in the space of six years, in the time it would take to go over a six shift rotation, there would be an ordinary fair crop by the time the whole of the six shifts were laid out.

Helmsdale, Sutherlandshire.

William Macdonald.

24,861. So you would expect to have such land brought into a state of profitable cultivation in six years?—Yes.

24,862. I would like to ask you this. We have heard from time to time a great deal about the crops of this year? Is this year, in your opinion, rather an exceptional year?—It is, as regards the crops; they are exceptionally light this year.

24,863. The crops are early, and the corn crop, potatoes, and turnips are extra good in most places?—Yes, but not the corn crop, it is very light. There is no straw, and I believe where there is no straw, the corn is not good.

24,864. Would you say that the crops, speaking generally, are above the average this year?—I would not say that they are above the average, but I would say as to the green crops that they are up to the average.

24,865. And the crop is early?—Fully a month earlier in a great many places.

24,866. Then, would you advise us to be careful in drawing conclusions as to the land from the appearance of the crops this year as being in many places exceptionally early, and in many places exceptionally good?—Yes, I would. As I have already stated, in a great many places, both the climate and the soil would have to be taken into consideration.

24,867. In every place I think we must take these into consideration.

24,868. Mr Sutherland.—With regard to the farm of William and Donald Sutherland at Auchintoul, are there not two of them, two brothers?—Yes.

24,869. And might one not cultivate the farm and the other drive the sportsmen?—Certainly.

24,870. On the principle of the division of labour?—Exactly.

24,871. Then, with regard to the weather, good harvests and bad harvests come everywhere as well as here?—Oh, certainly.

24,872. And you do not think it is fair to compare the bad harvests there with the good harvests here?—No, I don't think so.

24,873. The proper thing is to compare them the same year when the same weather is all over the country?—Exactly.

24,874. You do not think a few miles would make all the difference in climate at a lower elevation than what is cultivated here, as some people say?—I do not think so.

24,875. Your knowledge of Kildonan Strath is not limited to a period of two years, is it?—No.

24,876. But spreads over a lifetime?—I remember it since I was a boy of six years, and I have been going back and forward through the strath since I came to manhood, through the very top even of Loch-a'-Chlair on the Strathnaver side down as far as Suisgill.

24,877. And you know as much about it as most people?—Well, I know a great deal about it.

24,878. And you have always seen shepherd's crops?—I have.

24,879. How do they compare with the crops on the sea coast here?—Where there were men who had a knowledge of farming they have raised as good crops, these shepherds, as could be got in the country. But on the other hand where they were men who had no knowledge of farming and still less desire to cultivate the pieces laid out for them, they have scarcely any crop.

24,880. You remember Mr White: was he a practical farmer?—Well, we could not say that he was.

24,881. Did he come there for the bonâ fide purpose of farming?—I don't believe he did.

24,882. Is that your opinion?—My belief is that he came there for sheep farming; but I am not saying for certain that it was for that purpose he came.

24,883. Listen to this for one moment. This is a quotation from a newspaper article of date 1882, when these farms were advertised to be let after they were reclaimed:—'The object of these reclamations,

Helmsdale, Sutherland-shire.

William Macdonald.

'generally stated, was to increase the area of grass 'land relatively to hill pasture, thus increasing the 'general feeding powers of the farm or farms, and in 'particular, so increasing home resources as to enable 'the sheep stock to be wintered on the farms instead 'of being taken to Lowland grazings elsewhere. With 'the present season the reclamations under which from '1300 to 1400 acres, at selected points have been 'brought thoroughly into cultivation, cropped and sub-'stantially fenced, will have been finished; and the 'results thus far have been thoroughly successful. 'The newly reclaimed land has been found capable of 'bearing excellent crops both of oats and turnips' (Aberdeen Free Press, 22nd Aug. 1882). Do you agree with that?—I quite agree with that; and besides I have no doubt the reason why Mr White failed in his holding was that instead of £140, as is paid now, he paid £400 I believe.

24,884. The rent has come down?—From £400 to £140, upon land that cost £40 an acre to reclaim.

24,885. And land which you think any good farmer would keep in cultivation?—I think so.

24,886. Land of not worse, but perhaps better quality than that which has been kept in cultivation?—By far.

24,887. So that you are quite clear it is not the fault of the land?—I am quite clear.

24,888. Mr Gordon.—You have told me a good deal about this Badanloch district. Are there any shepherds' houses up there just now?—No, there is only one shepherd.

24,889. Have you ever seen shepherds up there, or any cultivation up there at all?—Yes, I have.

24,890. Have you seen potatoes growing there?—Yes, I have.

24,891. And the question, I may put it to you direct, is this, do you consider that a district that is subject to frost, or not?—Of course, some years there may be frost.

24,892. But is it particularly liable to frost, or not?—Not so liable as the land in the main valley of the river.

24,893. In the main valley of the river, it is also subject to frost?—Yes, it is lower down.

24,894. How far up the valley do you go before you would say that the country is subject to frost; as far as the Kildonan Station?—No, I would not go so far; below that, I have seen frost coming down as far as Caen here; but late in the season, not early.

24,895. Is it an occasional circumstance that grain is frosted in that valley?—Yes, it does happen at times, but at intervals of years.

24,896. But there is no real test up there in the meantime of shepherds or gamekeepers cultivating three, four or five acres?—Shepherds never had that quantity. [Mr Sutherland.—But they always cultivated land, did not they?—They had so much to cultivate,—so much under potatoes, and so much under barley.]

24,897. And were the shepherd's potatoes safe, as a rule?—Yes, in a great many cases. Of course, some suffered from frost.

24,898. There is no doubt of this, that this is a very exceptional year as regards earliness, and, therefore, safety from frost?—Yes, of course, late years are more subject to frost.

24,899. Mr Sutherland.—How many degrees more of frost are there up at Kildonan than here at Helmsdale?—I am not clear about it.

24,900. Do you believe there is any difference?—The difference may be very little. I believe that wherever there is fresh water there is more likely to be frost.

24,901. Will there be an appreciable difference in the degrees of frost that are registered here and at Kildonan, twelve miles further up?—I am not aware that there is.

William Matheson.

—examined.

24,902. The Chairman.—You heard the statement read by Macdonald, Navidale?—Yes.

24,903. Do you agree with it?—In the main. He mentioned that Halamdary was a deer forest; so is Gearnsary joined to it, and a good part of Breacather. Griamacharry is a deer forest altogether, and a good part of Araichrini.

Helmsdale, Sutherland-shire.

William Matheson.

24,904. You want to make that correction upon his statement?—Yes.

24,905. But otherwise, do you agree with it?—Yes.

24,906. Have you any additional information to give us?—As far as I know Macdonald gave it fully.

24,907. Fully and satisfactorily?—Yes.

24,908. You have some statement I see; what does it contain?—It gives a list of old townships and the number of families that formerly lived in them:—

Rumsdale, eight; Garvault, five; Innse-chombraig, one; Eilig, three; Doire-Dhamh, one; Griamacharry, five; Ariclinidh, three; Corrish, four; Bad-an-t-Seabhaig, three; Claggan, two; Tornacreve, one; Torra-dhordason, one; Ach-na-h-uaighe, four; Bad-Clavan, four; Easter Badanloch, nine; Wester Badanloch, thirteen; Halamdary, four; Gearnsary, five; Breackachu, five; Achnamorine, two; Feith-na-fola, one; Dalcharn, Fairanach, Askadh, Cinachad, Achin, Braincholl, Reisg, Allt-an-duin, Tomich, Borrobol, Leurable, Dal-Langwell, Achnacrening, Suisgill, Dalbhuie, Kinbrace (partly reclaimed), Ault-i-conishgil, (partly reclaimed), Rinacorrach, Ach-an-fhaicinn (partly reclaimed, and peopled, no outrun), Toribhra, Achintoul (partly reclaimed), Bannockburn, Achencrask, Cnoc-fionn.

24,909. What do you mean by "no outrun?" [Mr Gordon.—Do you mean "now run out?"]—Very likely. Ten or eleven of these townships are now the sacred preserves of the deer. No other animal from man downwards has permission to walk over these grounds—no animal I may say except those that are preserved for the pleasure of murdering them some day and their warders. Some people maintain that the game-laws of our day are mild and unoppressive; but I say where they have the full chance of showing themselves, they are as barbarous and tyrannical as the game-laws of William of Normandy, if not worse. As far as I know, the game-laws of the Norman Court only punished those that went through their forest with the intent of doing harm, or did kill one of the sacred animals. But the refined game-laws of our day make it a crime to walk over a game preserve, although you go handcuffed and gagged. I am surprised that they did not try to change the Sutherland Coat of Arms, as it represents an animal very obnoxious to the sporting class There is no denying that these wild lands could be put to a better purpose, and I hope the Deer Forest Commission will see their way clear to give their verdict on that point, so clear that the banishment of the worst remains of our old feudal laws will be the result.

24,910. We have heard a great deal of evidence from Macdonald, with regard, at all events, to most of these townships?—Yes.

24,911. Have you anything to add to what you have said in answer to my questions or in addition to this statement? Do you wish to add anything more?—There are some townships where two were settled instead of one as mentioned there, but it was all in the other paper.

24,912. The other paper was very full and complete?—Yes.

24,913. And a very correct statement in your opinion?—Yes.

24,914. Mr Sutherland.—You have no doubt I suppose as to these people being in the places you have stated there? From the best information you can get all these people were in these places?—Oh, yes.

24,915. And, is it your opinion, that these same places that held the people before would hold them again if they went back upon proper conditions?—Yes.

24,916. Would you take a holding yourself if you got it in one of these places?—I am too old now, but the mind would take it.

24,917. If you had been a younger man and had got the opportunity you would have taken it?—Oh, yes.

Helmsdale, Sutherlandshire.

William Matheson.

24,918. You have lived in these places yourself all your lifetime?—Yes.

24,919. And you are satisfied from your observation that good holdings could be made?—But the way I was situated is that for thirty or forty years I had been the same as a fox among hounds if I was to interfere with anything.

24,920. Are you prevented from walking across the moors?—I was never prevented, but I tried to do as little of it as I could. If I had to go off the road unless it is just a message between the houses, I will be looking from side to side, in case any one is seeing me.

24,921. Then, with regard to the farmers that are up there, do you think they are upon the whole better off than people down here?—Oh, yes, at the reclamation, the land is good yonder.

24,922. And the crops are good in ordinary years?—Yes. But, of course, it was the very worst of land that was reclaimed.

24,923. You agree with Mr Macdonald in that, that it was the worst land that was reclaimed?—Sure enough.

24,924. And you think that if the better land was reclaimed there would be better crops and better results?—There is no mistake about that; I heard my father tell after the clearances that for some years there would be a yellow "scruff" on one's boots or shoes, the grass was so fat.

24,925. Mr Gordon.—You live up at Badanloch?—Yes, I was born there.

24,926. Have you a croft at all?—I have a small one.

24,927. How many acres?—No acres at all; I have the fourth of an acre.

24,928. Do you grow any potatoes at all?—I have some potatoes there, and very good ones.

24,929. What like were they last year?—They were not so good last year; they were not so good in any place that I saw last year.

24,930. Have you been in the habit of growing potatoes up there?—Always.

24,931. And did they frost sometimes?—Since a few years back only. My father was in Badanloch, and he was an old man between eighty and ninety, and he never saw "tattie shaws" black in Badanloch; but I saw it since then.

24,932. 1885 and 1888 would be rather frosty years?—Yes.

DONALD WATSON, Crofter, Gartymore (53)—examined.

24,933. The Chairman.—What rent do you pay?—£4.

24,934. Can you tell us the size of your holding, what extent of arable land it has?—About 5¼ acres.

24,935. And have you some outrun?—Yes, a small bit.

24,936. And have you hill grazing?—Yes.

24,937. A share of hill grazing?—Yes.

24,938. Do you know the extent of the hill grazing?—I am not exactly sure, but I think it is over 1500 acres.

24,939. Which you share along with how many other tenants?—118.

24,940. Have they the right to put on anything they like, or have they a souming?—They are allowed to put on cattle, and sheep and horses.

24,941. What stock have you got?—Two cows and a horse, and a stirk or two.

24,942. And some sheep?—Yes.

24,943. How many sheep?—About 15.

24,944. You heard Macdonald's statement?—Yes.

24,945. And do you agree with it?—Yes.

24,946. Does it convey your views?—Certainly it does.

24,947. Do you wish to add anything to his statement, or does it fully set forth the case that you wish to present?—I have not anything else as far as I know.

Helmsdale, Sutherlandshire.

Donald Watson.

24,948. What is your own individual desire in the matter: do you wish a new holding or an extension of holding?—Certainly, I would like to get an extension.

24,949. Is it more an extension you want than a new holding?—Well, if it could be possible that I should get an extension, but if not I would take a new holding.

24,950. You would prefer an extension to leaving the present croft?—Yes.

24,951. But if you cannot get an extension you are ready and willing to leave your croft and take a new settlement?—Yes.

24,952. Upon some of the lands mentioned by Mac donald?—Certainly.

24,953. What size of holding would you desire to obtain?—Between 25 and 30 acres I think would be sufficient.

24,954. Arable land?—Yes.

24,955. And what stock would you wish to be able to have? Both cattle, horses, and sheep?—That is according to the land, the quality of the land.

24,956. Suppose you got a fair quality of land, of the land in the district, what stock do you think you would need to have for a self-sustaining croft?—I think 2 ponies, 4 cows, and followers.

24,957. And how many sheep?—That would be according to the number of acres of outrun I would be allowed.

24,958. Suppose you had an outrun which your arable enabled you to winter?—Well, I think 100 sheep.

24,959. Have you considered the matter of rent of such a holding as you have in view?—No.

24,960. Have you considered the question whether you would require assistance to take up such a holding, or whether you would enter upon it at your own expense?—Well, that depends upon how I would be dealt with if I was to leave where I am. If the place where I am was left with me for a few years until I got a start in the new holding, I might perhaps get on.

24,961. You would not like to be removed or obliged to leave the one holding suddenly and take to the other?—No.

24,962. But gradually shift yourself from the one to the other?—As I would get on with the other I would be able to leave the old one.

24,963. And how long do you think it would take you before you could make such a new holding a profitable one with fair chances?—Not less than five years.

24,964. And would you like to be in a position to remain in your old holding that time?—Certainly.

24,965. Till the new holding was able to keep you and leave a profit?—Yes.

24,966. Mr Sutherland.—You have had a good deal of experience as a cultivator of the soil?—A little.

24,967. And you have had experience of attending sheep?—A little.

24,968. A good deal?—Well, I have been amongst them all my lifetime, more or less.

24,969. You said the extent of your own holding was about 4½ acres and that you had some outrun; what is the nature of the outrun you have got?—It is in parts very dangerous and rocky and steep.

24,970. Could any of it be cultivated that is not already cultivated?—Not an inch. There are parts of it that I have trenched to the depth of ten feet.

24,971. Your outrun is almost a precipice, is that not so?—A precipice.

24,972. With regard to the common grazing that you have a share in, you said that the extent of it was about 1500 acres?—Yes, I think so.

23,973. And that a great number of people shared in it. You said that you had sheep?—Yes.

24,974 Since how long have you had any sheep?—I have had a few sheep for some time.

24,975. Was there any break in that time at all?—Yes.

24,976. Were you prohibited from putting sheep upon that common grazing at all?—Yes, that was about eleven years ago.

24,977. So that if you have sheep it is contrary to the wish and the will of the proprietor?—No. We had a dispute, but we stopped the case. We employed an agent to stop the case till such time as his Grace came home.

24,978. But steps were taken to prevent your keeping any sheep?—Yes. Most of the people signed away their rights to common pasture.

24,979. Very few people except yourself have kept sheep, is that not so?—At the time.

24,980. Or now?—Oh, they have got it now.

24,981. But the attempt was made to deprive you of the sheep?—Yes.

24,982. Then, with regard to the new holding, you have stated in answer to the Chairman that there would be some years before you would expect to get a profitable return in a new holding?—Certainly. Where it was all arable a return could be expected, but if there was new land to take in it would take more time. A man would need to go according to his ability, he could not get on all at once.

24,983. I quite understand that. But you are labouring away at your present holding, and can you make it any better than it is?—No, I think I have gone as far as I could. I covered some shingles.

24,984. You covered and made arable some seabeach?—Yes.

24,985. And you think that is not a profitable occupation of your industry,—you could employ it far better if you had a suitable place?—Though I lived to be a hundred years of age it would not pay.

24,986. But if you got a new holding of the kind you have described, if you had to wait some years before you got a return you would be rewarded by the hope of having it in the future?—Yes.

24,987. But your present holding you cannot make better than it is?—No.

24,988. Suppose the opportunity was given to change from your present holding to a new one, do you know that under the Crofters Act you would be entitled to compensation when you left?—Yes.

24,989. And would that not furnish part of the capital?—Yes.

24,990. So that a man like you who has a holding would be in a far better position to take up such a holding than a man who has not?—Yes.

24,991. And you know also that the men who took the new holdings up the Kildonan Strath were men like yourself who had holdings down here?—Yes.

24,992. Do you believe then that there are a considerable number of people who would take advantage of such an offer just as these three men did?—I think they would be quite willing if there were any chance.

24,993. Now, as a man of experience in these things, have you in your mind new holdings where you would have separate grazings for each farmer, or a common sheep stock, which?—Separate grazing, I would prefer; I think it would give better justice in every way, for a man could have his own to attend, and if there was anything required amongst them he could take them and give them justice on the arable of the bit farm.

24,994. He could winter them on his arable?—He could winter them and assist them if it was required. Now, this club system, of course, is looked upon as cheaper in one way, but I think it is dearer upon the other hand, for I could not exactly get my own sheep to attend to them at the bit arable of my farm to do them justice if required. I would need to run my share in the risk.

24,995. What size of grazing attached to the 35 acres arable would you need to have in the case of separate grazing?—It would take about 1000 or 1500 acres for that.

24,996. Which is the smallest of these farms up at Kinbrace?—I think it is Burnfoot.

24,997. Do you know how many acres of hill pasture Burnfoot has got?—I think over 1000 acres.

24,998. And he has got it separate of course?—Burnfoot is fenced.

24,999. Have you considered the difficulty with regard to fencing when you said you would prefer to have your stock separate?—Well, fencing is not so very dear now, and I think it would pay in the long run.

25,000. But suppose you yourself had this practically to do, would you put up the fence yourself?—If I could manage, certainly, I would.

25,001. I mean would you do the work yourself?—Certainly.

25,002. Have you put up fences yourself?—I have fenced the whole of the bit I have, the first dyke fence that there was.

25,003. Could you do the same if you got an arable land farm, with a hill grazing attached of that size; could you do a great part of the fencing yourself?—Yes, with very little assistance.

25,004. And could the general run of the crofters do that if they got the opportunity?—A good many of them.

25,005. And in that way would you reduce the expense of fencing?—Certainly.

25,006. So that the estimates that we hear so much of per yard would not apply in the case of you, or men like you. When a contractor puts up a fence does he not contract to have a profit out of it?—Certainly.

25,007. And you would save that profit if you were doing it for yourself?—Yes.

25,008. Now, is it an absolute necessity, in your opinion, to have fencing?—I approve of the fencing.

25,009. Could it be done without?—It depends on how the arable land lies to the outrun.

25,010. The fence then would be between the outrun and the pasture?—Certainly.

25,011. It is not to separate neighbours' stock from each other?—Well, it is, in a way. I have seen them in several places in the county of Sutherland where they were keeping their stock separate and they were doing pretty well.

25,012. Had they fences?—They had not fences. You see they had a family to attend to the work.

25,013. But it would be better with fences, you admit?—Oh, yes.

25,014. You have been a shepherd, have you not?—Yes, for a number of years.

25,015. You have herded sheep on large grazing farms?—Yes.

25,016. Were there fences between these grazing farms?—There was no such thing.

20,017. How has the necessity arisen now?—Because it is coming in new.

25,018. Not because it is absolutely necessary but because it is fashionable, is that it?—Fashionable.

25,019. But, as a matter of fact, is there a fence between the farm of Navidale and the farm of Kildonan at present?—No.

25,020. Is there a fence between the Elderable sheep farm and the neighbouring sheep farm?—No.

25,021. And has not been for thirty years?—The only fence, as I understand, is between the forest and the sheep farm.

25,022. For the benefit of the deer?—Certainly.

25,023. But you admit all the same that the herding would be easier if a fence were there?—Yes, and it would give more justice to the stock.

25,024. You know these lands that Mr Macdonald and Mr Matheson spoke to?—Yes.

25,025. You have travelled over the whole of them?—Yes.

25,026. You are perfectly well acquainted with them?—Well, I have travelled over them several times.

25,027. Have you formed an opinion as to whether they are suitable for the purpose of our inquiry?—There is lots of land that never was before cultivated that is very good soil and would be very easily taken into cultivation.

25,028. Did you use to cultivate land when you were a shepherd?—Yes, a little. I was a "single lad" with the shepherd and saw the crops.

25, 029. I mean the usual croft?—Yes.

25,030. What part of the country have you been in as a shepherd?—I have been a while in Assynt, and I have been in Strathnaver, and in Ross-shire.

25,031. What place in Strathnaver?—As high up as Syre.

25,032. What sort of crop had you there?—A very good crop.

Helmsdale, Sutherlandshire.

Donald Watson

25,033. Were your crops there ripe as soon as they had them at Bettyhill?—Very nearly.

25,034. Were you troubled with frost very often?—Not very often.

25,035. Was the frost there more severe than anywhere else in Sutherlandshire, to any appreciable degree?—No, I have seen some parts of the low green ground nearer home more frosted than up there.

25,036. Does the water freeze up there sooner than it does at the shore?—No, I do not think so, I found that in the winter season it was warmer in Strathnaver than at Helmsdale, for I have been there in the severest storms.

25,037. Had you ever your crops mildewed?—No, not at Syre.

25,038. And the climate will not have changed since then?—The last few years were about the coldest.

25,039. Your opinion is valuable, with regard to the new holdings up the Kildonan Strath, are the people raising good crops there?—I have seen as good crops there as ever I have seen here.

25,040. And if they have had bad crops it was during bad seasons?—Yes.

25,041. And there were bad crops here at the same time?—Certainly.

25,042. But you never saw bad crops there and good crops here at the same time?—No.

25,043. Mr Gordon.—The necessity for fencing might arise in consequence of the subdivision. When you were a shepherd you would be in charge of a hirsel?—Yes.

25,044. How many sheep would be in the hirsel?—Sometimes I have seen 400 and another time 500.

25,045. How many sheep would you propose to have attached to each of these new crofts or small farms?—That would depend on the number of acres of arable.

25,046. But assuming that you have 30 acres of arable, and 1000 acres of hill ground, as you spoke of, how many sheep would that keep?—I think it would be heavily enough stocked by 100; it would depend a good deal upon the nature of the pasture. Some pasture might keep a few more, but in this county it will not take many more.

25,047. We have been accustomed recently to set them down as four or five acres to each sheep?—There is a great difference in different parts.

25,048. No doubt. If you have small holdings of 100 sheep each, would it not be an expensive thing to herd these sheep if you had not them fenced?—No, it would not. I have seen the like of that in back times in other parts of the country, and it was not such a heavy thing. All these might not be on the hill all the year, they could have so many of them at home. They could winter their ewe hoggs at home, and there were only ewes and gimmers.

25,049. Go up to Halamdary. How many holdings would you suppose could be placed, of the size you have mentioned, between Halamdary and the outrun of West Helmsdale?—I am not exactly sure, for I never examined that ground, it is so extensive. That is a thing it would take a little time to estimate.

25,050. How many people do you think in West Helmsdale would be willing to take crofts or small farms?—I could not say how many, but I heard always the cry amongst them for more land.

25,051. Would there be a dozen or twenty?—Oh, I think so.

25,052. Looking at the size of this ground and looking at the distance, the area between West Helmsdale and the farthest up place you mentioned, it appears to me that it would only hold about ten on each side of the Strath, or twenty in all?—God bless you, far more.

25,053. You would require to restrict your allowance of land then. You speak of 1500 acres: that means a large strip of ground. I am quite in favour of your making the places of a fair and reasonable size, but it won't hold so many as you think if you make them so big. You think yourself there is no fear of mildew in that country?—Of course, there are exceptional years; every year is not the same.

Helmsdale, Sutherlandshire.

Donald Watson

25,054. But on the whole you think you would be willing to shift from West Helmsdale and take a croft up in the neighbourhood of Badanloch?—Yes.

25,055. Willingly?—Yes.

25,056. And you think a good many more in your township would?—Yes.

25,057. Mr Macaulay, Agent for the Duke of Sutherland.—You are one of the Gartymore crofters, are you not?—Yes.

25,058. Were you recently offered some additional grazing by the Duke of Sutherland?—Yes.

25,059. How far did you take advantage of that offer?—Which is the last grazing,—Elderable?

25,060. Yes, towards Elderable?—We took no advantage as it was rented too heavy. [The Chairman.—What was the rent per acre?—It was only 6d.—And you did not think it worth 6d. an acre?—No.]

25,061. Was that the reason you gave to the Duke of Sutherland's representative for not taking advantage of the offer?—I understand so.

25,062. Were not you one of the parties who took a leading part in the matter?—Yes.

25,063. And do you say that was the reason given, that it was too highly rented?—Too highly rented. [The Chairman.—Is he right, Mr Macaulay? Was it 6d. an acre?—Mr Maclean.—I will submit the conditions.]

25,064. Then, as to sheep being put off your grazing ground, were there some of your neighbours who did not keep sheep?—Yes.

25,065. And is it not the fact that these people complained that their land was being fed on by your sheep and by the sheep of others who kept sheep?—That might have been.

25,066. Don't you know as a fact that that was the case?—That might have been the case on the one hand, and those who had less to do made more complaints. [The Chairman.—But there were complaints made?—I understood there were.]

25,067. Is it the fact that the majority of these crofters had not got sheep?—I am not exactly sure if it was the majority that had not them. [The Chairman.—Had a considerable number of them no sheep?—There was a considerable number of them that had no sheep; but if they had no sheep I think they had other stock according to that.]

25,068. So that this trouble was brought about by disturbance, between you and your neighbours, and others?—There was no disturbance.

25,069. But these neighbours complained?—Whatever complaints went in went in by disguise to the office.

25,070. There was no open complaint?—No.

25,071. But the fact remains that some had sheep and some had not?—Yes.

25,072. And you believe that reports went in in disguise?—Certainly, for I did not hear it until I heard it from the office.

25,073. Were you one of the committee who had to do with the Suisgill club farm?—Yes.

25,074. And do you consider that that farm was moderately rented?—Owing to the state we were in at the time it was rather, for at the time we got the farm prices were very high, and before we sold anything of what we bought prices fell, and we could scarcely make them pay; then we had nothing but the fleece and the wool to depend on.

25,075. What rent did you pay?—£100.

25,076. And did you see out your lease?—No.

25,077. What became of it?—It was given to Mr Bruce, West Garty, after that.

25,078. So that the Duke of Sutherland relieved you when you got into difficulties,—is that the fact?—He relieved us of the lease.

25,079. You said a little ago that you and the like of you would expect compensation for your croft if you took another holding, and would be better able to go into these new crofts than outsiders. Have you been successful in your present farm?—I was doing my best, but it was all that I could do to make a living, and I could scarcely do that.

25,080. Your rent is £4?—Yes.

25,081. What is the state of your rent; have you been able to meet your obligations?—Not altogether.

25,082. Then, are you in arrears of rent?—Yes.

25,083. How far?—So much.

25,084. You stated as to these other places that you thought you would be able to set them agoing without much aid. How do you expect to do that, knowing that you are at present in arrears of rent?—Oh, well, I might get over the arrears, perhaps.

25,085. Why do you not get over them?—I was not able to carry them out at the time as I was working at the bit land to get it fenced and different things cleared, and if I got that done I was expected to make the rent as I could.

25,086. Then, about the frost up these straths, is it not the fact that what destroys potatoes is not so much the frost as this 'rime' that lies in these glens? [The Chairman.—Frosty vapour]. It is commonly known, I believe, as 'rime' or hoar frost. It is the moisture that destroys the potatoes more than the frost?—It is what we call the hoar frost.

25,087. So that the number of degrees of difference in frost between here and Kildonan really has very little to do with the question? There being more frost here or at Kildonan won't affect the question; it is the moisture that affects the question?—It is the lowness of the land beside the river.

25,088. So that the difference in frost has really nothing to do with it?—I don't believe it has.

25,089. Mr Sutherland.—With regard to the sheep being put away, did the landlord ever give you power to put sheep upon these holdings, upon the common grazing?—A few of us that were summonsed.

25,090. Was it according to any rule of the estate?—No.

25,091. The grazings were not given for the purpose of keeping sheep on at all?—No, I understand since the time of the evictions.

25,092. Listen to this: this is a letter from Sir Arnold B. Kemball to Mr Joseph Peacock, Factor to the Duke of Sutherland at the time; the date is January 22, 1882. Among other things he complains that certain parties were keeping sheep upon grazing assigned to the use of their horses and cattle?—Yes.

25,093. And not for the use of sheep?—Oh, it is like enough.

25,094. So it was never meant that you should have sheep grazing at all?—I understand not.

25,095. Now, with regard to the arrears, have you applied to the Crofters Commission?—Yes.

25,096. How long ago?—We are served now since three years with a schedule from his Grace.

25,097. And when you get a judicial rent fixed you are quite prepared to settle with that Court, with regard to arrears and everything else, are not you?—Certainly, I am.

25,098. Perfectly ready and willing?—Yes.

25,099. The judicial rent is the one that you mean to recognise?—Yes.

25,100. You think you are entitled to that by Act of Parliament?—I think so.

25,101. Then, you said you were expending money on your holding; have you been doing that to any extent?—All that I could afford to spend I was spending, but I scarcely ever kept a proper note of that.

25,102. What length of fence have you put up round your holding?—About 500 yards wire fence.

25,103. Did you get any assistance?—No.

25,104. You did it all yourself?—All myself.

25,105. Did you get any assistance for reclaiming the land on the sea beach?—Yes.

25,106. That was all your own labour?—My own labour.

25,107. And you said that your arable acreage was how much?—5¼.

25,108. And for that you are paying £4?—Yes.

25,109. Mr Gordon.—You have a right to the grazing for that also?—Yes. Helmsdale Sutherlandshire.

25,110. There is one thing I forgot to ask you. Where was this grazing that you were offered?—Elderable, the nearest farm. Donald Watson.

25,111. Did it join your present grazings?—Yes, it joined the present common.

25,112. It was simply an extension of the present pasture?—Yes.

25,113. Mr Sutherland.—Did you complain at the time that the extension of the grazing stopped at the very place where the grazing began to get useful?—Certainly.

25,114. That it cut off all the green land, that was Elderable grazing?—We only got the worst.

25,115. And if you had got the whole of the pasture with the mixture of green, would you be prepared to take it?—If we had got it at a reasonable rent.

25,116. Mr Gordon.—Look out at the window; is that the pasture you were offered?—It is not in sight.

25,117. The Chairman.—Suppose you had got a croft up at Badanloch of the size of arable you have mentioned, and a corresponding extent of grazing, would you prefer to have that croft fenced round about if you were able to do it?—Certainly.

25,118. The arable and the grazings fenced round?—I would find the benefit of it.

25,119. Would you think it a very beneficial thing?—Yes.

25,120. And you would fence it if you possibly could?—Yes.

25,121. Do you mean to fence your arable and outrun, or to fence the grazing too?—I would fence the arable separate, and if the grazing would do without being fenced, certainly I would never do it.

25,122. But suppose you found the grazing would not very well do without fencing, would you fence it too if you could?—Yes.

25,123. Mr Forsyth.—Do you know the cost of that? It would be very heavy I am afraid; if your grazing was from 1000 to 1500 acres, as you estimate the cost of fencing would be very heavy, do you quite understand that?—Oh, yes, I understand that perfectly.

25,124. And you think that it would pay interest on the cost?—Yes.

ALEXANDER GUNN, Crofter, West Helmsdale (48)—examined. Alexander Gunn.

25,125. The Chairman.—What rent do you pay?—£3.

25,126. Can you tell me the extent of your arable?—I can give a rough idea, about 2½ acres arable.

25,127. And have you some outrun?—Yes, about 2½ or 2¾ acres outrun.

25,128. And a share of hill grazing the same as Watson has?—Yes.

25,129. And what stock have you got?—A cow and follower.

25,130. Have you any horses?—No.

25,131. No sheep?—No, the holding cannot take any more.

25,132. That is all you are able to keep?—Yes.

25,133. You heard the statement made by Macdonald?—Yes.

25,134. Do you agree with that statement?—Yes, I agree with the general statement.

25,135. And you agree generally with the evidence given by the preceding witnesses?—Yes.

25,136. Now, do you wish to make any addition of your own?—I don't remember just now, but if anything occurs to you to ask, I will be happy to answer it.

25,137. You heard a good deal said about fencing; are you in favour of a crofter having his holding fenced, if he is able to fence it?—I would not be in favour of fencing the whole of the hill grazing, but I would give an opportunity to the crofters to do what suited them best. But I would be in favour of fencing all the arable.

Helmsdale, Sutherlandshire.

Alexander Gunn.

25,138. And fencing the grazing or not, according to circumstances?—Yes.

25,139. Are you desirous of leaving the holding you have got if you can get another holding?—I think I ought to.

25,140. Your present holding is exceedingly small?—Yes, and it is bad ground.

25,141. Possibly you may think the rent stiff?—Well, the rent is, I think, rather high. The original rent was only 15s.,* and then it was raised to 25s., reduced when the railway went through on account of part of it being cut away to 19s., and then raised to £3, and I have not got any amendment.

25,142. When was it raised to £3?—I do not remember exactly, but about fourteen or fifteen years ago.

25,143. Now, of the two-and-a-half acres arable, have you reclaimed any portion?—Yes, I reclaimed some of it too, but there is a good bit of it that is very steep and would not give any crops; it is too cold. It is up the hill and very steep. I allowed that to run out for pasture or outrun.

25,144. Do you live by your holding?—No, I could not do that altogether.

25,145. Then, how do you maintain yourself?—I just engage in manual labour.

25,146. And do you get regular work?—No.

25,147. It is precarious?—Yes.

25,148. Upon what do you depend mainly for labour: is it the herring fishery?—No, I do not follow the fishery at all.

25,149. What kind of labour is it?—Working at any manual labour, such as roads, or any other thing that may occur, but not steady labour at all; perhaps two or three months in the year or thereby, so that we must be very economical in the way of living.

25,150. You would like if you could get a settlement large enough to enable you to sustain yourself?—Yes, no doubt.

25,151. Without outside labour or any other source of profit?—Certainly, I would.

25,152. Are there a good many other crofters and small tenants in this quarter having crofts of a similar size to your own?—Well, there are a good many.

25,153. And are these desirous like yourself of getting new and larger holdings if possible?—They expressed themselves to me to that effect. There is no doubt there is excellent land in the straths referred to.

25,154. Mr Sutherland.—Were you appointed at a public meeting to represent the opinions of the people here?—Yes.

25,155. You represented the eastern division in the County Council?—Yes.

25,156. So you have had abundant means of knowing the opinions of the people on this matter?—Certainly.

25,157. Are you of opinion that there is a strong desire existing to get opportunities of going back to this land?—Yes, that is a fact. I was coming in contact with the people since a short time back, and asking their opinions about it, and they expressed themselves very strongly in regard to it.

25,158. Do you believe in the great difficulty with regard to frost?—I do not. As an instance I may tell you that two or three years ago frosty vapour was lying upon the crofts in the morning and we were afraid—at least I was afraid—that the potatoes that were next the river would be more liable to be frost bitten, and I went to examine the potatoes. They were not touched at all, tho' a strip of the frostiness that came through the land about 400 yards from the water was all black and that strip continued for ever a mile from the west end of Marrel to the west end of Helmsdale.

25,159. And what happened to the potatoes; were they injured by that?—The shaws were black, but that was all.

* Gunn has since written explaining that the original rent was 5s.

25,160. How did the potatoes do in autumn?—Very well.

25,161. They were well enough after that?—Yes.

25,162. The holdings that you have referred to in your district lie along the bank of the river?—Yes.

25,163. There is no cultivated land on the whole strath of Kildonan from end to end so close to the river as yours?—Yes.

25,164. So that if any place is subject to the frost from the river it is Marrel?—Yes.

25,165. And that is the land the crofters have already is it not?—Yes.

25,166. How often are your potatoes destroyed by the frost in Marrel?—Some patches almost every year.

25,167. Have you got losses of potatoes by frost?—Yes, it prevents them from ripening.

25,168. So much?—So much.

25,169. How do the potatoes grown in Marrel compare with the potatoes that grow in other parts round here about; are they as good, or are they worse, or are they better?—I am not very well acquainted with the rest of the districts here, but I know for a fact the potato crop is very important.

25,170. But if there is any place on the whole course of the Kildonan Strath from the top to the bottom that is in a position to get frost it is Marrel?—Yes.

25,171. And that is the land the crofters have now?—Yes.

25,172. So that in any circumstances they were placed they could not be worse with regard to frost than they are in Marrel?—No, I don't think so.

25,173. Now, with regard to the pasture you have got, could you give us any idea of what angle it forms with the horizon?—I could not say.

25,174. Is it 95 degrees do you know?—(No answer.)

25,175. Is it mostly composed of what is called "scree,"—rocks crumbling away?—Yes. We can boast of having the most rocky land in Sutherland.

25,176. And the steepest?—Yes.

25,177. It is almost perpendicular?—Almost perpendicular. With your permission, I may add with regard to the Elderable grazing, that part of it was offered to the crofters at the rate of £40. Now it is practically useless to the crofters to take that park, because there would be as much expense in keeping that up as the whole farm of Elderable. We had a meeting over it and we viewed the thing,—we saw that it would be of no use, that price that was offered, so we came to the conclusion to apply to the Crofters Commission for the whole of it, and that is still pending.

25,178. The conclusion they came to was, that they should apply to the Crofters Commission for the whole hirsel of Elderable?—Yes.

25,179. Mr Gordon.—What was the rent to be, £40?—£40 for what was offered, the salvage that was offered.

25,180. Do you know how many acres were in it?—No.

25,181. Have you any idea how many sheep this additional pasture would keep?—About 200; that would be the utmost.

25,182. Cheviot ewes?—Yes.

25,183. The Chairman.—As to the sheep grazing in this locality, what is the proportion of sheep to grass on the average?—Is that with reference to what is on the straths?

25,184. Yes?—I could not exactly say.

25,185. You would not put 3 acres to the sheep, would you?—I have no knowledge of shepherding myself.

25,186. Mr Macaulay, Agent for the Duke of Sutherland.—Has the rent been raised since you became tenant of this holding?—Not since I became tenant.

25,187. You told us that you had a cow and a follower, but no sheep?—No sheep.

25,188. You have a right of keeping sheep, have not you?—I am not aware: I never kept sheep.

25,189. You know that your neighbours keep sheep —some of them?—Very few of them; if they do keep sheep it is tethered on their crofts.

25,190. But Mr Watson, the previous witness, keeps sheep?—I am not his neighbour.

25,191. And do none of the people in your township keep sheep at all?—I think two or three have sheep, I see them on the crofts, tethered.

25,192. Do they not put the sheep out on the common grazings?—Well, they may.

25,193. Have you any reason to believe that you have not as much right as they have to keep sheep?—I don't want to bother with sheep. [The Chairman.—But do you understand that attached to your holding there is a right to keep sheep on the hill pasture?—I am not aware that we ever got the right to keep sheep.]

25,194. Do you know that some of the other crofters have sheep?—They have.

25,195. The Chairman.—It does not quite follow that, because they have a right, he has a right.

25,196. Mr Macaulay.—My object was to find out whether he has exhausted his rights.

25,197. The Chairman.—You are quite entitled to do that.

25,198. Mr Macaulay.—Did you object to these other men having sheep?—No, I never objected.

25,199. You simply allowed them to have as many sheep as they liked?—I knew very well some of them were dependent upon them for their main subsistence.

25,200. Did it not suggest itself to you that this might be a means of subsistence to you as well as to them?—Yes, I took a notion to that for some time, but the croft was so small that we could not manage.

25,201. Have you been able to fulfil your obligations to your proprietor?—I don't know if I have altogether.

25,202. Are you in arrears of rent?—A little, I think.

25,203. How much?—I did not calculate exactly just now.

25,204. You are considerably in arrear?—Considerably? No, not considerably.

25,205. How do you propose to take this holding that you picture to yourself in the Strath of Kildonan in your present circumstances?—I suppose we would require a little Government assistance.

25,206. What do you mean by a little assistance? Just tell us frankly?—To get some Government money.

25,207. Some Government pay?—Government pay, and I would be in favour of getting compensation from the landlords for the loss.

25,208. Loss of what?—Loss of the reclamations of our forefathers.

25,209. You stated some time ago when asked how you made your living, that you did not get estate work?—I did not say that. [The Chairman.—No, what he said was this. I rather assumed in the question that possibly some of his labour was estate labour; he said he did not depend mainly on estate labour; he took labour anywhere he could get it. Part of that might be estate labour.]

25,210. The fact is you do get estate labour?—Yes.

25,211. You have just now completed a contract in Helmsdale?—Yes.

25,212. The Chairman.—What is that a contract for?—For repairing some streets in Helmsdale.

25,213. Mr Sutherland.—Did you get that employment from the County Council or from the estate?—For the period since last spring.

25,214. What is the nature of the contract?—Some of the streets in Helmsdale were handed over to the County Council.

25,215. To the Road Board?—To the Road Board to be maintained, and the estate put them in repair. The estate advertised for offers, and I was the successful offerer.

25,216. It was to put certain streets in repair that they might be taken over by the Road Board?—Yes.

25,217. Now, as to the right of keeping sheep, how many families did you say had the same sort of right to this hill grazing?—They had all an equal right.

25,218. How many families are there from the east end of Marrel to the west end of Gartymore?—Nearly 200. Helmsdale, Sutherlandshire.

25,219. How many acres have they of common grazings?—I suppose there are about 1500 acres. Alexander Gunn.

25,220. If 200 families have a common right of grazing on 1500 acres, and it takes 8 acres to keep a sheep, how many sheep could a family have?—Some families could not have any at all.

25,221. A vulgar fraction of a sheep?—Yes.

JOHN THOMSON MURRAY, Crofter, Portgower (54) —examined. John Thomson Murray.

25,222. The Chairman.—What is your rent?—£3.

25,223. Can you tell us the extent of your arable?—A little over three acres.

25,224. And have you some outrun?—A small bit.

25,225. What stock have you got?—One horse, one cow, one heifer, one calf and six sheep.

25,226. And you have a right of grazing on the hill?—Yes, in common with my neighbours.

25,227. You heard the evidence of Macdonald, the first witness?—Yes.

25,228. Do you agree with that evidence?—I do.

25,229. Does it set forth your views fully?—Yes.

25,230. Are you desirous of leaving your present holding if you could get another, and a larger one?—Yes, to-morrow, if I got compensated for the present one.

25,231. In leaving the present holding you desire compensation at the outgoing?—Yes.

25,232. Were you appointed at a meeting at Portgower to represent the crofters there?—Yes, for the parish of Loth.

25,233. You are here, therefore, as a delegate from the parish of Loth?—Yes.

25,234. I take it that Macdonald, in his statement which was a very full one, has mentioned all the lands that you think we ought to consider and inspect in this quarter?—Yes, regarding the parish of Kildonan, but not regarding the parish of Loth.

25,235. What is it you would like particularly to tell us regarding the parish of Loth?—I have to tell you first about Glen-Loth, secondly about Lochbeg, and thirdly Crackaig.

25,236. These are the principal places?—There is a bit of outrun at Kintradwell, but it is comparatively small.

25,237. At each of these points there is land which you think we ought to consider?—Yes.

25,238. As suitable for new settlements?—Yes. I travelled Glen-Loth recently, and I found that there was a large tract of land extending for about two miles and a half, all suitable for cultivation.

25,239. Along the river?—Along the road. That is from the foot of the Crask to the Sletdale bridge.

25,240. And is there a desire among those you represent to obtain new settlements in that quarter?—Yes. There are many who have made applications before now to his Grace the Duke of Sutherland for land, thus showing that they are desirous at this time of obtaining more land.

25,241. What was the result of these applications?—The result was that his Grace the Duke of Sutherland replied to me and said, the present holder of the farm of Garty, which is adjacent to the Portgower fields, could not give over part of his land in order that the crofters should be bettered.

25,242. Is the desire among those you represent mainly to get new settlements, or to get extensions of their present holdings?—I believe most of them would take new settlements, and others would go in for additional land.

25,243. In your own individual case, do you wish to leave your holding, or to get your holding extended?—I would leave it to-morrow if I got compensated for my present holding; but at the same time there would be a great advantage to the Portgower people if the

Helmsdale, Sutherlandshire.

John Thomson Murray.

Garty farm was broken down; the whole of them could get a piece of additional land without moving.

25,244. Is the Garty farm arable or grazing?—It is an arable farm.

25,245. How far up the river from Lothbeg is the land suitable, in your opinion, to be found?—From Lothbeg Bridge going straight up to Sletdale Bridge, there is hardly any land at the roadside that could be cultivated; but from the Sletdale Bridge to the top of the Crask, or rather underneath the Crask, it is quite suitable for cultivation, and the very best of soil too.

25,246. There is not much land of the kind you have in view between Lothbeg and Sletdale Bridge, but a great deal between Sletdale Bridge and Crask?—Yes. But let my lord remember that there is plenty of land at Lothbeg itself, extending to Coilburn.

25,247. Then, is there also land up the River Sletdale?—Yes, there is a part on the right hand side as you go up from the Sletdale Bridge.

25,248. It is pretty high there?—It is pretty high, but after you go over the ridge it is quite level.

25,249. And there is land there, you say?—Yes.

25,250. Is it a considerable area?—It is; it would make one good farm anyhow, that part of it that I allude to, and likewise there is land at the left hand side of the Sletdale River, but still further off.

25,251. What is the name of the place?—The name escapes me at present, but it can been seen.

25,252. Now, is there not other land in this parish that you ask our attention to?—Not except the arable farms.

25,253. Do you mean the arable land of the arable farms, or the grazings of the farms?—I made reference to the grazings belonging to the Crackaig farm, including the three pieces that I mentioned before.

25,254. You direct our attention to the grazings upon Crackaig farm?—Yes.

25,255. You think there is land there that we ought to look at?—Yes, first class land.

25,256. Are there grazings on any other farm you would like to mention?—No, that I am aware of.

25,257. When you referred to Garty farm, did you speak of arable land?—The arable.

25,258. Mr Sutherland.—But is there no arable land attached to Garty farm?—There is a small bit away to the right hand side above the Garty Bridge; there is a small place there called Barraclien, and then there is another place above the West Garty Bridge called the Riaskin. There was a croft at each of these places at one time.

25,259. But adjoining to the grazing of the Portgower crofters on the west, there is grazing land now attached to the Garty farm, is there?—Not that I am aware of, except the shore, but that has been cultivated.

25,260. Who meets you up the hill on the left?—Garty.

25,261. Garty grazing is it not?—Yes.

25,262. So that there is grazing at Garty attached to the arable land?—Yes.

25,263. Now, would you kindly tell us who occupies Garty farm adjacent to Portgower?—Mr Bruce.

25,264. Does he hold any other land?—Yes.

25,265. What does he hold?—Killearnan and Suisgill, and Craggie and Learable; he has all these.

25,266. He has two sheep farms up Kildonan Strath, Killearnan and Suisgill?—Yes, and Craggie and Learable.

25,267. You said that you applied to the proprietor of the land for an extension of your holdings?—Yes; we did it twice.

25,268. And the answer you got was?—We applied for Crackaig and Lothbeg.

25,269. You mean the arable land?—Yes, and we applied for the arable land a second time for Garty.

25,270. Did you apply for any grazing?—Not that I am aware of.

25,271. And if you do get the Garty farm, would you take the grazing along with it?—Certainly, they would require grazing along with the arable.

25,272. The other land in Glen-Loth, what use is it put to?—Sheep grazing.

25,273. Who is the tenant?—Mr Dudgeon.

25,274. What has he got besides Glen Loth?—Elderable and Lothbeg and Crackaig.

25,275. What is the population of the parish of Loth, do you happen to know?—It escapes me now, but I ought to know, for I was taking up the census two years ago,—I think it is 584 or so.

25,276. Where are the bulk of the people in the parish situated?—At Portgower.

25,277. Where do you find the next aggregation of population?—Culgower is the next place to Portgower; then Loth and Crackaig.

25,278. Do you know the acreage of the common grazing that the Portgower crofters have?—They are in common with the Gartymore people I understand.

25,279. You are aware that the burn between Portgower and Gartymore is the parish boundary?—Yes.

25,280. Do the Loth crofters have their grazing in common with the Kildonan crofters?—The Kildonan cattle come on our grazing.

25,281. In short, you live in a neighbourly way?—We live and let live.

26,282. So that you don't know whether the grazing is common, or whether you have it separate?—No. We maintain that we have it separately, but in such a thing I think we have it in common, the whole of us.

25,283. Will it amount to many acres per family?—I should think not.

25,284. Will it amount to 10 acres of grazing a family?—About that.

25,285. Where do you find the next population gathered in the parish of Loth?—Did I mention Loth and Culgower?

25,286. Yes?—Crackaig is the next hamlet.

25,287. Have they got any pasture do you know?—No, except that bit that was in dispute of late, between Mr Dudgeon and the crofters, and I suppose all the world has heard of the dispute That was between Mr Dudgeon and the crofters at Crackaig; it is almost more than it is worth. [The Chairman.—There was a litigation about it?—Yes.]

25,288. It went to Edinburgh, to the Court of Session?—Yes, it has been there.

25,289. And how much did it cost altogether?—It cost as much money as would cover the piece of ground.

25,290. And who has got it now?—They are in common again, as far as I understand; they live and let live; I think they came to that conclusion.

25,291. After spending all that money?—All that money; as much as would cover the piece of ground.

25,292. What land does Mr Dudgeon occupy besides this little patch?—He has got the whole of the parish almost.

25,293. And do you think that the people of the parish of Loth proper,—I am talking just now of Crackaig and these places,—are very much in need of some enlargement of their holdings?—Yes, very greatly.

25,294. You are quite certain of that?—Yes, I am certain, and although it should come to-morrow it would not be too soon.

25,295. Do you know if they have applied to the Crofters Commission for any extension of their holdings?—Yes, they did.

25,296. That you think also shows their desire?—Yes.

25,297. And those places that you think are fit for peopling, you or some one else would point them out to us, I have no doubt?—Yes, I will be most happy to point them out, that is to say whenever you call upon me.

25,298. Mr Macaulay, Agent.—This land near the Crask to which you have referred, has it ever been cultivated?—Yes.

25,299. Then, about Suisgill here, one of Mr Bruce's farms, is it not the fact that he took that farm when the crofters gave it up?—He did, and at the same time he was very anxious to get hold of it from the crofters.

25,300. So you have really no objection to Mr Bruce having taken that?—I have not.

25,301. Then, as to this piece of land that you referred to near Crackaig, what was the result of this msdale, erland- e.

n Thom- Murray.

action in the Court of Session?—The result was that they have to use it in common, both the tenant and the crofters.

25,302. Is it not the fact that the crofters were found not to have right to it?—So far as I could learn, they had the same right.

25,303. You don't know that that is the fact? [The Chairman.—What was the decision of the Court?]—The decision was as far as I am aware that they were to have it as they had it formerly, hand in hand. [The Chairman.—You can put in a copy of the judgment, Mr Macaulay.]

25,304. As to your holding, did you get an extension some time ago?—I cannot say I did, because it belonged to the house formerly.

25,305 But you as an individual did get an extension?—Yes, I as an individual did.

25,306. You have got this stock that you told us about?—Yes.

25,307. And you pay £3 of rent?—Yes.

25,308. Have you fulfilled all your obligations to the landlord?—I have not.

25,309. You are considerably in arrears of rent?—Some.

25,310. Considerably, are you not?—Yes.

25,311. Then, how do you propose to stock this new holding that you picture to yourself in the parish of Loth?—By some help, and in the course of time I could manage to get out of difficulties. The world is not to be the same always over a man; the best of men are in difficulties at times.

25,312. How do you propose to get this help, have you any suggestion to make?—I cannot see through it in the meantime, but I might see through it in the future. I have some prospects, but I am not to relate them in a public place like this, how to get over the difficulties.

25,313. In the meantime you are not in a position to take one of these holdings yourself?—I could; I could get the loan of money perhaps before very long although I have not it at present.

25,314. Mr Sutherland.—If you got a new holding under these conditions, would you expect to be so highly rented as at present?—No, I would not.

25,315. And you have no fear that you would fall into arrears of rent?—No.

25,316. Have you got in your mind at present that supposing such a holding were to be got, the rents would not be fixed by the landlord? Would you object to the rents being fixed by the landlord in this new holding?—I would.

25,317. The landlord fixes the rent you have at present?—Yes.

25,318. But you anticipate that in the new holding you would form an impartial tribunal like the Crofters Commission would fix the rent?—Yes.

25,319. And you think, therefore, you would not be likely to fall into arrear?—Yes.

DONALD MACLEAN, Factor for the Dunrobin Estates of the Duke of Sutherland (46)—examined.

25,320. The Chairman.—You are factor on the Dunrobin management?—Yes.

25,321. And have been factor since 1885?—Yes.

25,322. There is also a factor on the Scourie management and one on the Tongue management?—Yes.

25,323. Kindly read your statement.—The Duke of Sutherland's estates in the county of Sutherland extend to an area of 1,176,454 acres, and for convenience of management are divided into three districts, viz.—

Dunrobin with a rental of . .	£38,327
Tongue	17,000
Scourie	14,500
Total, . . .	£69,827

The Dunrobin district is under my charge, and it is with it only I have to deal in this statement. It comprises the eight parishes of Clyne, Creich, Dornoch, Golspie, Kildonan, Lairg, Loth, and Rogart, the whole area of these parishes being 583,818 acres, and exclusive of water, tidal water, foreshores, roads, and railway, 560,804 acres. Of this 415,000 acres may be taken as belonging to the Duke, exclusive of a large area of waste, lochs, &c., and this area classified and divided as follows:— Helmsdale, Sutherlandshire. Donald Maclean.

SHEEP FARMS.

Since 1882 the sheep farm rental, owing to depreciated value of wool and stock, and increased cost of wintering, has depreciated 37 per cent., and the arable farm rental has fallen 26 per cent. I submit a statement showing the classification of the agricultural rental [Appendix A, page 602], and the following is the classification of sheep farms, 33 in number:—

Between	25,000	and	30,000 Acres ...	1
„	20,000	„	25,000 „ ...	2
„	15,000	„	20,000 „ ...	2

„	3,000	„	5,000 „ ...	6
„	1,500	„	3,000 „ ...	3
Under 1,500 Acres			...	6
Total,			...	33

I also submit a statement showing the total area of each sheep farm, with estimated area of old arable land, &c., and other details. [Appendix B, page 602].

The list of sheep farms includes, with one exception, the reclaimed farms in the parishes of Lairg and Kildonan, which have been mostly put back to grass, being found unprofitable for cultivation.

I submit a plan showing all the sheep farms, deer forests, and cleared ground in the district. The sheep farms are edged green and coloured green; the deer forests are all coloured red, and the yellow shows ground belonging to other proprietors. The numbers on this plan correspond with those in Appendix B.

It will be seen by the statement as to area of the

Helmsdale, Sutherland-shire.

Donald Maclean.

sheep farms that the proportion of arable to hill land is exceedingly small. Diminish this area and you at once seriously injure the remainder of the grazings, and render immense tracts of land unlettable for either sheep or deer.

The quantity of land afforested for deer in the district is exceedingly small as compared with the whole area; and, as will be seen by a reference to the map submitted, with the exception of Dunrobin, the forests are all in the interior of the county, and consist of high-lying and exposed land, with but a very small area of old green or arable in it.

The forests are as follows:—

	Acres
(1) Dunrobin	13,300
Less Woods	2,000
	11,300
(2) Ben-Armine	18,450
(3) Ben-Hee	15,800
(4) Corriekinloch	10,800
	56,350
Cleared pieces—
Part of Dalnessie	4,177
„ Shinness	5,200
„ Borrobol (formerly Ben-Armine)	3,411
„ Balnacoil (do).	1,062
	70,200 Acs.

The sheep farms numbered 13 and 33 on the submitted map, extending together to 9400 acres, have also been wholly or partially cleared by the tenants, who occupy both farm and shooting. Badenloch and Gearnsary (Nos. 2 and 4) are not fully stocked, the wedder ground on these being kept mostly clear of sheep. None of this cleared ground is adapted for small holdings, and for many years past could not have been profitably occupied as sheep grazings. The class of stock such as could be reared in these situations would only find a market at prices fatal to profitable occupation.

The following is the present rental or value of the forests and cleared places:—

Dunrobin,	£1000
Ben-Armine,	750
Ben-Hee,	125
Corriekinloch,	400
Part of Dalnessie,	50
„ Shiness,	60
„ Borrobol,	60
„ Balnacoil,	40
Total,	£2485

Dunrobin Forest has been considerably reduced in area of late years, and a proposal is under consideration just now for reducing it still further, with the view of extending grazings on the Dunrobin or east side.

There can be no better illustration of the absurdity of cultivation to any extent in high-lying and exposed situations than that afforded by the late Duke of Sutherland's reclamations. The details and extent of this work at Shiuness in the parish of Lairg and at or near Kinbrace in the parish of Kildonan are already pretty well known.

I submit a statement [Appendix C, page 602], showing the date of reclamation of the several farms, the names of the farms, the areas reclaimed, total expenditure on each farm, cost per acre, present rents, and rents prior to reclamation. The statement shows that in Lairg parish 1932 acres were reclaimed at a cost of £122,547 or an average of £67 per acre. The present rents of these farms are £948, 2s. 7d.; the old rents before the reclamation were £359, 15s. Of course, the present rents include not only the area of land that was reclaimed but also a considerable extent of hill grazing. Similarly in Kildonan parish the total area reclaimed was 1316 acres and the cost £57,918, or an average of £44, 0s. 3d. per acre. The present rents are £1041, 9s. 4d.; the rents prior to the reclamation were £1040, so that the increase of rent in Kildonan is £1, 9s. 4d. only, or practically nil.

Helmsdale, Sutherland-shire.

Donald Maclean.

25,324. Mr Sutherland.—May I ask if Suisgill is included in that comparison?—Yes, it is included.

25,325. But there was no money expended on Suisgill I understand?—None. In addition to that I may say that Kinbrace farm was taken on hand for the reclamations and there was a loss of £3000 on the working, no less than £1700 being a loss occasioned by a disastrous winter.

25,326. May I further ask if the average reduction of 37 per cent. that has been given all over the estate is also applied to that before the comparison is made? You have stated, I think, that there was a reduction of rent given in the grazing farms of 37 per cent. and on agricultural farms of 26 per cent. Have you made the deduction from this before making the comparison?—Yes, these are all the reduced rents.

Of the 3247 acres reclaimed, only about 700 are now cultivated, cultivation after years of test and trial being found unprofitable, notwithstanding the fact that the farms have been worked as mixed farms along with hill land as sheep grazing.

As will be seen from the statement there was expended on these reclamations the enormous sum of £184,454 exclusive of the great loss on farming the land while on hand, and the result both as regards the land itself and return for the money expended has proved a failure in every sense of the word. The experience has proved that without a very great change in climate, cultivation in such exposed districts as those where the reclamations were carried out, cannot be made profitable, however apportioned or highly farmed the land may be.

The farms on hand at Lairg were under the charge of an experienced manager of both arable and sheep farms, and every care and economy was exercised; and yet up to the time the last of them was let (1892), there was a loss on the working of no less than £22,292.

The result at Kildonan has been worse than at Lairg, and there most of the land has gone out of cultivation, and a large area has fallen back into a condition worse than its natural.

Since 1885 there has been taken off large farms and added to crofters' holdings in different parishes in the district 484 acres of arable land, of which 117 are kept in grass as park grazings, and 8318 acres of hill pasture. This was fenced for the crofters at a cost to the proprietor of £750. Most of this pasture was of the best of the grazing of the farms from which it was taken.

In addition to this the principle of enlargement of holdings has been carried out since 1883 by adding 32 crofts which fell into the proprietor's hands to the neighbouring holdings.

In August 1888, 1420 acres of pasture were offered off the Elderable Farm to the West Helmsdale crofters and those in the townships adjoining as an extension of their grazings, but it was declined by them. Copy of correspondence and conditions on which the grazing was offered can be submitted if desired.

25,326*a*. Just tell me what was the rent proposed to be asked?—The rent I think was £40, but at the same time we stated that if they thought that too high we were quite prepared to leave it for settlement by the Commission. The ground was relet to the farm tenant, but with a condition in the lease that he should relinquish it at a stipulated rent, if the Crofters Commission decided that it should be given to the crofters. I may state that the stipulated rent on which he agreed to relinquish it was £50 a year. A much larger area was asked for, and might have been granted, but the experience of Suisgill, which had been given up by mostly the same tenants, only a short time previous, did not warrant the granting of a larger area than it was thought the tenants were able to stock.

An application by the tenants for the whole of the Elderable Farm was made to the Crofters Commission in December 1888, but it has not yet been dealt with.

The Suisgill Farm, Kildonan, extending to 6000 acres, was let to the Kildonan and Loth Grazing Association in 1883, on a nineteen years' lease, at a rent of £100 a year—just about half the value at the time, and of that paid by the adjoining sheep farmers. The grazing was granted exclusively for the cottars and crofters in the parishes of Kildonan and Loth, as will be seen by the lease and Articles of Association.

On the favourable terms granted the grazing should have proved of great advantage to the crofters, but want of capital to properly stock, differences of opinion as to working, and so on rendered it unprofitable, with the result that it was relinquished at Whitsunday 1888, the landlord remitting the last half-year's rent; and but for the fact of the adjoining sheep-farmer coming forward and assisting them by taking a portion of the grazing, it must have been given up sooner.

It was then let on a seven years' lease to Mr Bruce at the same rent, with a condition that he would provide grazing for crofters' stock for the first two years, by which time it was thought some extension of existing grazing would be made.

Here was a case of a large grazing granted exclusively for the benefit of the small tenants at about half rental value, with the management in their own hands, and full permission to stock with either cattle, sheep, or horses, proving a failure in less than five years.

We have several instances in this district of small mixed farms from £30 rent upwards, and some of these in outlying parts of the district. It would have been a pleasure to me could I have spoken of all the latter as successful examples of what could be done with small holdings in the internal parts of the county; but I am sorry to say that, notwithstanding industry, perseverance and economy on the part of the tenant, the fact that there was to begin with no borrowed capital, and that great assistance had been given by the landlord both in reduction of rent and otherwise, the tenants at the present moment are in a precarious position, to say the least. I mention no names. Names have been mentioned here to-day, but I would rather not particularly refer to them: I merely refer to the position generally in which these farmers stand.

We have some instances, too, of small holdings, £30 to £50 rent, under lease, where the tenants bound themselves to erect new buildings, the landlord undertaking to supply materials, and tenants having right to compensation at end of lease.

They have never been able to fulfil the condition, notwithstanding very low rent; and it simply means that if these tenants continue, the landlord must erect the buildings for them. A crofter with seven or eight acres of arable land and share of hill pasture in a good locality, where he can supplement the produce of the croft by wages from outside labour, is infinitely better off and more comfortable than such tenants.

Then, I have a statement here containing my own personal views, which I suppose I may read.

25,327–8. The Chairman.—Certainly.—A proper gradation of holdings is admitted and should exist on all estates, but the adaptability of the land and climate must rule this. Landlords, as individuals and owners, who wish to make the most of their land, will, as necessity arises, offer stronger inducements than now exist to tenants to remain on the land and for the investment of capital in it; and no doubt an increase of small farms or holdings may be one inducement, and if a real demand for such arises, and men with sufficient capital are ready to take them, the supply will arise; but it would be an extremely risky experiment to chop up large pastoral farms and give State assistance in localities not adapted for small holdings either by soil or climate. Small holdings in situations where there is a ready outlet for the smaller industries or products, dairy produce, poultry, &c., may pay, and the more of such holdings the better for the country; but in situations where there is no such market, and the produce is limited almost exclusively to sheep and cattle, as it is in the greater part of Sutherland, they would not pay at such prices as have been prevailing for stock, and more especially if a tenant had, over and above his rent, to meet interest on borrowed capital. Sheep farmers during recent years have come far short of making ends meet, and, through foreign competetion, no class of farmers have more cause to look forward with anxiety than the occupiers of hill grazings whether large or small. The future of British agriculture is more than ever dependent on the numbers and quality of its live stock. Anyone acquainted with the successful conditions of sheep and cattle farming knows the importance of rearing only the highest quality of stock if anything like a remunerative price is to be obtained in the market. Experience has taught us that with regard to both cattle and sheep, the small tenants generally have not been able to produce a quality sufficiently attractive to buyers for some years now at anything like a paying price. Many unfortunately, are perfectly unmarketable, and, with regard to cattle especially, the class which would be reared in the straths and on the hills adjoining would not in the present state of stock markets find customers. Cheap transit of stock of the highest quality from foreign countries precludes the possibility of small tenants, who have to pay rent and interest on borrowed capital, besides maintaining their families in anything like comfort, from making headway against it.

Helmsdale, Sutherlandshire.

Donald Maclean.

In conclusion, I have the authority of the Duke of Sutherland to say that he is favourable to the formation of more small farms in this district, in localities well adapted for them, and where there is every chance of making a living; and as certain lands fall out of lease, they will be broken up and offered to crofting tenants who are known to be industrious and persevering, and who are in a position to occupy larger holdings.

(Signed) Donald Maclean.

Population.

Just one other statement in regard to population, as this matter has been referred to. I submit a statement showing the population of the county since 1801, from which it will be seen that between that year and 1891 there is a decrease on the ninety years of 1240 while there is a decrease on the ten years 1881 to 1891 of 1449. In the eight parishes in this district the decrease for the ten years to 1891 was 898. Natural causes account for this. The advance of education has much to do with it, for I find unmistakably that as the young people become more educated, the greater is the tendency to move to spheres which afford better opportunities in life than can possibly be found in rural districts. I may state that I have had practical experience of that within the last two or three months, when I offered very nice sized holdings to crofters' sons, not in this parish but in parishes very little removed, and they have been declined, notwithstanding strong inducements by young men who might have done well in these holdings. They preferred to go south and make their way in other parts of the world. Such reductions of rural population are in accordance with the mechanical and other changes and developments which have characterised the life of many years, and they are not by any means as serious a matter as the rapid growth of towns. I am not sanguine enough to imagine that any compulsory formation of small holdings will bring about a revolution in the conditions affecting agriculture in this country. Legislate as you like, you will not arrest the reduction of the rural population to any extent.

Helmsdale, Sutherlandshire.

more at leisure the statements he has been kind enough to submit to us. With regard to small holdings and the opportunity for increased holdings not having been taken advantage of, may I ask if there has been an attempt made to put the Small Holdings Act into operation in this county?—An application was made by the County Council to the Duke, but no specific lands were applied for.

25,331. What was the result of the application?—The result was that there was no land available at the time; that was the Duke's reply.

25,332. That was the practical result?—That was the practical result at the time; the leases were running, and there was no land available.

25,333. When was that?—In the commencement of this year; I think in April or May.

25,334. And, with regard to the general statement you made, is there a prospect of more land being available within a reasonable time?—There is.

25,335. That alone was the ground of the declinature of the Duke?—That alone.

25,336. I have a number of other questions, but as you have kindly expressed your willingness to meet us again, I shall reserve them till that occasion.

25,337. The Chairman.—We will consider the whole of these documents carefully, and let you know as to your affording us another opportunity for putting questions to you upon them, before we leave your district.*

[ADJOURNED.]

GEORGE GRANT FRASER, Farmer, Achvaich, Dornoch (33)—examined.

25,338. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter at Achvaich?—No, I am a joint-farmer with my father.

25,339. What rent do you pay?—£48.

25,340. Do you hold under a lease for a term of years?—Yes.

25,341. Which is still running?—Yes.

25,342 Is it a nineteen years' lease?—No, it is a fifteen years' lease.

25,343. Have you been appointed as a delegate by the crofters at Dornoch to appear before us?—Yes.

25,344 Were you appointed at a public meeting?—Yes, along with others.

25,345. Along with Macleay, Clashmore, and Grant, Evelix?—Yes.

23,346. Have you a written statement?—Yes.

25,347. Read it please.—At a public meeting of crofters, labourers, and others held in the Birichen Schoolhouse in the month of March 1893, we, Thomas Grant, Evelix, and George Grant Fraser, Achvaich, whose signatures are appended hereto, were unanimously appointed to prepare and submit to the Royal Commission (Highlands and Islands, 1892), a statement showing what lands in the parish of Dornoch not already in the occupation of crofters or small tenants could be made into crofter holdings.

According to the Ordnance Survey Maps, this parish extends to about 33,931 acres. It is owned by two estates—the Sutherland and Skibo estates. A considerable portion of the parish, as will be seen from a glance at the maps, is covered with woods. The acreage of these as entered in the Valuation Roll is 5270. Of that extent the Sutherland estate claims 4560 acres and the Skibo estate 710. The remainder of the parish is occupied by large farmers and crofters. It is needless to remind your honours that the fat of the land is in the hands of the big farmers. From the last Valuation Roll we find there are, excluding the municipal burgh of Dornoch and village of Embo, 186 crofters paying a rent of £855 and 20 cottars paying a rent of £30—altogether 206 crofters and cottars paying a rent of £885. There are, besides, the following 20 large farms:—Torboll, valued at £280; Cambusavie, £158; Skelbo, £380; Embo, £360; Coul, £168; Trentham, £60; Achinchanter, £63; Pitgrundy, £146; Proncynain, £150; Proncy, £184; Milton of Evelix, £80; Lower Evelix, £112; Davochfin, £86; Cyderhall, £180; Rosebank and Dalrae, £86; Ardallie, £65; Cuthill, £190; Skibo, including grass parks, £260; Achormlarie, £72; Achley, £60; Overskibo, £160—twenty farms paying a rent of £3240, and 206 crofters and cottars paying a rent of £885. All these farms bear traces of evictions. The 206 crofters and cottars are nearly all descendants of those who were evicted from the above-mentioned farms after 1812, and had to settle or squat on what was formerly their common pasture. Shortly after this the greater part of what remained of their common pasture was appropriated and planted. Not only that, but several of the crofters were a second time removed and their improved patches planted. These again had to settle down on what remained of the pasture. Hence the reason for the present congested state of the crofters. All these woods and plantations are now fenced in for the use of game. We look upon this as a clear case of afforestment. His Grace the late Duke of Sutherland was frequently petitioned to grant the use of these woods for pasture, but as frequently declined, because, he alleged, the crofters' cattle when grazing would destroy the trees. These trees were full grown years ago. The present Duke's attention was drawn to these woods when on his election tour in 1885. He then promised to remedy matters when he would get 'into 'power.' This summer a petition was sent him praying him to grant the woods for pasture, but evidently his promises were forgotten, as his reply ran as follows:—

'Dunrobin Castle,
July 22nd, 1893.

'MR ANGUS MUNRO,—In reply to the petition dated 'June 1st, and signed by yourself and fifteen other 'crofters asking for the grazing of the Harriet Planta-'tion, I am desired by the Duke of Sutherland to say 'that he has given it his very careful consideration, 'and he regrets very much that for various reasons 'connected with the estate management he cannot 'comply with the request.—Yours faithfully,
HENRY WRIGHT.'

A drive through the parish will at once show your honours where the dividing line between good and bad land comes in. Here you will find the order of things inverted. All the big farms lie along the coast, and the crofters are huddled on the barren hillsides and peat-bogs further inward.

We shall now direct your honours' attention to the lands which we think come within the scope of your remit. Let us begin with the farm of Achormlarie, situated on Skibo estate at the head of the valley through which the Evelix flows. It is now a sheep-farm, valued at £72 (about 5d. per acre), and rented by a non-resident pluralist tenant, Mr Hugh Ross, Inverbrora. The arable land more recently under cultivation and known as the Newtown extends to about 27 acres. This land was last cultivated about fourteen years ago. Excellent crops were grown here. The old town, lying to the west, has been much longer lying waste. It extends to about 70 acres, has a southerly exposure, and is excellently fitted for the formation of new holdings. A considerable part of good hill pasture adjoins these places. They are on the Skibo estates.

We shall next direct your honours' attention to Strath-Carnach. Along this strath we find several townships formerly occupied by man but now devoted to sheep and game. The following are the townships:—Brae, Garskelly, Achtaduach, Dalnameine, Torfalloch, Esvreck, Achinael, Lednacloiche, Allt-tigh-Neill, and a part of the farm of Torboll. All the aforementioned townships are on the Torboll and Cambusavie farms, and were formerly occupied by a peaceful and prosperous tenantry. From inquiries of the older inhabitants—some of them being those evicted—we learn that there were no fewer than 45 families removed from these townships. The first evictions, as far as we can learn, took place in 1809. Some of these settled in Laid-na-Cloich. After years of toil cultivating the soil, and struggling with a policy of oppression, they were again evicted from there in 1833, and their land added to the farm of Cambusavie, then occupied by Dr Ross, afterwards of Torboll. When the 93rd Regiment was being raised, a call was made on the householders of Strath-Carnach to supply each a son to that Regiment. This call was responded to on the understanding that it would protect them from eviction. How far the promises made to the relatives of those who, relying on these promises, had gone forth with their lives in their hands to fight their country's battles, had been observed, fills a well known page of history. Surrounding these several townships mentioned are several hundred acres of very good hill pasture which would add considerably to the value of the arable holdings. We shall now direct your honours to the arable farms on the south side of the parish. Although these pass under the name of arable farms they are not all cultivated. In consequence of this, we submit they come within the remit made to your honours. On the Skibo farm there is a series of eleven grass parks. These parks extend in the aggregate to about 150 acres or thereby. They are green and uncultivated. They are annually exposed to auction and rented by large farmers and dealers as grazing parks. Besides this, some of them are used as breeding grounds for hundreds of pheasants. There are also lying near these parks the farms of Rosebank, Dalvrae and Ardallie. They are occupied by non-resident pluralist farmers. On the farm of Sidera, or Cyderhall, there are also the old arable townships of Dalbhabbie and Tighcliobe with pasture adjoining. The foregoing farms we consider, would be cultivated to much greater profit if they were in the hands of smaller tenants. We consider we have in the foregoing statement shown to your honours that there is a considerable number of acres of land in this parish presently in the hands of pluralist and sheep farmers which could be cultivated to profit by a class of smaller tenants. The question of the size of holdings now comes in. A hard and fast rule cannot be laid down. The situation of the locality may interfere with the size of the holding. The cultivated land on an exclusively arable holding would not be the same as that on a holding partly arable and partly pastoral. Before a crofter would have any degree of comfort he would require to have two ponies, three cows and their followers. If his holding were exclusively arable, he would, to bring this stock through, require from 16 to 31 acres of fairly good soil. One acre of this we would allow for house, steading, garden and corn-yard. The remaining acres would be for crop; and, on account of the want of outrun, would require to be worked on the six-shift course. Give the same crofter or farmer a holding in any of the straths or glens, with pasture to graze from thirty to forty sheep, and he can do with about from 13 to 26 acres of fairly good soil, and bring through the aforementioned stock.

Stocking and Building. The question now arises, and, we observe, is frequently put by your honours, whether there is a desire on the part of crofters or cottars to take up new holdings or a likelihood of them being able to build houses and purchase stock in the event of grazings or other suitable land being made available for holdings. There is a very strong desire on the part of crofters, cottars and ploughmen to take up new holdings if made available. Some ten years ago a petition was presented to His Grace the late Duke of Sutherland asking land for new crofts. A reply came in due course. It pointed out that the only available land that the estate had was some barren moorland which would require about four acres to feed a snipe. When the County Councils were empowered to administer the Small Holdings and Allotments Acts, hundreds of applications flowed in to the Council from the county, this parish included. As yet not one acre has been taken up, and to all appearance cannot until such time as these Acts are made workable.

George Gr Fraser.

Now as to the likelihood of crofters or cottars being able to build houses and purchase stock. If we lived in anything like a world of fairplay, such a question would not be necessary. When the forbears of the present crofters and cottars were evicted from the straths, glens and large farms, did they get compensation for the improvements they did? If not, that lies still an unpaid debt, and the best way the estate can pay it off is by building and reclaiming the new holdings. If the estate does not see its way clear to pay its legal debts or to make reparation for the sins of its predecessors, we ask, is it necessary to put the question at all? If so, a glance at any of the crofters' holdings should be sufficient answer. Look at him! He or his forefathers were evicted from a comfortable home and cast to the four winds of heaven. What did he receive when cast out? Nothing—probably everything he had burnt to the ground. Follow him! He sits down on a barren hillside with neither house nor perhaps one inch of green soil. He builds a house and sets to reclaim and trench land. A neighbour comes and does the same. Look at that hillside then and now. All that change was brought about by the crofter who not only built the houses, reclaimed and stocked the land without any aid from the proprietor, but also paid rent. Look at the man who appropriated the land the crofter was evicted from. He got that land improved, without paying anything for it. Not only that, but the estate built houses and erected fences for him. While the crofter has to do all this unaided he is charged a rent from 25 to 100 per cent. above the man who gets everything done for him. Seeing that the crofter was able to do this when threats and fears were hanging about him like millstones, is there any reason to doubt but he can accomplish the same, or even more, when he can breathe the air of freedom, has the benefit of fixity of tenure and a probability of a fair rent?

Supposing in some instances a loan were required, would it not be a much more Christian act on the part of any Government to use the money in helping to repeople the straths and glens in the Highlands rather than transport the Highlanders to the wilds of America? The giving of a loan for this purpose would be a perfectly safe investment. Sufficient security would be found in the land, buildings and other assets of the occupiers, and the investment would, we are sure, be the best of the kind for the country which any Government ever made.

This leads us to say a few words on the question of rent. What is a fair rent for land is, we think, a question easily answered. In fixing a rent for any piece of land, the first thing we consider should be done is to ascertain what is known as the prairie value of the land, if it has been improved, and at whose expense this was done. If the improvements, reclamations or buildings have been done by the crofter or farmer or his predecessors in the same family, the prairie value, we hold, is still the fair rent of that land. The improvements, reclamations and buildings we consider represent the occupier's capital sunk in the soil, and as such, the proprietor or landlord has not, or should not, have any legal or moral claim to it. On the other hand, if the improvements, reclamations or buildings were done by the proprietor or his predecessor the fair rent we consider should be the prairie value plus a reasonable interest on the money expended on the improvements.

The foregoing statement we respectively submit to your honours' consideration with the consent and approval of the crofters and others in the parish of Dornoch.

(Signed) THOMAS GRANT,
" GEO. G. FRASER.

25,348. You mentioned the matter of congestion. Is that due mainly to previous removals by the landlord, or partly due to that and partly to sub-division by the tenants themselves?—I am not aware that there was any sub-division by the tenants.

25,349. Your view and the view of those you represent is that it was due to previous removals, sending the people down towards the shore?—Yes.

25,350. A good deal of the information you have given us is of a date prior to the recollection of the present generation. Now, may I just ask you how you gathered that information?—We got this information from the older people of the parish.

25,351. Some of them very old?—Yes.

25,352. Old enough to remember the removals?—Yes.

25,353. Did you act through a committee?—Through a committee who gathered the information.

25,354. Appointed at that meeting?—Yes.

25,355. You mentioned woods at Dornoch. For what in your judgment are these woods adapted under the present remit?—The people are of opinion that it would be no harm to the woods if they were given to the people for a small sum as pasture for their cattle and sheep.

25,356. Woodland grazing?—Yes.

25,357. But may I take it that you do not propose to cut down the wood?—No, there is no proposal to cut down the wood.

25,358. The grazing in the wood would be very suitable for an extension of crofters' grazings?—Yes, and the crofters are very anxious to obtain it.

25,359. You mention the farm of Achormlarie as containing land suitable for the purposes of this remit. You spoke of the rent as £72; what is the extent of the farm?—I am not prepared to say at present what the extent is, but there will be 400 or 500 sheep on it.

25,360. And is there arable land suitable for a farm of that size?—Yes. It would be divided into two or three very nice arable farms, with a less number of sheep for each, and some cattle and horses.

25,361. Do you mean with or without taking the arable?—Oh, with the arable. The arable is not cultivated; it is lying waste.

25,362. Is it in permanent grass?—Yes.

25,363. How much of the land is under rotation?—There is no land under rotation except a small bit by the shepherd,—perhaps two acres or so.

25,364. It is all being used as a grazing subject by a non-resident farmer who lives at Inverbrora?—Yes.

25,365. Is there a dwelling-house and steading upon it?—Yes.

25,366. And does anyone live there?—The shepherd.

25,367. Has it been occupied of late years by the tenant?—Yes.

25,368. How long is it since it was occupied?—About fourteen or fifteen years ago.

25,369. But not since then?—No.

25,370. Is any of the land in that farm formed out of small holdings?—Yes, it was small holdings at one time, perhaps eighty or one hundred years ago. There are none who remember the tenants there, but the marks show that they were there.

25,371. Then the farm consists to a considerable extent of these holdings consolidated into a farm?—Yes.

25,372. You mentioned the district of Strathcarnoch. In that quarter there is a large number of old townships?—Yes.

25,373. The names of which you gave us, and these townships are now to be found in the farms of Torrobol and Cambusavie?—Yes.

25,374. Is there, in your opinion and in the opinion of those you represent, a considerable tract of ground there suitable for the purpose you have in view?—Yes.

25,375. For what precise purpose is it,—for new settlements or for extension of grazing?—For new settlements they would be more useful, as they have sheep pasture and cattle pasture, and arable besides.

25,376. Are there considerable tracts of old arable land in that quarter?—Yes.

25,377. And is it your opinion that that land might be occupied by self-sustaining holdings which could be cultivated to a profit?—Yes.

25,378. Now, on the Skibo estate you mentioned some farms which you described as arable farms. Do you mean by that farms under rotation, or consisting of old arable land?—They are under rotation, but the remark was made that they were held by pluralist farmers.

25,379. These are Rosebank, Dalvrae, and Ardallie?—Yes.

25,380. Is there land in these farms that we might look at with advantage?—Yes.

25,381. Is that land under crop?—Yes.

25,382. Or is it land under grazing?—It is under crop.

25,383. The farmer there is non-resident?—Non-resident.

25,384. Where does he live?—There are two farmers, one has Ardallie, and he lives at Evelix.

25,385. And the other?—The other has Dalvrae and Rosebank, and he lives at Cyderhall.

25,386. What is his name?—Maclennan, Cyderhall.

25,387. And the name of the tenant who has Ardallie?—Grant, Evelix.

25,388. Who has a farm on Evelix besides?—Yes.

25,389. How many farms have these tenants altogether?—That is all. Maclennan has three and Grant has two.

25,390. Are there the remains, the visible remains, of old townships on Cyderhall farm?—Yes, there are two named in the report,—two small places with about 57 acres between them, that would be very suitable.

25,391. All these lands you have mentioned are at no great elevation above the sea?—Oh, no, they are not very high.

25,392. They are low-lying lands?—Yes.

25,393. And what is the general character of the soil?—It is fairly good land.

25,394. What kind of land,—clay, or sand, or moss?—Light loam land.

25,395. Would it, in your opinion, grow the crops that are usually raised in this quarter?—Yes.

25,396. To a profit?—Yes.

25,397. You dealt with the subject of the cost of new holdings. Suppose no assistance to be obtained from the landlord, would the crofters in this vicinity desiring new holdings be able to proceed with them without assistance?—Some of them would.

25,398. Many of them?—I am not aware.

25,399. Most of them?—Most of them are inclined in the way of Government assistance.

25,400. But am I right in thinking that as many as possible would proceed without such assistance?—Yes.

25,401. What assistance have they in their minds?—The only assistance they have in their minds is Government assistance.

25,402. But for what particular purpose,—for building, or what?—For building I suppose; most of them would, I think, be able to stock if the buildings were erected.

25,403. They would like assistance for building dwelling-houses and steadings?—Yes.

25,404. And would repay the loan in the course of years?—Yes.

Golspie.

George Grant Fraser.

25,405. They have no desire to have the money gifted?—No.

25,406. Is the system of cultivating land by rotation pursued here, even by small holders?—Oh, yes, it is by rotation.

25,407. Most of the crofters cultivate their crofts by rotation?—Yes, on a five-course shift.

25,408. And is it quite understood now in this quarter that that is the best way of carrying on even a small holding?—Yes, where they have any pasture or outrun; but they consider where they have no outrun that the six-course shift would be better,—it would strengthen the land more, and would give them more room for pasturing their stock.

25,409. But any case of not following a rotation is exceptional?—Yes.

25,410. Mr Sutherland.—You said that there were 3913 acres in the parish of Dornoch, and that in that area there were 20 farms and 206 crofters?—Yes.

25,411. Could you give us any idea of the relative amount of land held by both classes? Do the 206 families occupy the greater part of the parish?—I don't think they do.

25,412. Do the 20 farmers then occupy it?—Yes.

25,413. Do they occupy twice as much land as the 206 families?—I would be inclined to think so, but I have not got the figures.

25,414. But from your knowledge of the parish I wish you to give us an approximate idea. You think, do you, that the 20 farmers have got more land in their possession than the 206?—Oh, yes, and the very best of the land.

25,415. Then, those places that you referred us to for our observation of the land are on the two farms of Torrobol and Cambusavie?—Yes.

25,416. Are these lands, in your opinion, well adapted for the purposes of our inquiry?—Yes, we think so.

25,417. And you think the desire exists on the part of the people to get that land?—Yes.

25,418. I have no doubt you have very good means of knowing of the existence of that desire?—Yes.

25,419. Are you in a favourable position to know their minds?—Oh, yes.

25,420. You are a member of the County Council, are you not?—Yes.

25,421. And had you yourself to deal directly with the Small Holdings Act?—Yes.

25,422. Were you a member of the Council's committee with regard to that Act?—Yes.

25,423. You were a member of the committee appointed to report to the County Council as to the existence of a desire to get land?—Yes.

25,424. And did you report to the Council that you found such a desire?—Yes, we had petitions.

25,425. Petitions from various parts of your constituences?—Yes.

25,426. And did you report to the Council?—Yes.

25,427. And did the Council then proceed in terms of the Act to apply to the landlord?—Yes, the committee proceeded to apply to the landlord.

25,428. Had you any reply?—Yes.

25,429. What was the tenor of that reply?—That there was no land available, except some parks at the Embo farm, which the Council considered too high.

25,430. Why were they considered too high?—Too highly rented.

25,431. Do you remember what the rent was that was asked?—£1 per acre, and to keep up the fences, and several other conditions.

25,432. Did the Council consider they would not be justified in taking land on these conditions?—No.

25,433. You referred, I think, in your statement to the desire to make the Small Holdings Act workable. May I ask you what you exactly meant by that? Did you find the Act unworkable?—Yes.

25,434. Both the Small Holdings and the Allotments Acts?—Yes.

25,435. In what respect did they fail?—There was no way of compelling the landlords where they were unwilling to give the holdings; and there was no way of fixing rents by arbitration. The Council thought the rents ought to be fixed by arbitration rather than that the landlord should have the sole power to give or retain the land and to fix the rent at his own figure.

25,436. So far, then, as the County Council are concerned, they were in no better position to deal with the land than a single tenant would be?—No.

25,437. And the landlord might dictate his own terms?—Exactly.

25,438. And that is practically what is done in this case?—Yes.

25,439. Then, with regard to the advancing of money for the making of new holdings. You referred to the historical fact that when the people were deprived of the land,—put off the good land on to the worse land,—they got no help to erect houses?—No.

25,440. And yet they succeeded?—Yes.

25,441. And they reclaimed land for which they are now paying rent?—Yes.

25,442. And the rent has been increased?—Yes.

25,443. I think you stated that as an argument,—that if they were put back again upon that better land there would be still less danger that they would not get on?—Yes.

25,444. That is the view you take of it?—That is the view the people themselves take of it.

25,445. Did you yourself ever hear any argument used against that argument?—Yes.

25,446. You have heard it attempted?—Oh, yes, by several people who did not know anything about it.

25,447. But this is the opinion of people who had to deal with it practically?—Yes.

25,448. And who came through it all themselves?—Yes.

25,449. You referred to the time when those people were cleared off the land as an argument in favour of their succeeding now if they got the land?—Yes.

25,450. Do you know, in a general way, what the result was so far as the rent was concerned to the men who came after the evicted crofters?—The rents were always raised on the improvements of their predecessors.

25,451. Sheep farming for a while paid?—Yes, but they are declining now.

25,452. Why are they declining now, do you think?—The land is deteriorating, owing to want of cultivation.

25,453. Are you aware of the fact that the pasture lands of Sutherland support fewer sheep per acre now than they did thirty years ago?—Yes, I am aware of that.

25,454. Do you know that the old rule on the Sutherland estate was six acres of hill and dale for one stock sheep?—Probably I might have heard that.

25,455. You have a knowledge of sheep?—Yes.

25,456. How many acres does it take now to maintain a stock sheep?—I suppose more than that.

25,457. Did you hear that it took ten?—I did not hear that.

25,458. You may take it from me as a fact,—we had it stated in evidence that it took ten acres on the average, hill and dale, to support a stock sheep. You, as I gather, attribute that to the deterioration of the pasture through lack of cultivation?—Yes.

25,459. And is there another element, in your opinion, that the grazing of sheep on land does not improve it, while the grazing of cattle does?—Yes.

25,460. And in the small holdings which you and the people of Dornoch have in your minds would you have a larger proportion of cattle grazing in the land than the present possessors have?—Yes.

25,461. With regard to the land that the crofters have got in the parish of Dornoch,—take about Rearquhar for example,—what is the character of that land?—Very poor.

25,462. Do you know any poorer in the county of Sutherland occupied by people?—No.

25,463. What rent are they paying for it per acre?—I am not exactly sure, but some of them are paying pretty high rents.

25,464. You have no idea of the rent they pay?—No.

25,465. Are you aware that they pay 7s. 6d. an acre for it?—I believe they do, and more in some cases.

25,466. And did they reclaim all the land themselves?—Yes.

25,467. Without any assistance?—No assistance whatever, unless they might have got some Government money for making some drains recently.

25,468. Government money for making drains?—Yes, recently.

25,469. Through what channel?—Through the estate.

25,470. You mean advances to the landlords?—Yes, it was called Government money; they were obtaining it from the ground officers, but they were paying interest on this money.

25,471. They received money advanced by Government for the improvement of land, and that money came to them through the estate, is that so?—Yes.

25,472. Certain moneys were expended in making drains, and interest was charged upon it by the proprietor?—Yes.

25,473. What interest was it?—I think it was five per cent.

25,474. And is it to terminate in a number of years?—I am not aware that it is; I think it continues.

25,475. Are you aware that the loans to the landlords themselves cease after a certain number of years?—No, I am not aware of that.

25,476. But you are aware that the interest is continued to be exacted from the tenant?—Yes.

25,477. You never heard any word that they were to cease?—No.

25,478. Now then, could those farms that you have mentioned, Torrobol and Cambusavie, be utilised in any other way than you suggested, that is for affording room for new settlements? Could they be used for the purpose of affording an extension of the grazing to the people at the top of Dornoch?—Yes.

25,479. Are they contiguous to their present holdings?—Yes, to some of them.

25,480. What crofters in the parish of Dornoch are not contiguous to them?—Those that are contiguous to them are a few in Little Torrobol.

25,481. That is down by the side of the Mound?—Yes.

25,482. Could they not be extended into the grazing of Torrobol?—Oh, yes, those that are contiguous, and the others in Balvraid moor.

25,483. And who are those who are not contiguous to it?—Rearquhar.

25,484. What intervenes between Birichen and Rearquhar?—Plantation.

25,485. But if the plantation was given for grazing, would they not be made contiguous to them then?—Yes.

25,486. You were asked a question with regard to the sub-division of holdings by crofters; do you ever know of any such in this county?—No, I am not aware of any.

25,487. Who attended to the sub-division business here? If there were no sub-divisions of holdings by the people, how do the holdings come to be so small?—The landlord was evicting the people and putting them into the common pasture that the former tenants had, and they were reclaiming there and making holdings, so that they have been getting congested.

25,488. So it was the landlord who attended to the sub-divisions?—Yes.

25,489. And that was the ground, I think, of your statement, that there should be some reparation made by the landlord for the injuries to those people in the past?—Yes, that is the opinion of the people.

25,490. They think that that opinion is founded on reason?—Yes, they have a great impression that that ought to be the case.

25,491. But looking at it from a practical point of view, I suppose they are of opinion that the landlord cannot do it now?—Yes.

25,492. Now, with regard to the opportuneness of the present time for making such holdings, do you see any reasons that make the present time very opportune for making these small holdings?—Yes, the purchase of stock would be easier just now.

25,493. Is there any other circumstance do you think? Has it ever occurred to you that the sheep farm system has utterly failed?—Yes, we can see that daily.

25,494. What is the ground of your opinion on that point?—The land is deteriorating, that is one thing.

25,495. What evidence have we, do you think, that the sheep farm system is a failure?—The landlords have been seeing through it; they have been taking the farms from the sheep farmers, as they were, I suppose, bothering them for a reduction of rents, and making deer forests out of them.

25,496. They were bothering them for reductions of rent?—That is the opinion.

25,497. But did they get reductions of rent?—Oh, yes, they have been getting them from time to time.

25,498. Have you read Mr Maclean's statement to us at Helmsdale, on behalf of the Sutherland estate, in regard to the reductions that the sheep farmers have been obliged to get for a number of years?—Yes.

25,499. Did you ever hear of crofters getting reductions of rent from the estate?—No, raising their rents rather.

25,500. And they have to reduce the large farmers' rents?—Yes.

25,501. Is that not a reason, in your opinion, why something should be done to remedy the present state of things?—Yes.

25,502. And you think all the elements are favourable to making such an attempt at the present time?—Yes.

25,503. Were they ever so favourable within your memory?—No.

25,504. Mr Gordon.—With regard to this farm of Achormlarie, I think you said you would have three holdings in it?—Yes.

25,505. Would that not make them rather small for that glen? It is not a very big farm just now, is it?—No, but the people were of that opinion, that that would be a very desirable holding for having some sheep.

25,506. Is there much arable land outside the present green land below the houses that could be cultivated?—Well, there are patches on the west end.

25,507. But they don't extend to a large area, I think?—No, they look smaller now owing to the long time they have been lying waste, under heather.

25,508. Where is this place upon the farm of Torrobol which you think might be utilised? Is it near the arable lands of Torrobol, or up the river?—It is up the river; there are several townships between Loch Buie and Torrobol, scattered on each side of the river.

25,509. Is that up the Strath-Carnach river?—Yes.

25,510. There is some old arable land up there, is there?—Yes.

25,511. And some patches of wood, I think, by the look of the map?—There are clumps of natural wood here and there.

25,512. Now take Cambusavie; whereabouts do you think is the land that would be available? Is it between Cambusavie and Cambusmore house?—No, it is out on the hill pasture. The holdings are where the people were before, among the hill pasture.

25,513. Does the farm of Cambusavie bound with the farm of Torrobol up the Strath-Carnach?—Yes.

25,514. There is a place there called Achterduich?—Yes.

25,515. Is that upon Cambusavie?—It is upon Torrobol.

26,516. Does Torrobol cross the water?—Yes.

25,517. Then where is the hill pasture of Cambusavie?—The boundary line comes along at the east side of Achtadnach.

25,518. To Creagmaill?—Yes.

25,519. That is behind Cambusmore house?—Yes.

25,520. And is there arable land there?—There is a place called Achinael where two or three nice holdings could be got with hill pasture adjoining, and Leathadna-Cloich on the south side.

25,521. Take the farm of Embo, where is the ground there?—It is arable.

25,522. It is under cultivation?—Yes.

Golspie.

George Grant Fraser.

25,523. There is a place called the Embo moor; are there any crofters there?—The crofters have got some of the land that was reclaimed out of that moss some years ago. They got it recently from the Duke, and there is some more too, but it is a very barren moor and not very good for pasturing sheep.

25,524. What would be the extent of the arable farm of Embo?—I think about 300 or 400 acres.

25,525. Would it be for new holdings, or for an extension of the present Embo Street crofters' grazings?—It is they who got an extension lately, and I suppose they would be satisfied.

25,526. Did they get it on the Embo moor, or on the seaside?—Adjacent to the holdings.

25,527. On Embo Street up to the first burn?—I am not very sure; I have not been there.

25,528. You have not seen it?—No.

25,529. Now, with reference to the woods which you think might be devoted to the pasture,—which is the wood you refer to?—The plantations that go along from behind Proncy, adjacent to the holdings of the people.

25,530. What age would the wood be?—Thirty to forty years, and perhaps more.

25,531. That should be a good enough age for pasture; but if it was older wood than that, what means would you suggest for the proprietor having the power to replant it again when it was cut down?—Oh, I suppose it would have to be enclosed for a certain time.

25,532. But you are aware of this, that if it is once devoted to crofters' pasture, it would pass from the landlord's hands, would it not?—Well, we did not take that into consideration, but I think the crofters would be quite reasonable to deal with in a case of that kind.

25,533. Is there a large extent of woods do you think, which might be utilised for grazings?—Yes.

25,534. What crofting townships would be benefited by that extension of present grazings?—Rearquhar, Birichin, Proncy, Badninish, Balvraid moor, Skelbo moor, Embo Street, Astle, Clashmugach.

25,535. These are on the Skibo estate, are they not?—Yes.

25,536. You spoke of one or two other farms on the Skibo property; your proposal there would be entirely for agricultural holdings?—Yes.

25,537. There is no pasture there that you know of, that could be had?—No.

25,538. What size of holding would you suppose they would have there,—30 acres?—30 acres, or more or less according to what the people would want.

25,539. It is not very good land there, is it?—Not very good.

25,540. And you think you would find people willing to take up those 30 acres and to rely upon their own money, or getting sufficient assistance to stock these holdings?—Yes. I frequently heard people expressing desires of that kind.

25,541. What rents do you think they would be able to pay for 30 acres of that land?—They would be able to pay a fair rent for it. The land is not very good; it is very light.

25,542. It is all arable, and there would be no outlay in regard to the land,—it is not as if you had to trench it?—No.

25,543. It is all fenced land?—Yes.

25,544. You would have the holdings to provide?—There are holdings on Rosebank farm.

25,545. What is your idea with regard to the comparative rents which a man would be able to pay compared with a tacksman? In other words could the proprietor break up these farms without a direct loss of rent?—I don't think there would be any loss of rent.

25,546. You think he would be able to get the same rent that is now being paid for it?—I think so.

25,547. Mr Forsyth.—Can you give me any idea what is the ordinary size of the crofters' holdings in that parish, in the matter of arable land?—From 4 to 10 acres; some more and some less.

25,548. Then, are there no crofters' holdings that could fairly be called self-sustaining?—Very few.

25,549. Is that the reason why you have indicated in your statement only a holding which is larger and which is self-sustaining?—Yes.

25,550. Do you consider that there would be smaller holdings which, though not self-sustaining, would form a home for the crofter, and enable him to live by work elsewhere?—There is not very much desire in that way among the people in our parish.

25,551. The desire is mainly for a self-sustaining holding?—Yes.

25,552. I am putting these questions, because the same evidence has been given elsewhere upon this Coast, and I want to get it out particularly. Does not that depend a good deal on the amount of work that is obtainable in the district? That there would be a demand for smaller holdings if work were plentiful?—There might be, but they are much more inclined to get holdings of their own.

25,553. The wish is more to live solely by the small farm?—Exactly.

25,554. Then, a good number of the present crofters would like, if they could get it, to have such holdings as you have indicated?—Yes.

25,555. Have you given any thought as to how such holdings could be found within the parish?—There could be a considerable number,—I am not prepared to say how many, but it would relieve the congestion in the parish greatly if the lands named in our statement could be utilised for that purpose.

25,556. You have a large number of crofters in the parish, I think, considerably over 200?—Yes.

25,557. Can you give us any idea as to how many of these would like small farms; at a venture, at a guess?—I am not prepared to say how many, but I know a good many are very anxious to receive larger tracts of ground than they have got.

25,558. And do you think a large number of holdings could be provided of the kind you have mentioned without touching purely arable farms?—Oh, yes; the grounds that were mentioned in the statements would give a considerable number without touching the arable farms.

25,559. Two or three holdings of say 30 acres arable and some pasture would take up a good deal of ground, you know?—Yes, but where pasture could be got adjacent, people would be glad to take less than 30 acres.

25,560. How much arable would they require if they had say hill grazing for from 40 to 80 sheep?—They would be glad to do with 12 or 16 acres, or so.

25,561. But still the whole desire is for a self-sustaining holding?—Yes.

25,562. Would that keep a man and his family working?—Yes.

25,563. And do you think they could live off it?—At a fair rent, they could live on it till such time as the family could get up and do for themselves.

25,564. Supposing it were new land, would there not be a good deal of difficulty during the first few years?—Yes, there would.

25,565. How do you think they could tide through?—They have been getting through on less favourable conditions before now.

25,566. Has not that been mostly by taking work elsewhere?—They would take work of course, those who could go, and they would work at home when they could get no work elsewhere, and they would be often able to make pretty comfortable homes in the course of a few years.

25,567. And could they face a rent at the present value of the land, and interest upon cost of buildings?—Yes.

25,568. And how about stock; there must be stock in the case of these grazing holdings, for sheep you know?—Some of them at least would be able to stock the land for themselves, but, of course, there is a desire among the people and a sort of expectation that they will get Government aid.

25,569. For stock as well as for buildings?—Yes, in some instances.

25,570. Have the people in your district formed any idea as to how, assuming that such holdings were available, tenants would be selected for them?—Not to my knowledge.

25,571. In some cases where one man will do well another man will fail. Would it not be necessary to exercise some discretion and judgment in the placing of new tenants in these new farms?—Yes, certainly.

25,572. But you have not formed any idea as to how that could be done?—No. There is generally a more enterprising tenant who is more ready to put himself forward in a case of that kind.

25,573. Do you think that the holdings should be applied for solely by people of the district, or should they be thrown open as it were to general,—I was going to say competition, but that is hardly the word?—Well, the people of the parish.

25,574. Would you invite all offerers?—I think the inclination is among the people of the parish where there are such pressing wants that they should be relieved as long as the land lasted.

25,575. You think the needs of the district should be supplied first, and then if there were more land, possibly outsiders might then come in?—Yes.

25,576. And you think also that the best men would apply first?—Yes.

25,577. But that you can give no further idea as to how this question of the desirability of the applicants for the holdings could be settled?—No.

25,578. Am I right in saying that you have not considered that?—I have not considered that point.

25,579. But still in the face of all the difficulties which you have so frankly admitted, you are of opinion that this idea of holdings which you have submitted might succeed?—Yes.

25,580. You mentioned in your statement in talking of the land as it is now, the words "prairie value"?—Yes.

25,581. Could you define that expression in any way, as the term is new?—What the land was worth in its original state before the people began to cultivate it.

25,582. Then, in some cases you would have the land which has been more or less improved, and let out to pasture, would not you, in taking a new holding?—Yes.

25,583. The land would not be exactly in its condition of nature, would it?—I mean that when the crofter would get any of that old land he should get it at its prairie value, its present value.

25,584. Its present prairie value?—Yes.

25,585. You do not wish to complicate the matter with the difference between its value in an absolute state of nature and its present grazing value, because it may or may not have been partially cultivated in times past?—The impression among the people is that where it has been cultivated by their forefathers who were evicted out of it, they think the prairie value before then, or the value of the ground adjacent that has not been cultivated, ought to be the measure of the rent that should be asked.

25,586. In that case would not the extra value of the land, because of its previous cultivation, fairly belong not to the new tenant but to the descendants of the people who originally cultivated it?—Yes.

25,587. Would not there be great difficulty in apportioning the value? It is probable the new man would not be a direct descendant of the people who were formerly there?—Probably not, but in the case where he might happen to be, that is the opinion of the people.

25,588. Then, perhaps you would find it safer to take the land at its present grazing value, would not you?—Yes.

25,589. The Chairman.—Do any of the crofters in your quarter carry on their holdings to a profit at present?—Oh, yes, as far as that can be said regarding their holdings; but their holdings are so small.

25,590. Do you mean that they eke out their livelihood by means of outside labour?—Most of people, where they can get that; their holdings are so small, that they cannot live upon them.

25,591. The rent is paid partly from the holding and partly from outside labour?—Exactly. It is generally from money that they gather by doing outside labour; it is very little money they can turn off their small holdings.

25,592. In your judgment, would a self-sustaining holding, or one that was likely to be self-sustaining, be less precarious than the present system?—Yes.

25,593. Mr Macaulay, Law Agent for the Duke of Sutherland.—You told us you had been appointed by the crofters of Dornoch to represent them here?—Yes.

25,594. Was there a meeting convened?—Yes.

25,595. In what form?—A public meeting.

25,596. How many crofters were present?—I am unable to say.

25,597. You can give us some idea surely; you know the number in the parish, and you know them all I suppose?—Yes.

25,598. Were there 100 present?—I daresay there would be about that, or perhaps more.

25,599. Are you satisfied that there were 100 of these 200 parties that you represent present at that meeting?—Yes.

25,600. Not more than that?—I am not prepared to say whether there might be more.

25,601. There might be more, and there might be less, but it was not a full meeting of crofters?—Yes, we considered it a full meeting of crofters. Those who were not there in person had representatives present.

25,602. Did they show you in any way that they were representatives of those who were away?—Yes.

25,603. In what way?—They were all desirous that we should represent their case, and there were committees appointed for drawing up the statement.

25,604. At this meeting?—Yes.

25,605. With regard to these woods that you referred to, is it not the fact that a portion of the woods has been replanted, so that besides the wood of thirty or forty years of age there is also a good deal of young wood in this plantation?—I am not aware that there is; there may be a few about the roadsides.

25,606. Have you ever been through them?—Not through the whole of them.

25,607. So you don't know whether there is young wood or not?—I have not seen any of them, and I have been frequently through the woods.

25,608. And you saw no young wood?—Except a few that I have seen at the roadsides, and they were protected.

25,609. But had you means of seeing whether there was young wood elsewhere?—Yes, I have been crossing through the woods.

25,610. And you saw no young wood except at the roadside?—No.

25,611. Then, with regard to this farm of Cyderhall, is it not the fact that that farm is now an arable farm under cultivation?—Yes, except those places that I mentioned.

25,612. So that this division that you talk of would affect the present arable farm?—In the matter of grazing it might.

25,613. Only grazing? Do you say that it would not affect any portion of the ground under rotation just now?—No, it is not under rotation in those parts that I mentioned.

25,614. Where are these parts?—They are outside, a little isolated from the farm.

25,615. So that you did not refer to the farm of Cyderhall so far as arable when you spoke of this?—No.

25,616. Now, when the County Council applied to the Duke of Sutherland for lands under the Small Holdings Act, did you specify any lands that you wanted?—I am not aware that we did.

25,617. You did not specify any lands?—So far as my memory serves me we did not.

25,618. You did not apply for any specific land, you simply made a general statement?—Yes.

25,619. You told us a little ago that while the farmers' rents were being reduced, the crofters' rents have been going up?—Yes.

25,620. How far is that true during the last ten years? [The Chairman.—He hardly put it in that way. I think he put it that crofters' rents always went up]. [To Witness]. Can you tell me how far that is true as regards the last ten years?—It has been always true where there have been new tenants going in.

25,621. But you made a general statement as regards the crofters, and I want to find out how far that is correct?—Well, I am not prepared to say at present the names, but I could get them in a short time.

25,622. The fact is you cannot support your statement? [The Chairman.—He says he could get the names]. So that when you made that statement you perhaps exceeded what you meant?—No, I am not of opinion that I did.

25,623. But what have you to support your opinion?—I have not got figures.

25,624. So that you made a statement which you cannot support just now?—I can support it.

25,625–6. You cannot support it just now by any evidence or any statement of specific cases. Now, with regard to Embo, is Embo not also in this position that it is an arable farm?—Yes.

25,627. So that any action as regards that would affect the present arable farm under cultivation?—Yes.

25,628. Have you any idea how many acres of arable are held by the crofters in the parish of Dornoch, the Duke's tenants?—I do not know the number.

25,629. Have you any idea?—No.

25,630. Would you be surprised to find that there are 1800 acres arable, or thereabout?—I would not think there would be that number.

25,631. But you have no idea how many acres there are?—No, I have not taken the trouble of looking it up.

25,632. You have not taken the trouble of looking into the matter?—No.

25,633. How do you think the amount of arable land held by crofters compares with that held by farmers?—I think the farmers hold more.

25,634. Very much more, do you think?—Yes.

25,635. But you have no idea as to the exact state of the case?—No.

25,636. You made a statement a little ago to the effect that some of the crofters in the parish of Dornoch were in the way of getting "Government money" as you called it. What do you mean by Government money?—That was the name given to money obtained from the estate through the ground officer for drainage that was executed.* [The Chairman.—Drainage money borrowed by the landlord and expended by him in draining his land and for which a slight interest is charged?—They call it Government money.]

25,637. It is not Government money. [The Chairman.—That is their way of expressing it]. Are you aware that all that money was lent by the Duke of Sutherland out of his own pocket?—The people were led to believe that it was Government money obtained by the Duke of Sutherland for that purpose.

25,638. Well, that is not a fact. You told us that there were 45 families once living upon these straths which are now included in the farms of Torrobol and Cambusavie?—Yes.

25,639. How many acres arable, both arable that is now under cultivation and old arable, do you suppose there are in these two farms? Have you any idea of that?—No.

25,640. What size of holding do you suppose these men held?—Ten or twelve acres, more or less.

25,641. Ten or twelve acres each probably?—Yes.

25,642. Would you be surprised to find that there are less than 200 acres of present arable or old arable in these two farms?—I would say there would be more.

25,643. Would you be surprised to find that that was the case?—Yes, but I believe it would be coming under heather, a lot of it. Golspie.

25,644. You have no idea how many acres they would have, but you would suppose about ten?—Yes. George G. Fraser.

25,645. Would you be surprised to find there are under 200 in all?—Yes, I would be surprised.

25,646. Two hundred acres among 45 tenants would give considerably less than five acres to each?—

25,647. The Chairman.—Yes, but, Mr Macaulay, are you able to give an estimate of the total old arable and the total under rotation?

25,648. Mr Macaulay.—So far as ascertainable now, my lord. [To witness]. Then, you would be surprised to find that they had perhaps not more than four acres each?—Some of them might have as little as four, but the others would have more.

25,649. You meant, I suppose, an average of ten acres when you spoke of those tenants?—Yes.

25,650. But you would be surprised to find that there is not land available to afford ten acres on an average?—I would be of the impression that a lot of the land has come under heather, and that it can hardly be distinguished now.

25,651. How did you come to estimate the ten acres for each party?—Just by going over the land.

25,652. You have no other evidence, no other means of showing it?—We had survey maps that we were looking over.

25,653. And you found there that they averaged about ten acres?—Yes.

25,654. Mr Sutherland.—I would like to ask you a further question. Mr Forsyth asked you a question, a very proper question, with regard to the selection of new tenants. Are you of opinion that there would be much difficulty in selecting the most suitable tenants for the new holdings provided such holdings could be got?—No.

25,655. You are no doubt aware of the terms and conditions of the Small Holdings Act?—Yes.

25,656. Are there the same powers given, conditional no doubt under that Act, as would be in the case we suppose now?—Yes.

25,657. And in whose hands is the selection of the tenants put under that Act, do you remember? Suppose you were successful in getting lands let or bought from a proprietor, and then you proceeded to settle them, who would have the selection of the tenants in that case under this Act, do you remember?—The Land Court.

25,658. The County Council, is it not?—Yes.

25,659. That is, then, a public body that has been entrusted by Act of Parliament with the selection of tenants; and that would be a precedent, would it not, for any new legislation if such were got?—Yes.

25,660. No doubt it would. Then, I wish to ask you a question in reference to what you said about crofters' rents being put up when sheep farmers' rents were taken down. You are aware, are you not, as a matter of fact, that within the last ten years the landlord could not put the crofters' rents up though he tried, is not that the case?—Yes, owing to the Crofters Act.

25,661. It is the Crofters Commission that fixes the rent?—Yes.

25,662. So that having regard to the last ten years or rather perhaps to the last seven years, the rents could not have been put up?—No.

25,663. But was there a time during which the sheep farmers' rents were taken down and the crofters' rents put up?—Yes.

25,664. The two things occurred within your memory simultaneously?—Yes.

25,665. That must be previous to 1886?—Yes.

25,666. And that is what you had in your mind when you answered the question?—Yes.

* Fraser has since written, explaining the above answer, thus:—

"A number of crofters, when they made some drains or "trenched a piece of ground, applied to the ground-officer for an "advance of money. This money, when advanced, was given by "the ground-officer in the name of 'Government money,' and "interest was charged first at the rate of 7 per cent., afterwards it was reduced to 5, and latterly to 4½ per cent."

WILLIAM MACLEAY, Clashmore, Dornoch (57)—examined. William Macleay

25,667.—The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Well, partly, but I do not live on the holding. I am partly a crofter and partly live on my own means.

25,668. Your rent has not been dealt with by the Crofters Commission I suppose?—No.

25,669. Do you hold under lease?—Yes, conjointly.

25,670. A joint-tenant under a lease?—Yes.

25,671. For a term of years?—For ten years.

25,672. And the lease is still current?—Yes.

25,673. What is your rent?—The rent conjointly is something over £11,—£11, 14s. I think.

25,674. You appear, as I understand, along with Fraser, as a delegate, on behalf of the crofters at Dornoch?—Yes.

25,675. Were you appointed at that public meeting which he mentioned?—Yes.

25,676. Have you a written statement?—Yes, I have a written statement, which is practically a corroboration of Mr Fraser's to a great extent, with some more facts. It has been got up by myself, from the evidence of my own eyesight, and from information, it has not been got up by the committee, but by myself, and I would like to read it.

25,677. Please proceed?—The parish of Dornoch extends to 33,931 acres, as per Ordnance Survey, and contains 21 arable farms, ranging from about 60 acres to 400, or upwards, two of these being pluralist farms, part of the Skibo estate, and held on lease by farmers occupying farms on the Duke of Sutherland's property. There are three sheep farms in the parish; two on the Duke of Sutherland's property which are arable and pastoral combined, and one on the Skibo estate, solely pastoral at the present time. There are 183 crofters in the parish outside the municipal burgh of Dornoch; 10 of these are on the Skibo estate, three of them being leaseholders. There are 5851 acres of plantations as returned by the estate officials to the assessor, which, in my opinion, is a long way under the proper area; 710 of this acreage is on the Skibo estate. The parish of Dornoch, outside the municipal burgh of Dornoch, is owned by only two proprietors, viz., the Duke of Sutherland and George Auldjo Jamieson, Esq., Edinburgh, as Trustee on the Skibo estate. The Skibo portion of the parish will be about one third of the whole parish more or less.

1. Arable Farms.

The whole of the arable farms about the beginning of this century were more or less occupied by a class of people now called crofters, but then they were called occupiers of the land. Several of these farms were at that time owned by several chiefs or heads of the different clans residing in the parish, but they were all from time to time swallowed up by the predecessors of the aforesaid proprietors who now own the whole, the estate of Embo being the last one which was purchased by the then Duke of Sutherland, about thirty years ago. Now, all the occupiers of those 21 farms, or crofters as they would now be called (with the exception of the farm of Trentham which had not then come into existence), were about the beginning of the century evicted, removed, or bruised out from time to time, some of them to the four winds of heaven, the large cities of the South, America, &c., &c. Others of them were allotted small patches of barren moor to live (or die) on, in the highest and coldest and most unnatural parts of the parish. Unlike some of the other parishes in the county where the people were driven from the good land in the glens and straths to the barren rock on the shore, the people in Dornoch were driven from the good land near the shore to the barren mountain sides, as can be seen by any person with half an eye in his head. In fact, gentlemen, within my own living memory there have been removed in some shape or another, within a radius of a mile and a half from the village of Clashmore, 40 families who occupied more or less land, and what they did occupy was either added to large farms, or planted with trees, with the exception of two families who occupy small leaseholds. A great number of the old habitations can still be seen as ruined monuments, and now the population of the Clashmore district is less by half than it was forty years ago. So much for the political economy of the then landlord government of the Highlands.

Golspie. — William Macleay.

2. Sheep Farms.

The sheep farms, two of which are on the Sutherland estate, viz., Cambusavie and Torroboll, have both arable farms attached to them, and I am led to believe by aged authorities that there were close on 50 families removed off these farms to make room for cheviot sheep

25,678. Have you a practical knowledge of these farms of Cambusavie and Torrobol?—Yes, I have been a practical shepherd in my days, and grazed sheep.

25,679. Where were you a shepherd?—I have been a shepherd on Kildonan Strath, and I have been a shepherd in the Colonies.

25,680. Do you concur with the evidence given by Fraser, with regard to the availability of land in Torrobol and Cambusavie?—I quite agree that it would be the only thing for the prosperity of the people of this country to make small holdings out of these with the pasture added.

25,681. What size of holdings?—My own opinion is that those of the people who are in any degree of prosperity in the parish of Dornoch are those who hold 10 to 20 acres arable and from 50 to 150 acres hill pasture, and who can graze 60 to 100 sheep.

25,682. And with a holding of that size and with that extent of grazing is it your opinion that a crofter would be able to live without outside labour?—Yes, and rear a fine healthy family who would have plently of blood and stamina in them, with milk and butter, beef and mutton to eat. The sheep farm of Torroboll extends from the arable farm up both sides of Strath Carnaig, a distance of over six miles, and contains several old arable townships, with the ruins still to the fore, as can be pointed out to the Commissioners. The whole farm is in my firm opinion undoubtedly adapted for small arable and grazing holdings. The pastoral farm at present carries a cheviot stock of about 1300. The arable farm employs a good pair of draught horses and occasionally three horses.

The sheep farm of Cambusavie extends from the south side of the Mound over the hills above the Cambusmore shooting lodge by the old crofting township of Achinal, a distance of four miles, and is occupied by Mr Urquhart. It carries a stock of about 400 cheviot sheep, and it contains two old arable townships of splendid soil, and, like Torroboll, the old ruins are still to be seen, although the inhabitants were cleared out of them about eighty years ago. Like Torroboll this farm is specially adapted for combined arable and pastoral holdings. The only living occupant residing on it now is one solitary shepherd and his family.

The farm of Achormlarie is on the Skibo estate, about six miles up the Evelix valley, and is a pluralist farm occupied by Mr Hugh Ross, a farmer on the Duke of Sutherland's estate. Its sole occupant is one solitary shepherd and his family and a gamekeeper—a lodger. Formerly it contained eight families, who cultivated the township of Achormlarie and grazed cattle and sheep on the hill pasture. Although these occupiers were about the first evicted in the county, the ruins of some of the old habitations are still plainly visible. The farm carries at present a stock of about 400 cheviot sheep, and the arable land has the reputation of growing the finest oats of any land in the county, weighing 44 lbs. per bushel.

It would make four splendid small holdings and they could live in comfort, like Mr John Grant, crofter, Achoinich; Mr Robert Ormiston, Strathan; Mr William Fraser, Achavaich; and Mr Alexander Mathieson, Lebnashermaig, all small holders in the vicinity of Achormlarie, and who are arable and pastoral occupiers. I am convinced that Achormlarie is really adapted for combined small holdings, and as such would be a greater benefit to the nation and the parish than being a wilderness as it is at present.

3. Crofters.

Of the 183 crofters in the parish of Dornoch, the rents of eleven of them range from £10 to £20 per annum, including three leaseholders. Seventeen crofters

Golspie. William Macleay.

in the hamlet of Hilton, Embo, I believe, are having their crofts enlarged out of the neighbouring farm of Embo, to what extent or rental I am not prepared to state; but I think this is a step in the right direction. The remaining £155, whose rental ranges from 13s. to £6, 13s. with the exception of two who pay about £9 rent per annum are congested or caged in on the one side by large farms and on the other side by enclosed plantations, with the exception of 560 acres of plantations which the Duke of Sutherland's officials maintain is not enclosed, and which are exempt from taxes; but the crofters maintain that they do not know of much more than the half of that acreage on which they have free liberty to graze their cattle and sheep, those of them that have any sheep. The great majority of those crofters' holdings that have nearly all been improved by their predecessors and themselves are so small and poor that it is impossible for them to maintain themselves and their families, and there being no employment for the young people, they keep clearing away to different parts of the world, so much so that I could relate many instances where there have been from six to ten of a family, and their parents have been left alone, and getting old and frail, their crofts and everything they possess is going to ruin. In several cases the old people have died out or been taken away to other places by members of the family and their crofts divided amongst the neighbouring crofters; and this is what the landlords call the enlargement of holdings, so that, gentlemen of the Commission, you will see that in the parish of Dornoch at present and for a long time past one crofter family in and residing there before he can or could get his holding enlarged a small piece, had and has to wait patiently until his neighbour dies out or leaves the country in disgust, so that the rural population is yearly decreasing. The only remedy I can see for maintaining and increasing the rural population is to enlarge a number of the crofts, where adjacent, from the large farms, and give them the plantations for pasture, and also to repeople the sheep farms with others who would be willing to remove and also with labourers and retired ploughmen, who have nowhere now to go to but crowd the burgh of Dornoch, and in cases prepare for the poorhouse. There are a number of discharged ploughmen residing at present in Dornoch who would only be too willing to occupy land.

4. Plantations.

Of the 5851 acres under plantations, the whole was at one time the people's common pasture, and in many instances it was called "commonage." In order to enclose this ground there were, I believe, from time to time some forty families removed; and a number of the old ruins which were at one time inhabited are still to be plainly seen. Although those commonages were strictly enclosed from the inhabitants, I can find no trace of rents being reduced, but only raised from time to time according as the people made improvements. Now, gentlemen of the Commission, I am not myself averse to plantations where they do not occupy land fit for cultivation. In the parish of Dornoch hundreds of acres now under plantations is equally as good land, if cultivated, as the land at present under cultivation; and I must say that the plantations in the parish of Dornoch are nothing more or less than a forest as they contain red deer, fallow deer and roe, and all kinds of winged game, and also rabbits to such an extent that they are a pest. All these are very destructive by feeding on and destroying the people's crops; and I know instances where the farmers in winter time have had to employ night watchmen to protect their turnips from the red and fallow deer. Now before the days of plantations red and fallow deer and rabbits were animals unknown to the inhabitants of this parish, and I must say that my own opinion, and the firm opinion of the whole of the inhabitants that I come in contact with is, that the game and the game laws are a curse to the parish, and the only exceptions who do not agree with us are the gamekeepers and a few ghillies who attend them, and the ghillies are very few indeed in the parish of Dornoch. In my young days there was only one gamekeeper and a boy as assistant between Balblair, in the parish of Creich, on the one side, and the Mound, round by the burgh of Dornoch and the Big Ferry on the other side. Now there are fourteen gamekeepers within this area, and six of them are within a radius of two miles of the village of Clashmore, where I reside, so that it has come to this, that all the wild animals and birds that destroyed rats and mice and kept down small birds are destroyed, so that all these are a nuisance both in the houses, the corn yards and the fields; and I may state that even the domestic cat cannot now live, as the better the hunter the sooner its days are numbered—and it is rare for a cat to see the age of eighteen months in our locality, what with baited traps and snares. I myself have on several occasions relieved cats out of traps within about 100 yards of where I live, and they are eagerly looked after by the gamekeepers, as their skins are very remunerative to them—and I must say that a good cat is a very valuable domestic animal, and is also troublesome to rear, and at the same time cannot be kept on a tether—so that the sooner there is a law to exterminate the—I would not say the gamekeepers, but the gamekeeping system, and the cats get a chance to live, the more prosperous will the nation at large be; and I trust your recommendations will be to this effect, and that Parliament will crown them with legislation.

(Signed) WILLIAM MACLEAY.

25,683. Mr Sutherland.—You stated certain names, Fraser, Ormiston, and I did not catch the other names, who are small tenants already in the vicinity of the farm that you think suitable for making into several small farms?—Yes.

25,684. Are these side by side?—Yes, side by side.

25,685. And do you think this farm of Achormlarie is fitted for accommodating more people who have got little or no land now?—Oh, yes, I think Achormlarie is; as all the arable land is in one part mostly, it would be more fitted for making small arable pieces, and that the farm would be worked as a club farm; it could not be very well worked from the township, otherwise than as a club farm. People could not herd their sheep separately from the arable of the township. But as to these other grazings that I mentioned, I may state that they have pieces of arable land from 10 to 15 acres.

25,686. Separately for themselves?—Yes.

25,687. And could not that be done with the farm of Achormlarie?—No, it could not.

25,688. Why?—Because it is all mostly in one block.

25,689. But that would not prevent its sub-division. Would this be possible, that the arable land could be held individually, but the grazing land in common?—Exactly, or it might be made into two. The east side might be divided into two.

25,690. But you are aware that that is the common system in this county for small holdings—that they have their arable separately, and they have such grazing as they have in common?—So it is with small tenants. Astle has hill pasture, and it is like that. A few tenants of Rearquhar have some, and along by Lairg I know that is the system.

25,691. The important fact you stated is that already in the neighbourhood of this farm you have got small tenants, and, in your opinion, they are prosperous?—I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that they are the most prosperous small tenants in the parish.

25,692. Then, you said something with regard to ploughmen being able or likely to avail themselves of small holdings, if they got them on favourable terms?—Yes.

25,693. Are there many such in the parish of Dornoch?—There are five aged ploughmen that have been discharged, I suppose through age and getting frail, in the burgh of Dornoch, who have gone to reside there within the last five years.

25,694. Would these be men who, in your opinion, would make successful small farmers on arable land?—I have not the slightest idea; if they were in a position where some of their family could be staying with them, and if they had got the land when they retired it would have been all right; but their families now have gone all over the world, and probably some of the men might not be able themselves to cultivate land, because they are about sixty years of age.

25,695. But if they retired earlier, they would be men of skill and experience in farming?—Yes, they would. I have not the slightest idea, but there are men of about thirty and forty years of age in the parish of Dornoch who would retire any time, because there are several of them that I know myself among these ploughmen who applied to the County Council for small holdings.

25,696. I do not wish to detain you long, but I have another question to ask. You have had experience in the Colonies?—Yes.

25,697. And you have also had experience in Scotland, in the Highlands?—Yes.

25,698. Now, give us your general impression with regard to the different kinds of life that would be led on the small holdings you contemplate in this country, and the life that a colonist is obliged to live in the Colonies you know. Which do you think would be the more likely to succeed?—It would be most favourable, because—

25,699. What would be most favourable?—This country, because in the Colonies people are rather unsettled; and in the Colonies I may tell you a man cannot live on arable land and bring up a family unless he has from 80 to 100 acres of good arable land, and he requires about 5000 acres of hill pasture. It takes from 1500 to 1000 sheep to keep a man and his family in the Colonies, and to live on it.

25,700. Is your general impression then that on such a holding as you have been describing, a man would be better off and more likely to succeed, than in the Colonies generally?—Oh, yes.

25,701. That is your impression?—Well, I don't know that he would succeed better, because in the Colonies there is a chance in one way or another, and through speculation that a man may make a fortune in twenty-four hours, and perhaps in another twenty-four hours he may lose the whole.

25,702. Is that speculating in land?—Well, speculating in land; I have known a man buying 100 acres of land to-day, and selling it to-morrow at a profit of £300 or £400.

25,703. But apart from speculation in land, taking the ordinary industrial conditions, which would be the more desirable life in your opinion?—The more sober and desirable life would be in this country.

25,704. You think so?—Yes, more sober, and it is easier for a man to keep a good moral character in this country, than in the Colonies.

25,705. The conditions for rearing a family as good citizens are more favourable in this country?—Yes.

25,706. Then you referred to the fact that old people were left by themselves, and the population thus died out?—Yes.

25,707. I think you mentioned also that that was one of the common ways of enlarging holdings?—Yes, and I can give instances in the parish of Dornoch; in fact, one instance in which that has been done within the last twelve or fifteen months.

25,708. I do not want to trouble you to give examples if you can state that it is the practice?—Yes, and there was a question put to Lord Stafford on the subject when on his election tour.

25,709. You think then that the tendency of that is bad?—It is bad; it decreases the population; and as far as I have had experience of the Colonies, they do everything in their power there to increase the population, because an increase of population means revenue to the nation.

25,710. Has it any effect on pauperism, do you know?—It has an affect on pauperism, when the people are so poor that their families leave and go to different parts of the world, and in many instances do not send anything home to relieve their parents, the latter make application for parochial relief, as I know as a member of the Parochial Board.

Golspie. / William Macleay.

25,711. In other words the natural breadwinners being away, the parents and helpless dependents are left on the parish; is that the result of the system?—In many instances where the families are not able to send them home money; and I consider that it is nothing else than living on charity when people have to depend on far-away friends for the means to live on.

25,712. Then, with regard to those places you referred to as fitted in your opinion for the purposes of our inquiry, would you be prepared to point them out to us if we visited the places ourselves?—Yes, I would, but perhaps on Thursday and Friday I might not be able.

25,713. But they are matters of fact?—They are matters of fact; I am quite prepared to point out the places.

25,714. You have given your opinion of them, and you are quite prepared to show them to us, so that we may form our own opinion?—Yes, I can show you instances of everything I have referred to in my paper.

25,715. Mr Macaulay, Law Agent.—With regard to these crofts that are divided among neighbours when a tenant dies out, is it not the fact that the crofters themselves desired this division? Is it forced upon them, or do they ask for it do you think?—Those that die out? When they die out, they could not be asking for it.

25,716. I mean the neighbours?—I have not the slightest idea. There is that nature in the people that they want more land, and they are glad to get it wherever it can be got.

25,717. So that you have no doubt yourself that it is as much the desire of the crofters as of the proprietor that such vacant crofts should be divided?—Among the living ones.

25,718. Well, of course. Then about families going away and leaving the crofts, I suppose you attribute that to the smallness of the holdings?—Yes.

25,719. Is it not the fact that farmers' families go away in the same manner?—Often, when they go bankrupt.

25,720. But even when they do not go bankrupt?—They go to different offices throughout the country. The farmers are able to educate their children better than the crofters.

25,721. There is no difference between the going away of a crofter's family, and the going away of a farmer's family?—The one goes away better educated than the other.

25,722. We know perfectly well that many families of crofters who go away, have got on pretty well when they are away?—Some of them have the sinew of the blood and the bone of the farmers, only they do not go away of their own free will, but are expatriated; and others go away because they cannot settle themselves at home.

25,723. You said something about the plantations in the Parish of Dornoch. Apart from these plantations, would not the parish of Dornoch be a very bleak place in your opinion?—I am not averse to plantations; the only thing I am averse to is that they should be kept on the estate on lands fit for cultivation. I can prove that the plantation where cattle are allowed to feed always produces the best and most durable timber; in fact, the young plantations that are allowed to grow as in a wilderness, where sheep and cattle do not feed, are not thriving, and are dying out.

25,724. Has not the arable land in the parish of Dornoch been improved by the presence of these plantations?—I am not going to say that.

25,725. You think these plantations have been of no good as a shelter?—It may shelter some places, but it gives no shelter to the place I live in.

25,726. Probably there is not a plantation near there?— Oh, yes, but they are of no use as shelter, they are only keeping the sunshine from us.

25,727. You think plantations are not a great benefit —They are a great benefit so far as there is some labour

Golspie.

William Macleay.

connected with them, but that is not the case in Dornoch.

25,728. But I mean benefit to the arable land?—I don't think they do any good to the arable land, I am quite satisfied that they are very good for firewood however.

25,729. The Chairman.—You spoke of cottars in your statement, can you tell me how many cottars there are in the district?—Oh, there are not very many, most of the cottars are in the little village I live in myself, and it only came into existence about fifty years ago.

25,730. How many cottars are there?—There are about ten or twelve feus in it. I hold a feu myself. But the most of the cottars there are generally those people who were evicted off the large farms on the estate and sent almost as paupers, and they have to come into these feus to get a home.

25,731. Can you tell me how many there are?—I am not altogether prepared to say how many there are, they are mostly widows, and some of them old maids.

25,732. Is the number small?—Yes, there are not above fifteen or sixteen of them altogether.

25,733. You mentioned that you had been in the Colonies. What Colony were you in?—New Zealand.

25,734. Any other Colony?—No, I have not been in any other Colony; I have been in Australia, but not residing.

25,735. Now, in the matter of employment, do a great number of the crofters in this district get employment on the Sutherland estates?—None that I know of, except a few that work in the plantations,—a dozen, or fourteen perhaps.

25,736. And they have regular employment?—Yes, I must say they have pretty regular employment.

Thomas Grant.

THOMAS GRANT, Crofter, Evelix near Dornoch (50)—examined.

25,737. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

25,738. What is your rent?—£2, 15s.

25,739. Was your rent dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—No.

25,740. Do you hold from year to year or under lease?—From year to year.

25,741. You heard the evidence given by Fraser and by Macleay?—Yes.

25,742. Do you agree with the evidence?—Yes, I do. The evidence given by Fraser was joint evidence with mine.

25,743. And you concur in their statements?—Yes, I do.

25,744. Mr Sutherland.—You said your rent was not dealt with by the Commission?—No.

25,745. Can you give us your acreage?—Six acres.

25,746. Of arable?—Yes, it is all arable.

24,747. And have you any outrun?—None whatever.

25,748. Any pasture?—No.

25,749. Your holding is entirely arable?—Arable altogether, it was moor when my father got it about seventy years ago.

25,750. What was the state of it when your father got it?—Black moor; it was not worth sixpence an acre at that time.

25,751. Did your father do all the improvements?—Yes, with the exception of £7, 12s. he got from the estate, on which he was paying £5 per cent.

25,752. Why have you not got a judicial rent?—I did not apply for it, but I mean to apply for it.

25,753. And has it been applied for by the proprietor?—No.

25,754. You said you gave a general concurrence in the statement that was made by Mr Fraser?—Yes, I do.

25,755. And you signed the statement which he submitted?—Yes.

Alexander Bannerman.

ALEXANDER BANNERMAN, Crofter, Langwell, Rogart (73)—examined.

25,756. The Chairman.—You are a crofter?—Yes.

25,757. Was your rent dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—Yes.

25,758. What rent do you pay now?—£11, 8s.

Golspie.

25,759. What was your previous rent?—£16.

Alexand Bannerm

25,760. What is the extent of your holding?—The extent when I got it was ten acres arable.

25,761. What is it now?—I added six or seven acres myself to that number.

25,762. And what is the grazing?—The whole of the township measures 1300 acres I suppose, pasture and arable.

25,763. And you have a share of that?—Yes.

25,764. What share?—There are seven crofters.

25,765. And have you equal shares?—With the exception of one. The pasture is a common pasture, and every one takes his share of it.

25,766. I see from the Blue Book your holding is given as 14 acres 3 roods arable, and 11 acres of outrun with a seventh share of 1300 acres common pasture as you mentioned?—Yes.

25,767. Have you a written statement?—No, I brought no written statement; the statement I am going to make has been written on my heart, as a descendant of those who were evicted, during the last eighty years.

25,768. The district you specially know about and can speak to is the Rogart district?—Yes.

25,769. Can you mention land in that district which you think would be suitable for extension of crofters' grazings or for new settlements?—I am not a native of the parish, and I don't know the names correctly, but I know the land; I know the quality and the extent of it, and I know that there is a good deal of good arable land included in what Mr Menzies, the sheep farmer at Blarich has.

25,770. You say there is grazing land on the farm of Blarich?—Grazing land and old arable land.

25,771. And old arable land suitable for the purposes I have mentioned?—Suitable for being occupied again by the descendants of the evicted.

25,772. I think we got from Mr Maclean, the other day, a very detailed statement with regard to the farm. 'Blarich farm extends to 13,300 acres, of which there 'are 300 acres old arable land and 33 acres now or 'recently cultivated.' Do these figures accord with your information?—Well, I know that whenever the estate statements were questioned they were found to be faulty,—that was with regard to the holdings of the crofters as well as the present state of old arable.

25,773. I will put the question in this form. How many acres of old arable would you say are to be found on the farm of Blairich?—I am not prepared to tell you the number, but I know that there is a good deal of old arable land now covered with heather and rushes, so much so that no man going over it without paying great attention could mark even what was under cultivation at that time.

25,774. Would you put it in this way, that you say there is a considerable extent of land, whatever the precise extent may be, to which you invite our attention for the purposes of this remit, when we go to the district?—Certainly.

25,775. It may be 300 acres or more or less?—I could not state the number of acres.

25,776. Now, I want to ask you to what purpose would you devote these lands? I mean would it be for extension of grazing, or for new settlements, or both?—When it lies immediately in connection with the neighbouring townships, I would give extension of grazing.

25,777. Are there townships in the neighbourhood to which these grazings would be contiguous?—There is one in particular.

25,778. Which one is that?—The district of Muie, in the upper end of the parish.

25,779. Is there a township there?—Yes, Muie.

25,780. And you think there is land at Blarich which might be devoted to extension of grazing for the township?—Immediately marching with them; there is only a wire fence between the crofter's grazing and the farmer of Blairich's grazing.

25,781. How many crofters are in Muie?—I think sixteen or seventeen.

25,782. Do you know what extent of grazing they have at present?—The extent is not very much.

25,783. Can you tell me how much it is?—I could not tell you the number of acres, but it is not much for the number of crofters.

25,784. But according to your knowledge, are they in need of that extension of grazing?—Much in need of extension.

25,785. Now, passing from that to the old arable, you say I think that there is old arable on Blairich farm where new settlements could be made?—New settlements.

25,786. How many, do you think?—Well, I am not prepared to say the number; that would depend on the extent of the holdings each would have.

25,787. What extent of holding would you give there having regard to the nature of the land and the climate?—I think when a man would require to keep a pair of horses, not of the largest kind but of medium size, he would require from 25 to 30 and up to 40 acres arable.

25,788. And corresponding grazings?—And corresponding grazings for a certain number of sheep.

25,789. How many?—That would depend on the locality.

25,790. But you are talking of a particular locality which you know well?—I think he should have up to 100 sheep whatever.

25,791. And the rent?—Well, if the tenants would get the land for the present rent, I think they would be quite prepared to take it, arable and pasture.

25,792. The present rent of Blairich farm; is that what you mean?—The rent the farmer pays at present.

25,793. You think that much smaller holdings than Blairich farm would afford, and that the tenants could pay a rent as high as that presently paid by the occupant of the farm?—I think I am safe in saying that the crofters are paying far more than the sheep farmers.

25,794. That is a general opinion, but is it your opinion that tenants settled there on holdings cut out of Blarich farm would be able to pay the present rent that the tenant of Blairich pays?—Yes, I think they would.

25,795. That rent has I suppose depreciated of late years?—The farm of Blairich paid over £1000 not very long ago.

25,796. And now it pays what?—£433, so that there has been a reduction of over £600 when the tenant entered on his new lease.

25,797. Is that farm at present occupied by a tenant?—It is occupied by Mr Menzies.

25,798. And he holds under a lease, I suppose?—Yes.

25,799. Now, do you ask our attention to any other grazing land besides Blairich farm in the Rogart district?—There is part of Strath Brora.

25,800. What farm is that?—On the Sciberscross farm, and there is another part of it at Dalnessie.

25,801. Sciberscross farm extends I see to 27,500 acres, at a rent of £300, and Dalnessie extends to 6400 acres, but the new rent is not mentioned by Mr Maclean. Now, is there a considerable extent of old arable which you think we ought to inspect on both these farms?—On both these farms.

25,802. Where does the land you have in view particularly lie?—It lies above Sciberscross, up beside the water all the way to Dalnessie and Crockan.

25,803. Between what two points?—Between Sciberscross and Crockan, between the sheep farmer's house at Sciberscross and Dalnessie at the top of the water.

25,804. Is that land principally along the margin of the river?—Yes.

25,805. Low-lying land at present covered with old grazings?—It is covered with rushes; but, I am not very sure whether some of the land immediately in the bottom of the flat would be very useful for small holdings, because it may be subject to blight by frost.

25,806. Is that parcel of land you are now referring to subject to frost?—Very often; but there is better land, far better land, outside. The best of the land is not immediately on the channel of the water.

25,807. How far is it from the water?—Some of it might be more or less, but there are very good dases of land away from the water.

25,808. Is that other land you mentioned not subject to frost?—Not subject; a little higher up it is quite secure.

25,809. The frost there is not so much dependent on the altitude as upon its proximity to the water?—To the water; immediately beside the water.

25,810. Now, do you think that holdings of adequate size with corresponding grazing could be cultivated there to a profit?—Yes.

25,811. Have you gone into that subject with pen and paper?—I am what might be called a practical farmer myself, and I know where a farm could be made that would suit a crofter.

25,812. And you give that answer, therefore, with all your practical knowledge and experience of land in that district?—Yes, I cultivated the worst land myself.

25,813. To a profit?—Well, I get all the profit I can out of it.

25,814. But I understand you to say, that you do get a profit out of it?—I make a living so far with the help of my family, but I never yet could make my rent out of the holding.

25,815. But is the land that you are speaking of now, land that could be made a self-sustaining holding, or would the farmer require to supplement it by outside labour?—If he had as much land as he could cultivate properly he could live in comfort on it.

25,816. You make something depend on the question of area?—Yes.

25,817. And you think that a pair horse farm might be worked to profit in that quarter?—By the family.

25,818. And would the occupier require to hire labour, or would he be able to work the holding with the assistance of his own family?—Labour can be dispensed with, because implements are now so common and so useful that a man and his family can now work a farm which otherwise would require half-a-dozen labourers.

25,819. A man and his family, with the aid of implements, could work it without hired labour?—Without any extraneous labour.

25,820. That is a pair horse farm?—A pair horse farm.

25,821. Now, besides these farms you have mentioned, are there any other lands to which you wish to call our attention?—You can find all the way up from Gordonbush to Dalnessie, on both sides of the water, flats of land, as good as you can find in any Highland strath in the north of Scotland, and a good deal of land outside of that.

25,822. How would you compare that land with the land of Strath Helmsdale or Kildonan Strath?—I believe there is as good land between Gordonbush and Dalnessie as you can get in any strath in Sutherland.

25,823. What farm are these places on?—There is a good deal on Gordonbush farm up to Ascoile, and the rest is on Sciberscross farm.

25,824. I see that Gordonbush extends to 24,300 acres, and the land you are now talking of is, I take it, mainly on Gordonbush?—Yes.

25,825. And running also into the farm of Sciberscross?—Yes.

25,826. These are among the largest farms I think, which the Duke has in this part of the country?—I believe so at present.

25,827. Gordonbush is occupied by a tenant, is it?—Yes, by Captain Shaw.

25,828. Now, besides these lands, are there any others you desire to mention?—There are, what would make a very fine farm immediately at the deer forest, at the back of Ben-Horn, that is the highest hill between the Brora water and Dunrobin. It is called Scottarie.

25,829. What kind of land is that?—I could not tell you the exact area of it, but there is a good deal of most excellent land, and the soil is as good as any you can get in the county of Sutherland.

25,830. Is it as good as the land in Strath-Brora?—It is fully better.

25,831. But at present it is under old grazing I suppose?—It belongs, I believe, to the sheep farm.

Golspie.

Alexander Bannerman.

25,832. What sheep farm?—Mr Milligan's.

25,833. It belongs to Sciberscross, does it?—Yes.

25,834. Is that land immediately behind Ben Horn part of the forest?—It was at one time, but it is now given over to Mr Milligan.

25,835. The land has been taken from the forest, and added to the farm of Sciberscross?—Yes.

25,836. Can you tell me when that occurred?—I believe it occurred lately. When the Master of Blantyre had the farm, it was fenced off to join the forest.

25,837. When did the Master of Blantyre give up the farm of Sciberscross?—A few years ago.

25,838. And then was it taken by Mr Milligan?—No, it was taken by a young gentleman, Mr Scott, a sheep farmer, and after him Mr Milligan took it.

25,839. And when Mr Milligan got it, this land was taken from the forest, and added to the farm?—It was added in Mr Scott's time.

25,840. But that land, in your opinion, is suitable?—Suitable for a very good holding.

25,841. One holding or more?—Well, of course, you can find what is suitable for one good holding, which by dividing it would be not so useful for two.

25,842. You don't think two holdings there could be carried on to a profit?—Well, I know many holdings are on far less land than is there; but I think if it was given to one enterprising tenant, he could make a very good holding of it.

25,843. Well, now, without pressing you very much on the subject of rent, what rent would you suppose appropriate for such a holding?—The rent would depend very much on the quality of the soil.

25,844. But you are speaking of soil that you know about?—I know that all the old arable land is given with the grazing at the same rent; the one is not rented more than the other, and taking the general rent over the whole I think that would be fair.

25,845. You think a tenant there could pay as high a rent per acre as Mr Milligan is paying?—I think he could.

25,846. Are there any other lands that you wish to mention?—I don't know whether the parish of Golspie is to go in for it or not; but there is land on the farm of Morvich.

25,847. Is that farm under a tenant at present?—It is part of the grazings belonging to the farm of Morvich.

25,848. Is that a grazing farm?—It is a grazing farm; and this land is about two miles beyond the arable of the farm.

25,849. It is the farm mentioned by Mr Maclean as having 3600 acres?—The place I mean is Aberscross hill.

25,850. Is the land there old grazing land?—Old grazing land.

25,851. Had it been in cultivation at one time or other?—It had.

25,852. And is it low-lying?—No, it is not very low-lying; it is almost in sight of the road coming up Strath-Fleet.

25,853. Is there a considerable extent of it there?—A considerable extent of the very best land in the county.

25,854. Suitable for grazings, or suitable for settlements?—Too good for grazing.

25,855. But good for settlements, would you think?—Good for being reclaimed again.

25,856. Then, are these all the lands you mention?—That is all the land I know of.

25,857. Now, you are speaking for this district of Rogart. You were appointed, I suppose, at a public meeting?—I was.

25,858. To represent the views of the district from which you come?—To represent the wants of the people.

25,859. Is there a general desire for additional land?—There is a general desire, and has been for a considerable time back.

25,860. Is there, in your opinion, a need for land?—A very great desire to get more land.

25,861. Yes, I understand that, but is there a need for it? Do they require land?—More grazing, and to relieve the congestion.

Golspie.

Alexander Bannerman.

25,862. Is the district you represent congested?—Not ours so much as other districts.

25,863. Are you a member of the County Council?—I am.

25,864. Of the county of Sutherland?—Of the county of Sutherland.

25,865. Do you occupy any other public position?—I occupy almost all the positions of importance in the parish; I am Chairman of the School Board, and a member of the Parochial Board, and I study the interests of the people as far as I can.

25,866. You go out and in a great deal among them?—Daily.

25,867. And perhaps I may say, no one in the district knows their feelings better than you?—I should know them as well as any man in the county of Sutherland.

25,868. Mr Sutherland.—You said that you did not belong to Rogart; how long have you been in Rogart?—I have been about twenty-six years in Rogart.

25,869. So as you have already stated, you have had abundant opportunities of knowing the feelings and wants of the people?—Thoroughly.

25,870. When you went to Rogart, you went from a small holding to a larger one, did not you?—I had four acres of land at Helmsdale.

25,871. And you got a holding of how many acres?—I got a holding of ten acres and some pasture; I had had no pasture at Helmsdale.

25,872. But you managed to improve your new holding to the extent you have indicated?—I am not ashamed of what I have done.

25,873. No, you need not be, I suppose. Your own case has a direct bearing upon objections that have been frequently urged before this Commission, and I want you to give us the benefit of your own personal experience. Is it not the fact that you left a very small and poor holding and went to a bigger one under rather unfavourable circumstances, and that you have made all the improvements you have told us about to-day,—is that not a fact?—I appeared before Sheriff Brand, when he was here before, and I put in a statement of the improvements made which came to £437, 17s. 9d. Sheriff Brand asked Mr Maclean if he agreed to my statement, and I am very glad to say that he agreed with every figure of it, and said that I left out what I should have put in.

25,874. So that you are in your own person an example of what can be done in unfavourable circumstances?—If the people had got the shadow of a chance they would have improved the county, and if the people had all along been left in their own holdings the county of Sutherland would have been worth twice the money to-day if it were to be sold.

25,875. So that, in your opinion, such an example as yours is worth more than all the abstract theoretical objections we hear?—I think it is the parties who do not know the people who would make such detracting observations upon them.

25,876. The rent put upon you was £16, 16s., I think?—Yes.

25,877. And the Crofters Commission reduced it to, how much?—£11, 8s.

25,878. That is a difference of £5 a year between the old rent and the fair rent?—Yes.

25,879. Do you think the rent could now with advantage, and with justice, be reduced a little farther than that even?—Yes. I pay a great deal more than any big farmer in the county of Sutherland.

25,880. Still?—And if big farmers in the county of Sutherland were to pay interest on the outlays for improvements on their holdings, they would be paying three times as much rent as they are doing, without paying anything for the land at all.

25,881. That is a point upon which I want to ask you some questions? When you went into your present holding at West Langwell did you find everything put in order for you,—house built, fences erected, drains made and everything?—Nothing at all.

25,882. And what is the custom in the case of the large farmer?—To the last nail that is required for a pig-stye he gets it done for him.

25,883. And notwithstanding all that he has had to get large reductions of rent?—Large reductions of rent. Just look at the big farm which Mr Cameron occupies just now. It cost the Duke of Sutherland, I think, £1800; his rent is something over £300, so that it will take six years before he will get a fraction of return from the farm.

25,884. So is it your opinion, that from the landlord's own point of view small holdings are more profitable than large?—More profitable, because they cost him very little to begin with, and there is no big farm in the county of Sutherland that he is getting a fair rent for, if you take into account interest on the outlay in reclaiming, fencing and building. All the profit he has is from the small tenants.

25,885. Then, you were asked a question with regard to occupation to profit. Do you not think it is an occupation to profit when a man is able to rear a family in comfort and decency?—The statement put in to Lord Napier, when the first Commission was round by the estate officials for the east coast of Sutherland, was that the crofters had on the average $3\frac{1}{15}$ acres.

25,886. Well?—Well, you said that for every sheep on a sheep farm in the county of Sutherland six acres were allowed for maintenance. I can prove that they are allowed ten acres.

25,887. That was admitted in evidence before us already?—Yes, and when the first sheep farmers took the land in Sutherlandshire, I mind very well of the latter end of the first lease, they paid only 1½d. an acre for it, and got a lease for nineteen years. I maintain that if the descendants of the evicted were to get the same advantageous terms, they are quite prepared to take the land and work it to profit without asking any aid from the Government or from the proprietor.

25,888. As a matter of fact, you got no aid from Government or the proprietor?—Never.

25,889. Well then, as to the question of cultivating to profit. The question I put to you was this, is it necessary for a man to have a balance at the bank in order to show cultivation to a profit?—We don't want balances at the bank if we can keep our families in comfort. One half of the people does not know how the other half lives, and I am ashamed to say here before Sheriff Brand that a great many of the people, for three or four months of the year, live God knows how.

25,890. And do you think the means for better subsistence than they have now lies at their doors?—Lies at their doors, because it would relieve the congestion, and give scope for energetic men.

25,891. That reminds me of a remark you made that Rogart was less congested than other parishes in Sutherland?—Yes.

25,892. But there are congested districts even in Rogart, are there not, take Muie?—Muie in particular.

25,893. Is there a desire among the people there for additional pasture?—Yes, for a long long time they have been quarrelling over it, I may say for forty years.

25,894. Wishing to get more pasture?—Yes, and been fighting ever since.

25,895. Do you remember any incidents connected with the desire of the people to get additional pasture?—I mind when we went to take possession of it; I, myself, was one of the men who went. [The Chairman.—And there was a little trouble about it?—Yes, about breaking the interdict.]

25,896. Is the question of occupation to profit by the tenant, not altogether a question of what rent he pays?—I, myself, have got only ten acres of land, and I pay £1 an acre for it, and 28s. for the outrun, calculating it that way, and I know that the best land that Cameron has does not pay 15s. an acre.

25,897. So that whether it is a profit to you or not it is a profit to the landlord?—It is profit to the landlord, and I must live by it.

25,898. And you are of opinion, are you not, that a great deal of land in the parish of Rogart is better fitted for occupation than what you occupy?—Certainly, I would exchange it for anything if I got the same extent of land in some of the places I have mentioned, I would leave all I have done, and begin a new life to-morrow.

25,899. What is the altitude of the place you occupy?—I think it is over 700 feet above the level of the sea.

25,900. Yes, it is verging on 800 feet I see by the map. Is your crop gathered in?—I had it in since a fortnight.

25,901. And it is not damaged by frost, is it?—Well, it was damaged by the heat of the summer, but I have the same quantity as in former years.

25,902. So you have no fear in making settlements in those places that were settled before?—Not the smallest.

25,903. But they would be under all the conditions that would lead to success?—I could live even better than I live now.

25,904. Do you remember Mr Greig who conducted the reclamations for the Duke of Sutherland in Kildonan?—Yes.

25,905. Do you remember, or have you read the statement he put in to Lord Napier's Commission about advances to tenants on new holdings?—I have.

25,906. I take it that Mr Greig would be held by all authorities to be a practical man, with regard to such matters?—As far as the statement went.

25,907. And you remember he saw no difficulty in getting guarantees for advances that might be made?—Getting guarantees, and the work left by the occupier would be sufficient guarantee for any advance.

25,908. Then, one question with regard to the estimate made in Mr Maclean's statement, of 300 arable acres upon the farm of Blairich. [The Chairman.—300 old arable, and 33 acres now or recently cultivated]. Is your estimate higher than Mr Maclean's?—My estimate is much higher, and would be still higher, but that when the people were reclaiming it they had no implements to assist them.

25,909. And it is no disparagement to Mr Maclean as a practical agriculturist that you should know such a thing just as well as he does?—To allow every manner of justice to Mr Maclean, I would allow him to make it as small as possible.

25,910. But you would place it much higher?—Because I could make a third or a half more in connection with every part that was reclaimed before.

25,911. Have you heard it stated frequently regarding people who lived there eighty years ago that they were very poor farmers?—I can prove—

25,912. Have you heard such a statement?—Yes, I have heard that it was stated in the House of Commons before you by Mr Chaplin.

25,913. Is it not strange then that the arable land should be estimated now on the amount of land that these poor miserable farmers did cultivate at that time? Do you see anything inconsistent in that?—It is very inconsistent, but I would not take it as a statement at all, because the man was prejudiced against the Highlands in general.

25,914. You say that the 300 acres there estimated is an under estimate of the land that could be cultivated now?—I maintain that a third or a half could be added to every part that has been reclaimed already, because when the men reclaimed the land there, they had neither picks nor shovels, and they worked a great deal of the land with the cas-chrom. It must be admitted that we have made very great progress in the science of agriculture, for we have advanced from the cas-chrom to the steam-plough, and from the teeth-hook to the reaper and binder. It is only a matter of giving the land to the people, and seeing what could be done with it.

25,915. And you are decidedly of opinion, after a long life's experience and practice, that that would be successful?—It would be successful, but if we believe the detractors of the people it would be no success at all. But I would not accept their view of the matter, because, in my opinion, they wanted to grip the Highlands, and keep it as a happy hunting ground for themselves. My lord, with regard to land, the question is generally asked how could the people replenish the holdings. The present Duke of Sutherland has a glorious opportunity of redeeming the past, and endearing himself to the people of Sutherland, and if he would open up now the resources of his country, and allow the descendants of the evicted to go back and occupy the places at one time occupied by their forefathers, he would then merit the title given to Titus of Aspasia, "the darling of the Highland race" all over the world. The estate of Sutherland is different from any other property in Scotland; I can walk from sea to sea and from end to end of the county, without putting a foot on sod that has been turned for the last eighty years.

Golspie. Alexander Bannerman

25,916. The Chairman. Do you know about the Kildonan reclamations?—My father was born on the strath of Kildonan, and I was born immediately after the evictions took place.

25,917. Do you remember the reclamations?—I remember the whole of them, and I visited every inch of them purposely to see how it was done, and what way it was done.

25,918. Were these reclamations, in your opinion, carried out on a suitable subject?—They were carried out very foolishly, my lord.

25,919. Was the subject suitable? Was the land selected suitable?—They left the suitable subjects and took the worst that could be fixed upon.

25,920. The worst in what way?—The worst in quality and the worst in quantity. There is one farm in particular up at Achintoul occupied by Gordon Henderson. He has a farm of 8000 acres hill pasture, and 485 acres of reclaimed land, and he is paying only £110 of rent for the whole. If he paid 3½d. per acre for the hill pasture he would have the 485 acres of reclaimed land for nothing, and if he paid ¾ per cent. of interest on the outlay he would have the 8000 acres of hill pasture for nothing.

25,921. Would you say that these reclamations were carried on in a judicious way, or in an extravagant way?—No reclamations in the Highlands could be carried on in a judicious way for which £73 was paid per acre. I sat in a seat here when Sir Arnold Kemball told Lord Napier's Commission that every acre reclaimed by the Duke of Sutherland in the county cost £73 per acre.

25,922. Mr Macaulay, solicitor.—With regard to the farm of Achintoul, you have told us that there are 8000 acres there of pasture?—Yes.

25,923. How do you fix that?—I fix that, because I got it from the tenant himself; he said that was the extent he got when he took the lease.

25,924. Would you be surprised to find there is very little more than the half of that?—I don't know anything about it. [The Chairman.—The acreage mentioned by Mr Maclean is 4500.]

25,925. You stated here just now 8000 acres, and the fact is that there are only 4500?—I had it from the tenant himself, and I made the statement before Mr Maclean himself.

25,926. Now about your own place at Langwell, what is the acreage of your pasture, including the whole arable land in the township of East Langwell?—Mr Maclean gave us the acreage of 1300, including arable and pasture for East Langwell.

25,927. Now, what is the rate per acre that you pay all over?—I think it will be about 11¾d., or thereabout.

25,928. What is the total rental?—I cannot tell you.

25,929. Have you any idea what the rate is upon the Blairich farm that you talked of a little ago?—I know that the rent of Blairich farm has been reduced from £1050 I think to £433.

25,930. And a great portion of it was given away to crofters?—Not a very great portion.

25,931. There was a considerable portion on the Lairg Strath, was not there?—Yes.

25,932. But you don't know how your rent per acre, taking the arable and the pasture, compares with the rate upon the Blairich farm?

25,933. The Chairman.—It is not easy to make the comparison, Mr Macaulay, and as for the common grazing he only shares it along with six others. Do you want to compare his arable and his outrun?

25,934. Mr Macaulay.—No, I want to compare his whole holding, including arable and pasture, with the rent of a whole farm. I want to get from him a comparison between the rate per acre on the whole of East Langwell, and the rate per acre on Blairich. [To witness]. Do you know what it is?—I don't know the extent of Mr Menzies's farm.

25,935. But you told us that you thought the crofters would take Blairich farm at the rate which Mr Menzies pays?—Arable and pasture.

25,936. All over?—Yes.

25,937. Would you be surprised to find that there is very little difference between it and yours?—I am not very sure of that.

25,938. You don't know about that?—I don't know, but I don't think it is paying as high as we pay.

25,939. Were you offered, or have you got additional grazings at East Langwell recently?—Recently we did.

25,940. What is the acreage?—I am not very sure of that, because it was not measured, and we have not yet paid any rent for it. The Commissioners have not gone over it yet to value it.

25,941. Have you any idea of the acreage?—It is within a mile square.

25,942. Are you satisfied then that your grazings there are sufficient?—The grazings, of course, are larger than almost any other part but one or two in the parish.

25,943. You have a considerable amount of grazing now?—We have a considerable amount of grazing.

25,944. And how is the rent to be fixed?—It is to be fixed by the Commission.

25,945. Would you have taken the factor's rent if he had fixed it?—To-morrow, if he would have valued it.

25,946. You would be quite satisfied with Mr Maclean's valuation?—Quite satisfied.

25,947. How much per acre do you think it would take to reclaim these places at Sciberscross and Dalnessie?—There is so much that has been reclaimed already, and there is a good deal that would need nothing but to plough it up to give excellent crops.

25,948. But taking it all over? If you are going to set down new settlers there, how much per acre do you think it would cost to get these places reclaimed?—Would it be out of the way to ask the landlord to give the same advantage to the descendants of the evicted who got no compensation, melioration, and very little commiseration when they were deprived of their holdings, as the man who came from the border got.

25,949. The Chairman.—I am afraid Mr Macaulay could hardly answer that. [Mr Macaulay].—I am afraid I am not in a position to do so.

25,950. The question which Mr Macaulay would like you to consider is whether it would cost anything to reclaim that land of which you have been speaking, and if so how much per acre. He is referring to the low-lying ground that you have described to him?—I am referring to the low-lying ground, and I know very well that if I were to get some of the old arable I would begin reclaiming to-morrow.

25,951. The question he is putting is, how much do you think it would cost per acre?—I would take it at what it would cost myself.

25,952. Does it come to this that a good deal of it wants nothing but ploughing?—Nothing, but a good pair of horses and a plough.

25,953. Mr Macaulay.—It requires fencing too. What would it cost per acre to settle people down there?—To begin and pay for the whole of it at once maybe would be too much for a man; but he could settle down there, and begin with a little and gradually increase yearly what he would require for his own support.

25,954. Of course, it is well known that you have been a very successful man in Rogart, and probably the most successful man there?—I need not be talking of that.

olspie.
annerman.

25,955. It is notorious that that is so. Do you ascribe your success to your holding alone?—I ascribe it to my enterprise, and not to what I have got from the Duke of Sutherland.

25,956. You told us a little time ago that on your holding you are able to make a living with the aid of your family?—Yes.

25,957. Your family I need not say have done very well indeed. Now, do you think any other man put into your position and allowed to work that place of yours with no family to help him would be equally successful?—I am not going to say what other farmers would do; but I know what the people are prepared to do if they got the land. [The Chairman.—He may regard that as a somewhat invidious question.]

25,958. It may be invidious no doubt. But there are very few crofters in the same position as you are?—I am prepared to say that if men got the shadow of a chance they would make positions for themselves of which they need not be ashamed.

25,959. When Scottarie was added to Sciberscross, is it not the fact that some of the old grazing was given to the Rogart tenants?—It was given to them.

25,960. Do you know how much additional grazing has been given to the Rogart crofters within the last five or six years?—I believe the Blairich people got about 700 acres and Inchcape and the south side of Strath Fleet may be got up to 1900 acres.

25,961. You got 600 acres?—We have got somewhere about 600.

25,962. And West Langwell 800?—West Langwell,—well, that was only lately.

25,963. Making upwards of 4000 acres one way or another?—One way or another.

25,964. That is really a very considerable extension so far as the crofters are concerned?—So far.

25,965. Do you consider that in getting that extent of additional grazing they have been well treated?—Not better than their deserts.

25,966. Well, at any rate, you think if they have got their deserts, they would be quite satisfied with that?—No doubt.

25,967. There is a place up at the heights of Rogart that was to let—the farm of Gruamach?—Yes.

25,968. It was given forth freely, was it not, that the place was to let?—I was not aware of it. But I know that on the portion immediately contiguous to the crofters' holdings, some additional pasture has been given to them since last term.

25,969. But you knew that the other portion of that farm was also to let?—The other portion would not suit them, because it would add too much to the land, and I am afraid they would not be able to take it all.

25,970. But would you not expect new settlers to come forward if there is this anxiety for holdings that has been talked of to-day?—You need not expect that you could get applicants for every part of the county, because some of the land is not so suitable as other parts.

25,971. Is not this farm of Gruamach a desirable farm for grazing?—Yes, but it is not the best for agricultural purposes.

25,972. But it is a good grazing farm?—Very likely it is.

25,973. How do you account for the dearth of applicants for it?

25,974. The Chairman.—How long has it been advertised? [Mr Macaulay].—Since Whitsunday.

25,975. Mr Sutherland.—Has it it been advertised? [Mr Macaulay].—It has been very well told in the district; every one knows of it.

25,976. Was it advertised in the newspapers? [Mr Macaulay].—It was not advertised in the newspapers, but it has been made very well known all over the place that it was to be let.

25,977. Mr Macaulay. [To witness].—Do you think that if this place is advertised there are people who will come forward?—Very likely.

25,978. You think then that the mere advertisement would induce people to come forward rather than the knowledge that the place is to let?—I was told that any man belonging to the district applying for it would require so much cash before his offer could be accepted.

Golspie.
Alexander Bannerman.

25,979. Naturally so?—Naturally.

25,980. And was it a reasonable demand?—You need not expect that very many crofters are able to show them banking accounts to amount to a certain sum so as to be under favour when they applied for land in the county.

25,981. So that the probability is that they were unable to take this place which carries 300 sheep,—they are not in a position to show capital which would enable them to stock this farm with 300 sheep?—Not to take the whole of what is at present offered to the public.

25,982. The Chairman.—What was the rent? [Mr Macaulay].—The rent has not been fixed.

25,983. What was the rent of the previous occupant? [Witness]—£135, my lord.

25,984. Mr Macaulay.—The whole farm was about £135, and there is only about a third left, the other two-thirds were given to the neighbouring crofters. There is more than a third.

25,985. Well, between a third and a half; so that the rent at the old rate would only be £60 to £70. Do you know that this place was offered at £40?—I never heard of it. In that case we will be expecting it cheaper than the last tenant had it.

25,986. Were you aware that the late Duke was in the habit of giving advances to crofters for reclaiming land?—That was done for a consideration; I never heard that he gave much without expectation of being remunerated for it.

25,987. Very few people do. But do you know as a fact that he was in the way of making such advances?—He was.

25,988. And at a moderate interest?—My lord, the "moderate" interest at one time was 7 per cent., but it was reduced to 5 and is now 4 per cent.

25,989. Mr Sutherland.—The late Duke of Sutherland was in the habit, I understand, in Rogart of advancing money for reclaiming land; was that the tenour of your answer to Mr Macaulay?—I never heard that he advanced any money for reclaiming land, but I heard of Mr John Mackay, Hereford, giving driblets of money to men if they could reclaim rocks with it.

25,990. I thought your answer to Mr Macaulay was that the Duke of Sutherland did advance money, or carry on reclamations in Rogart?—Never; I never saw any reclamation carried on by the Duke of Sutherland there; but if men stood in need of getting their land fenced or improved, the office advanced money for the purpose. I got a little advance myself.

25,991. May I ask the question of you, Mr Macaulay? Have you any official knowledge of the fact that the late Duke of Sutherland advanced money to crofters for reclamation purposes? [Mr Macaulay].—It is the fact that the late Duke of Sutherland did advance money to crofters in order to the improvement of their holdings.

25,992. Do you know then the amount per acre that was allowed by the late Duke of Sutherland to the crofters for improving land in Rogart? [Witness].—No, but my son-in-law applied for money for land he was reclaiming, and in applying to Mr Maclean, I believe he asked too much for the subject he was to improve.

25,993. Do you know how much per acre he asked for?—No, but I know Mr Maclean's answer; Mr Maclean said———

25,994. I have no desire to go into the details of that private affair. Do you know, as a matter of fact, whether the late Duke of Sutherland did advance money for reclamations in Rogart through the crofters; and if so, do you know what he allowed per acre for these reclamations?—I never heard what he allowed per acre, but I know that the crofters got a little money, some of them, when they asked it to improve their holdings.

25,995. But if he did, you rather think that such advances did not amount to £63 per acre?—No, nor to £9 per acre.

25,996. Mr Gordon.—With reference to this portion of the farm of Sciberscross, lying on the south side of the river, which was given over during Mr Scott's tenancy of the farm, I would like to get your idea more plainly than you gave it as to the number of holdings which you think could be placed there. Do you know the extent of ground there?—I should think there would be about 60 acres in it.

Golspie.

Alexander Bannerman.

25,997. Of arable land?—Of arable land.

25,998. But it is more in reference to the hill pasture. Do you know how many sheep are on it?—I could not tell the number of sheep.

25,999. You mentioned something about two holdings; that is why I wanted to make the point clear. I believe there are now 1200 sheep on that side of the water?—Very likely.

26,000. How many holdings would you propose to put on the 60 acres arable, and where the 1200 sheep are?—This is only one part of it.*

26,001. This is a special part, and you referred to it yourself, that is why I put the question?—I know that one man getting the whole of it would have a very excellent holding.

26,002. But it is too big for one man, that would be beyond the scope of our inquiry?—Even although two had it, I know there are from ten to twenty worse subjects than what is included in that.

26,003. But what I want to get from you, please, is the number of people you think could be placed there in a position to be self-supporting?—It would support two families comfortably.

26,004. It would require to support more than that, or I am afraid you would place very few settlers in the county at that rate?—When there is plenty of land in the county of Sutherland I would not make the holdings so small that they would not be self-supporting.

26,005. Your idea is that only two could be placed there comfortably?—Comfortably.

John Sutherland

JOHN SUTHERLAND, Merchant, Pittentrail, Rogart (50)—examined.

26,006. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—No.

26,007. Were you appointed at a public meeting?—Yes.

26,008. Where was it held?—In the Free Church, Rogart.

26,009. You are appearing along with Bannerman and Robert Matheson?—Yes.

26,010. You heard Bannerman's evidence?—Yes.

26,011. And do you concur in it?—Yes.

26,012. Do you wish to make any addition to it, with regard to available land that we ought to consider?—I have got a short statement.

26,013. Read it please.—This statement embodies the opinions of Mr Matheson and myself. We beg to submit the following statement in respect to the parish of Rogart. The land devoted to sheep runs in our parish comprises the extensive farm of Blairich, part of the farm of Sciberscross and the farm of Dalnessie, and Knockan, the upper part of the farm of Grumby, and Kinauld and Eden. On these farms prior to the clearances there were a number of places occupied by prosperous and contented tenants. These are as follows:—On the farm of Blairich:—Blairich, four tenants; Achork, two; Cavlsie, three; Toskary, one; Lettie, nine; Ardiconcre, one; Torsaid, two; Torbreck, one; Badlurgin, one; Laid-an-rairidh, one; Lubien, one; Achtomlenie, two; Tighcraig, one; Braenault, one; Achillie, two; Wren, nine; and Merlie, one. On part of the farm of Sciberscross:—Grudy, nine tenants; Liabhad, two; Brae Grudy, four; Dalfensaig, one; Aultimoult, one; Corryfrose, one; Reanriabach, two; Bad-an-asntigh, one. On the farm of Dalnessie and Knockan:—Dalnessie, one tenant; Cornabruich, one; Knockan, one; Dalmore, three. On the upper part of the farm of Grumby:—Achnaluachrach, two tenants; Craigtown, three; Aultannasack, one. Two tenants and two old women were removed from Torbeck about the time Tressady Lodge was built, but those tenants got other crofts of inferior quality to those from which they were removed, and the women got the house accommodation generally awaiting such. Conjointly with the farm of Blairich is rented the holding in Achnaluachrach which was recently occupied by the late widow Walter Mackay. As regards the quality of the land we have no hesitation in saying that on these farms the old arable land and the pasture surpass the land occupied by the majority of the crofters in the parish. Kinauld and Eden may be regarded as most suitable for new holdings. We have evidence to prove that land high lying and exposed can be cultivated to advantage. In our parish, peat banks at a high altitude produce a fair crop, at a cost not exceeding £15 per acre for reclamation. When we compare with this our low-lying straths and glens, we find that hundreds of acres that were never under cultivation could easily by improved at less cost, notwithstanding the extraordinary cost per acre of the gigantic Lairg and Kildonan reclamations. These reclamations having turned out to be a failure is no positive proof that the people could not live in comfort on the land of their forefathers. The reluctance with which the people left their holdings at the time of the clearances and the strong desire on the part of their descendants to get repossession of the land of their forefathers are evidences that people could live on holdings of sufficient size to maintain them independent of unreliable outside work. No doubt the people are glad to find that the present Duke has been radical on the land question since the year 1885 and that at present he is favourable to the formation of small farms; but they must regret that no success attended the efforts of the Small Holdings Committee of the County Council to purchase or lease land for holdings for those who stand in urgent need of the same.

(Signed) JOHN SUTHERLAND.
„ ROBERT MATHESON.

Golspie.

John Sutherland.

26,014. Mr Sutherland.—Those places you have mentioned on the farms of Blarich, Dalnessie, and Grumbie as having had tenants before are now in your opinion suitable for making small holdings thereon?—Quite suitable.

26,015. And it was because you think so, that you gave as an argument in their favour, that all these tenants were there before, I presume?—Quite so.

26,016. How many were there altogether? There are forty-two on the farm of Blairich, and others in other places making seventy-three tenants, I think altogether who were on the farms of Blairich, Dalnessie, and part of Grumbie; is that right?—I may explain that I got the number of tenants from old people in the parish, but there might have been others that escaped their knowledge. There might have been a few more, or there might have been a few less; we are not bound to any precise figure.

26,017. But you got evidence of the existence of these tenancies from people who saw them?—Well, from old people within the parish.

26,018. Who either saw them themselves, or saw the people who had the tenancies?—Some of them are actually the children of those who were evicted.

26,019. And some, I suppose, you have no doubt found who were actually living in these places?—I cannot say that I have seen any who were living in them.

26,020. About what date were the people put away from these places?—About the time of the clearances.

26,021. That is about the year 1819?—Yes, and perhaps a little later on.

26,022. And you advance this as primâ facie evidence, that the land is suitable now for small holdings again?—I would be inclined to suppose that that land is more suited for small holdings than the land at present in the occupation of the crofters.

26,023. Then, I wish to ask you a word with regard to reclamations. Do you know what were the terms of payment to crofters in the parish of Rogart, for land

* Mr Bannerman has since written explaining that he misunderstood this question. He meant Scotarie for two holdings. The ground taken up with 1200 sheep extends for five miles along the river, and could be converted into 12 crofts of good size. Scotarie lies almost one mile back from the river.

reclaimed by themselves where there was a bargain between them and the proprietor for reclaiming land?—I cannot enter into that, because, in any knowledge that I have of land being reclaimed in the parish of Rogart, there was no special bargain between the crofters and the proprietor; but I give it as my opinion that the reclamation of an acre never exceeded £15.

26,024. That is your opinion, that any reclamation of land carried through by a crofter never exceeded £15 an acre?—In the majority of cases.

26,025. On the average?—On the average.

26,026. And is it your opinion that these lands could be put in order again,—the lands that were cultivated,—at £15 an acre, the arable portion?—The old arable land in our straths would not cost nearly £15 to put in order for holdings, for the simple reason that hundreds of acres there are ready for the plough, and all that is required is fencing, and perhaps in some cases a little draining.

26,027. But the subjects that were improved in Rogart by the crofters at (you state) £15 an acre, were not so favourable subjects to work upon as the land you are speaking of. What sort of land was it then?—In some instances the ground was even worse than being in a state of nature for the simple reason that for generations the people were cutting their peats there.

26,028. And that was the land they got to reclaim?—In a good many cases.

26,029. Now, of course, you will see the absurdity of my going to make any suggestion or your making any comparison between that and the rate at which the Duke of Sutherland reclaimed the land?—Yes.

26,030. Contrasting the two states of things, what is your general deduction from the fact that crofters can reclaim land at a cost of £15 an acre, while it costs the landlord £60 an acre? Is the discrepancy not so great that it calls for some extraordinary explanation?—Yes, an extraordinary explanation, I am of opinion myself that the men employed at the Shinness reclamations could reclaim the land with the pick and spade when at the same time they were all attending to the steam-plough.

26,031. But you would not be prepared to deny that the steam-plough was a great advantage? Have you seen the steam-plough at work?—I have.

26,032. Are you aware that it was stated that even after the farms were reclaimed and put in order, they were afterwards carried on by the estate through a manager, and if I remember rightly, some £22,000 were lost on that management during the interval?—I have no doubt of it.

26,033. I forget what the length of the occupation was, but does it not strike you as a very remarkable thing that a farm would be carried on at a loss of £22,000 for a number of years?—Probably, once gone into it would require to be carried through.

26,034. But this is the management of it after it was reclaimed, and the carrying of it on, after all the initial outlay had been already made?—Oh, yes.

26,035. What would be the general deduction you would make? What, in your mind, is the reason why there is this great discrepancy between the rate at which a crofter can reclaim land and the rate at which the landlord can reclaim land?—I would go farther than a crofter; I believe that even contractors could reclaim land at £15 to £20 an acre by having it on contract.

26,036. And having a profit out of the contract?—Yes.

26,037. Besides the subsequent rent?—Yes.

26,038. So that there is, in your opinion, something that calls for explanation in this transaction when the discrepancy is so great?—Certainly.

26,039. Would it be an unfair deduction to draw from it, that a landlord-managed business like this could not be so successfully carried on as by the crofters themselves?—That is one reason, certainly.

26,040. It is, in your opinion, a fair deduction to draw from the facts of this case, taking all the facts into consideration?—I would be inclined to suppose that it was a fair deduction.

26,041. You referred to the steam plough. Are you aware that the machinery which was used in the reclamation of the Duke of Sutherland's land was machinery that had to be designed and constructed for the purpose,—and that it was being improved by experience as they went on?—That was evident, because they made improvements as they went along.

26,042. And each of these improvements would require a great additional expenditure of money?—Yes.

26,043. So that the machinery used at the beginning might actually have been cast aside before the reclamations were ended?—Yes.

26,044. Did you, as a matter of fact, see that done?—Well, no, I cannot say that I saw that done, but I have been at the reclamations one day when a number of men were employed taking an engine out of a bog; and I believe, that during the time they were experimenting and taking it out of the bog, they could have reclaimed a good deal of land.

26,045. But you are not prepared to deny that the application of machinery to the reclamation of land, if done in a proper way, is a good thing?—It might do well enough where there was a wide stretch of land on which to operate; but without a long stretch I don't think it would be advisable to try the steam plough.

26,046. But as a matter of fact, it was upon long stretches of land?—Certainly it was, in Shinness.

26,047. Could not the same machinery have reclaimed a hundred times more land than was actually done?—Probably it might, but I am not very practical on the subject.

26,048. The machinery which reclaimed so many hundreds of acres at Lairg and Kildonan would last out the reclamation of an extent of land ten times as large?—The same machinery.

26,049. If the reclamations went on, would there not be a much greater acreage to give a return for the expenditure?—Certainly, there would be no expenditure in buying new machinery.

26,050. And would not that be a very important element in any calculation as to the cost of reclamations per acre?—Yes.

26,051. Was it from that point of view that you said the reclamations were not successful?—That, and the subject operated upon.

26,052. Are you aware that it was not denied that the experiment was tried upon the most unfavourable land; are you aware that that was openly admitted? [The Chairman.—It is stated by Mr Maclean to be on high and exposed land]. I made reference rather to remarks made by the late Duke of Sutherland, who knew more about the matter than even Mr Maclean, with all deference. Are you not aware that it was not desired to lessen the green area, by ploughing it at all, but they wanted to reclaim land, in addition to the land that was old arable? Have you ever heard that stated?—No, I cannot say that I have.

26,053. Have you seen any of the reclaimed lands lately?—Not lately.

26,054. Do you know anything about the crops that are raised from them now?—I cannot speak as to the crops now, but I have seen part of the reclamations a number of years ago, and they were fast getting into a state of nature.

26,055. They were allowed to get into a state of nature?—They were allowed to get into a state of nature.

26,056. But supposing they were occupied by small working holders, are you of opinion they would ever be allowed to go back into a state of nature?—The result would be that they would keep the land in rotation.

26,057. Do you know any crofters in Rogart who are allowing land to go out of cultivation?—Not to the same extent.

26,058. Or in proportion to their holdings?—Or in proportion to their holdings.

26,059. Is it not the fact rather that they are increasing their arable land? Is not the tendency that way?—Yes.

26,060. Now, may I put this general question to you, with regard to these reclamations, and I will be done. In your opinion, is the result to the landlord of these reclamations at Kildonan and Lairg any criterion at all of what it would cost to found new settlements on the lands you were talking of?—Not the least.

26,061. Not the slightest?—So far as I can judge.

26,062. Have they, in your opinion, any bearing whatever on the matter?—None.

26,063. That is your decided opinion?—That is my decided opinion.

26,064. Are you a native of this county?—I am.

26,065. Are you the son of a crofter?—I am.

36,066. Were you brought up on a croft?—Yes.

26,067. Have you laboured on a croft?—I have.

26,068. And know all about it practically, of your own experience?—Yes, from the time I was fourteen years of age.

26,069. So it is no mere theoretical knowledge you have on the subject?—No; experimental knowledge.

26,070. You are Vice-Convener of the county, I think?—Yes.

26,071. And you are prepared to point out to us those lands that you referred to if required?—At any time.

26,072. Mr Macaulay, Solicitor.—What is your occupation?—A merchant.

26,073. Are you a crofter?—No.

26,074. You have no land in your hands just now?—No.

26,075. How do you come to be able to speak in the practical way you have done?—I told Sheriff Brand, or rather Mr Sutherland that. I was engaged in farming along with my father when I was about fourteen years of age up till close on twenty.

26,076. Between fourteen and twenty years of age, and since then you have been a merchant?—Not quite a merchant since then.

26,077. What else?—I was a tradesman.

26,078. You have been a tradesman and a merchant since then?—Yes.

26,079. So that since you were twenty years of age you have had no direct work with the land?—No.

26,080. You referred to the croft of Widow Walter Mackay at Achnaluachrach?—Yes.

26,081. Are you aware that that croft was offered to several parties?—I am.

26,082. And why did they not have it?—Because they were of opinion that they should not take the improvements of another man.

26,083. That is the improvements of Mackay?—Probably, or the improvements of his father.

26,084. And even although offered this place, they refused to have it?—Probably, and perhaps quite justifiably.

26,085. Very well. Now, about Upper Gruamach, are you aware that that place was offered at a very moderate rent,—at the rent of £40 recently?—If the Chairman would allow it, I would answer that question by asking another. Did any apply for that part of Gruamach, and were they refused?

26,086. I ask you that question about Gruamach, because it is notorious that it was in the market. Are you aware that this place was offered, and that applications were not made for it; the people would not have it?—My lord, I will answer the question direct. Yes, I was aware, but I was told that parties applied for the farm, and that they were told that that part of the farm was all but settled, and that they need not further apply.

26,087. And that was the general idea in Rogart?—Yes, so far as I could collect.

26,088. That is your information?—Yes.

26,089. How much do you estimate would be required to put these lands that you referred to in a state for a crop, including fencing and draining?—Allow me to understand your question, sir. Do you mean in labour, or in money?

26,090. Whatever cost, supposing it was done by—By the crofter himself?

26,091. Well, by the crofter himself, we will suppose: his labour is the equivalent of money: I mean these lands that you referred to as having been cleared?—It might cost about £5 an acre, but I don't think it would exceed that.

26,092. Including fencing and draining?—Yes, but not houses. Golspie. John Sutherland.

26,093. What means have you got of fixing that estimate?—My knowledge of the locality, and of the ground.

26,094. How do you arrive at that figure?—The suitableness of the soil for crofters, to begin on it without making any improvements on the most of it, but merely taking the plough and ploughing it.

26,095. Do you mean to say it would only take £5 an acre to fence that land and drain it, and put it into a state of cultivation at once?—Very few drains are required; and if you had a farm of probably 20 or 30 acres, you would, in the first instance, have only the outside ring, and I think £5 an acre should put a very good outside ring on at all events.

26,096. What about the houses now?—I do not enter into that question.

26,097. What would they cost?—I am not prepared to say what they would cost; it would depend entirely on the quality of the houses built.

26,098. But if you are able to speak in that way about land, you, as a practical tradesman, could tell us about the houses, I think?—You could build a dwelling house probably at £100, and you could go as high as £300 or £400.

26,099. But a house that would keep a crofter and his family in moderate comfort. [The Chairman.—A house suitable to the holding]?—If the crofter was to buy the material and do the whole work, about £100 probably.

26,100. Would he do the mason's work there, do you estimate?—The whole.

26,101. He would do the building himself?—No, no.

26,102. Then you mean that he would let it out to contract?—Yes.

26,103. He could build a house that would keep him in moderate comfort at a cost of £100?—Yes.

26,104. How far does that include a steading, or does it at all?—No.

26,105. Well, how much do you estimate for the steading?—Probably £80 to £100.

26,106. Now, we arrive at £200. What would you consider a fair amount to have in hand of arable land?—If circumstances would admit, I would not have a croft smaller than 20 acres, from 20 to 30 as the case might be, and up to 35 acres; but I would draw the line at perhaps 30 acres.

26,107. And taking your own estimate of £5, that would be £150. We have got it up now to £350. What would you consider the value of a fair stock for a place of that kind?—I cannot enter into that.

26,108. You don't know that practically, I suppose?—No.

26,109. Would you say £100 or £500?—Probably.

26,110. That would bring you up to £500. Now, in your opinion, how many men are there in Rogart who would be able to take a holding of that nature at such a cost as you have estimated?—So far as those who would be prepared to take land in Rogart are concerned, a large number of those who are perhaps willing to leave their present holdings have got more stock already; and in a good many cases they would carry out many of these improvements themselves, so that actually they would not require to pay dry cash out of their pocket.

26,111. But their labour is the same as money, is it not?—Certainly.

26,112. You cannot go and say that that is not equal to money at any rate?—But if you are about to count in that way, their labour would be continued.

26,113. About £500 is what you estimate as necessary for the place you depict to yourself?—You have fixed the price of stock yourself.

26,114. Well, £350 apart from that?—Yes.

26,115. And you can give us no idea as to what demand there would be for a place of that nature?—Not in the meantime.

26,116. Do you think they would be able to do the labour themselves?—A good many of them, I have no doubt.

spie. n Suther- d.

26,117. What means have you of knowing that?—The people's own statements.

26,118. Is it not your experience that sometimes these are not very satisfactory?—I should not like to go into that matter,—to begin to induce the people.

26,119. The Chairman.—Speaking of those low-lying lands which you say only require to be ploughed up, how long would it be before they yielded a crop? Would they yield a crop the first year, and if not, when?—They would yield a crop the first year.

26,120. The markets of the spring in which they were applied?—Yes.

26,121. In some cases, however, I suppose, where the land is not quite so favourably situated, more than a year would be required to obtain a crop?—There is very little of that kind of land.

26,122. Not much?—Not much.

26,123. Speaking generally of the lands you have specified, occupied previously by these old townships and single tenants, the land would yield a crop after the first year's plough?—Yes.

26,124. That is your opinion?—It is a fact: the land is there quite green, and has only produced grass from the time it yielded a crop.

26,125. In the district of which you have knowledge, is there a demand for self-sustaining holdings?—Yes.

26,126. And do you think that those who so desire would be in the main prepared to enter upon such undertakings without outside assistance?—That is a question that I am not prepared to fully enter on in the meantime. There might be a number who could, but there might be a large number who could not.

26,127. Then, would you say, speaking generally, and as one having knowledge of the people in the district, that the majority would probably require some aid?—Yes.

26,128. Mr Gordon.—Following up the Chairman's question as to the desire of the people for self-supporting holdings, there would no doubt be a difficulty in finding men with sufficient capital to take a place of the size you mention. Now I gather from what you have said, that you are not in favour of crofting townships,—small lots?—Not too small.

26,129. Therefore, I suppose you would wish the Commission to understand your opinion is that in creating new holdings, they should be of a size to occupy a man and his family profitably during the year?—Quite so; that is my idea.

26,130 And not a small croft in which a man would have to depend upon labour to eke out his subsistence?—That is my idea.

26,131. Mr Sutherland.—With regard to the houses and stock I wish to ask you this. You were questioned theoretically about difficulties as to these?—Yes.

26,132. Now, we will take the practical fact. Are there houses and stock among the crofters of Rogart?—Yes.

26,133. Did they ever get public advances or public money for the purpose of erecting the one and getting the other?—With the exception of the assistance given by the proprietor, in perhaps timber and lime, I am not aware of any.

26,134. The ordinary rule that obtained on the estate of giving them the lime and the timber?—Quite so.

26,135. In virtue of which the proprietor claimed the whole house as his property?—Prior to the passing of the Crofters Act.

26,136. You think then, that that difficulty that has been advanced is not a practical one?—Not in my opinion.

26,137. You were asked the question if labour was not money?—Yes.

26,138. The crofter has labour?—Yes.

26,139. He does not require to borrow that?—No.

26,140. Now, is labour money, in your opinion? It is rather an abstruse question I daresay, but is labour money only when it is applied to something that will produce something?—Quite so.

26,141. And you think that the people have got the labour, but that they are withheld from that which would produce money if labour were allowed to be applied to it?—Certainly.

26,142. And your position, as I understand it, is that you desire to allow that labour be applied to a productive subject?—Certainly. Golspie. John Sutherland.

26,143. And the money will follow that?—Certainly.

26,144. Is that not, as a matter of fact, how the people established their homes after they were driven from the land?—Yes.

26,145. And you think the same process could be carried out again under better circumstances?—Yes.

JOSEPH MACLEOD, Brora (31)—examined. Joseph Macleod.

26,146. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—I am a sub-crofter.

26,147. A sub-tenant?—A sub-tenant.

26,148. Who is the principal tenant?—William Grant.

26,149. Do you pay him a rent?—Yes.

26,150. What rent?—£4.

26,151. Have you a written statement?—Yes.

26,152. Kindly read it.—At a meeting held representing the crofters, cottars, and others, in the parish of Clyne, I was requested to submit the following statement respecting the townships on Brora Strath, once the happy homes of a contented, vigorous, and pious race of people, who were cruelly removed from their houses and land to make room for sheep and sport. Although thus removed from their homes and land upon which they lived comfortably, no provision was made for them, although repeatedly asserted by those who now reap the fruits of eviction, that they were removed for the bettering of their condition. There are on Strath Brora sixty-two townships. On the south of Loch Brora, twenty-three, on the north, nineteen, on the south of the Black Water, thirteen, and on the north, seven. There lived in these townships over a hundred tenants, with an average family of five. There were in Garichill, three tenants; Duchary, two; Conrisgag, five; Ledoich, two; Rinn-Chaoill, one; Carrol, five; Laidmore, one; Kilbrare, three; Dalbhaite, two; Uarachail, one; Storal, one; Strath-Ruadh, three; Scottary, three; Badinelich, one; Aultmuilten, three; Baile-(Alister M'Kechan), Cill-chaluim-chille, Craigruadh-Rheannagaimh, Greanan (ministers' sheiling); Achoilemore, seven; Achoilebeg, three; Balnacoil, one; Dalpholly; Killean (shieling of laird of Uppat); Salachy, one; Bogag, one; Oldtown, two; Feaglais, three; Loanmuck, one; Ardchue, one; Rhean, one; Dalfluich, one; Brechue; Dalenacnuigag; Badlewis, one; Baddan, two; Foiche, one; Muiemore, two; Lubaig, one; Cnoc-Cauchoilach, one; Achemore, two; Corrifrose, one; Dalbreac, two; Amat, one; Dalbhadie, one; Achnacoile, one; Achnamian, one; Baddantighe, three; Cluaig, one; Rheanscaing, two; Achness, two; Chrislich, one; Gobernuisgach, one; Polly, one; Dalbhain, one; Craggienadaimh, one; Achnanighean, Sciberscross, Mearen, Cill-Pheadair-mor, Cill-Pheadair-Beag.

Strath Brora may be said not to be so large in extent as some of the other straths from which the people were removed in this county, but it is considered to be equal to any for growing crop as well as for pasture.

Mr Shaw is tenant of Gordonbush farm, and keeps the following number of shepherds and sheep:—Cnockan, one shepherd, 400 sheep; Polly, two shepherds, 700 sheep; Brechue, one shepherd, 400 sheep; Aschoile, two shepherds, 1000 sheep; Gordonbush, one shepherd, 160 sheep.

Mr Milligan is tenant of the Sciberscross farm, and keeps the following shepherd and flocks:—Kilbrare, one shepherd, 1000 sheep; Point, one shepherd, 360 sheep; Sciberscross, one shepherd, 360 sheep; Amat, one shepherd, 460 sheep; Dalbreack, two shepherds, 700 sheep. There are no crofters on all this extent of ground.

There are two shooting tenants—one keeps three gamekeepers and the other two. There is also the Carrol deer forest, which we believe to be capable of pasturing about 1000 sheep.

The crofters of this parish hold a club farm at Culean for grazing purposes, but it is found to be inadequate and they desire an extension. They possess very small lots, and in the majority of cases these are of a very inferior soil, and they express the sincere hope that the visit of the Royal Commission may be the means of demonstrating to the present Government, in whom the Highland people have every confidence, that there is urgent need for immediate legislation for the Highlands, with a view to the descendants of a noble race being replaced on the lands of their forefathers.

(Signed) Joseph Macleod, Brora.
,, John Mackenzie, Brora.

The rental of the shootings in the parish is £2630, and that of the farms £1198.

26,153. Are you of opinion that the lands formerly occupied by these persons and townships are capable of reoccupation and recultivation to profit?—Yes.

26,154. You mentioned club farms; are you in favour of club farms yourself?—In some cases not; in this case it is desirable, because the grazing is so far away from the various districts of the parish of Clyne, that anything but a club farm would not suit. It is not adjacent to their holdings, and, therefore, it is better as a club farm. Had it been a common adjoining their holdings, it would have been different.

26,155. Could not a common adjacent to their holdings be worked more profitably on the club farm system than each individual looking after his own stock?—I could not say; I know some who have got a common, where each attends to his own stock, and they are just as prosperous as a club farm, if not more so.

26,156. You are of opinion that the advantages of a club farm depend on local circumstances?—Quite.

26,157. Mr Macaulay, Solicitor.—Who is the principal tenant of this place that you occupy as sub-tenant?—William Grant.

26,158. Do you know what rent he pays to the Duke?—About £3, 15s.

26,159. And have you got the whole of his holding in this sublet of yours?—I have this year: I hold a shop as well as the croft.

26,160. Is it a store?—Yes, a grocery shop.

26,161. Is the shop part of William Grant's holding?—Part of William Grant's. I do not hold the whole of the building; there are other two tenants occupying it, but the croft is in my possession.

26,162. What is paid for this other part of the building?—Probably about £6 or £9 more.

26,163. And you pay £4?—I pay £4.

26,164. Take it at £8 for the other part; then William Grant receives £12, does he, for his £4 holding?

26,165. Mr Sutherland.—Is it with the object of increasing the rent that that question is asked?

26,166. Mr Macaulay.—I want to find out the state of matters. [Witness]. If it is in order to answer it I should be glad to do so, but if you do not deem it a prudent question I shall refrain from answering.

26,167. The Chairman.—You can answer it or not, as you like, it is not quite relevant?—Then I shall refrain from answering it. But I might point out that in the Parish of Clyne there are a number of people desirous of having an extension of holding. For a long time they have desired so, and they made application to the Small Holdings Committee of the County Council. There were 47 applications, but it was found by the Small Holdings Committee that no land was available.

26,168. Did they apply for any specific land, or for land in general?—With very few exceptions, they each stated the extent and the places they desired for holdings. I for one applied for 48 acres.

26,169. Mr Sutherland.—You heard the statement that was made to-day with regard to that?—Yes.

26,170. The Chairman.—Pardon me a moment? Did you specify the locality of the 48 acres?—Yes.

26,171. You identified it?—Yes.

26,172. What answer did you get to the application?—No land available was the reply, except 48½ acres at Embo.

Golspie. Joseph Macleod.

26,173. Where were the 48 acres for which you applied?—At Aberscross.

26,174. Did any other applicants identify the lands that they desired to obtain for small holdings?—Yes.

26,175. A number of them?—A number of them.

26,176. Were these lands also at Aberscross?—No, in the parish which I represent myself, the parish of Clyne.

26,177. On what farms were these upon?—Some upon Gordonbush, some on Lothbeg, and some on Kintradwell farm, and others.

26,178. But the application has not resulted in any practical advantage?—There is no fruit flowing from it at any rate. It is unworkable so far as the Small Holdings Committee is concerned.

26,179. Mr Macaulay.—In connection with Aberscross, when was this application made to the Duke or his agent for the 48 acres?—It was made to the Small Holdings Committee of the County Council, not to the estate.

26,180. It was not made to the Duke of Sutherland?—We, as a Small Holdings Committee, intimated to the various factors or to Mr Maclean, who is factor for this side of that county, that there were a number of applications for holdings, but the reply which the Committee received was that no land was available except 48½ acres at Embo.

26,181. The application to the County Council then was in a general way, and not for this 40 acres or for any other land specially?—The Small Holdings Committee communicated with the estate, with the view of ascertaining whether land could be had for those applied.

26,182. It was done in a general way?—It could not be otherwise than in a general way, on the part of the Small Holdings Committee. We were acting on behoof of all the applicants.

26,183. The Chairman.—What we are anxious to get at is this; in the communication made to Mr Maclean, was there a specification of the particular lands desired by each applicant?—No, the clerk of the County Council intimated that there were applications from the various parishes of this county, and wanted Mr Maclean, or the estate which Mr Maclean represents, to say whether land was available for those who were now applying for it.

26,184. But it only got the length of trying to ascertain whether there was available land, without specifying the land which you thought was available, and which you localised; is that so?—I do not understand.

26,185. For example, take your own case. So far as the application bore upon your own case, was there communicated to Mr Maclean the fact that you desired a particular portion, a specified portion of a particular farm?—I am not prepared to say so, as far as I am personally concerned, but the fact was that nothing could be done as far as the Small Holdings Committee was concerned, because the reply to the whole, jointly, was that no land was available, except the 48½ acres at Embo.

26,186. But as I understand you to say, the communication to Mr Maclean did not say that particular individuals asked for specified portions of land?—No, there was none of that kind. It was sent as a whole from the various parishes.

26,187. Mr Forsyth.—Have you any knowledge of the general action of the Small Holdings Committee, with reference to any other estate, say to Skibo? Did they ask definitely for any particular land?—None in particular, just in the general way in which we applied to his Grace the Duke of Sutherland.

26,188. You just asked for land generally?—Our clerk was instructed to inform the factor or the estate manager, that there were applications for land on that ground, and the reply was that they could not in the meantime give the land.

26,189. But did you not think it advisable to ask for some special place? Are you a member of the Small Holdings Committee?—Yes.

26,190. Did you not think it advisable to ask for some specific places on which the estate could have decided absolutely whether it would grant the land or not?—Well, we considered that from the replies which we had received, it would be just as fruitless to specify the places as to write in the general way in which we have done.

26,191. But don't you think that a specific refusal even would have been much more definite than this general reply, and more desirable?—Well, the reply which was received from the estate of Skibo stated that the property being under trust they could not definitely say what could be done.

26,192. In that case you had a definite answer?—They could neither sell nor let.

26,193. And was it the same in the case of the Sutherland estate? Did they give you a similarly general refusal?—What they said was that no land was available.

26,194. But still you put your request in general terms only?—Oh, just in general terms.

26,195. The Chairman.—Were these 40 acres that you had in view for yourself?—Yes.

26,196. Was that just in your own mind?—For myself.

26,197. It was just in your own mind; it was not communicated to anybody?—As well as being in my mind, I communicated my desire for 40 acres to the Small Holdings Committee, at which time my application appeared in the public prints, probably on account of myself forming one of that Committee.

26,198. Mr Sutherland.—Would it not be easier, in your opinion, for the landlord that your application should be general? You did not want to tie him down to any particular part?—We did not want to tie him down to any particular part, and we thought that by applying in general terms he would suit himself.

26,199. Was that the object?—That was the object in applying generally.

26,200. So that if he had any land available anywhere you would be very glad to entertain any proposal with regard to that land, was that it?—Yes, we would. Of course, the people, my lord, in our parish, feel that the time has now arrived when something should be done with a view to getting the land; and as to the difficulty which Mr Macaulay has been putting in the way, I might point out to your lordship that we in Clyne don't consider any difficulty there, and we feel, at least I do, that the difficulty would not be so great to-day in taking these holdings as it was when the people were put down from the holdings which we now want to get back, and if we are allowed to build our own houses and reclaim the land a second time, we in Clyne think there is no difficulty in being allowed to go back on the soil and regain the inheritance which has been taken from us. If we had got the land handed down to us as our inheritance, the difficulty would be very easily overcome.

26,201. Mr Macaulay.—As to these small holdings I would like to ask whether it is not the fact that the factors, that the Duke's representatives, asked the County Council to specify what land they specially referred to.

26,202. The Chairman.—Is it the fact that the estate management for the Duke requested the County Council or the committee of the Council to specify the lands referred to in their application?—They were specified.

26,203. Was that question put on behalf of the Duke?—I am not aware. There are two County Councillors here who might probably be able to answer it if your lordship desires to put it.

26,204. Is it not within your knowledge that a request was made on behalf of the Duke to specify the particular lands which the committee had in view, if they had any?—I am not aware just now, but I know that some of the replies which came from Factor Maciver, in the north, were so very indifferent that we became disgusted with the whole question; we could get no satisfaction of any kind.

26,205. We will deal with anything regarding Mr Factor Maciver's management when we go there. Golspie.

26,206. Mr Bannerman.—With your permission I may say, as a member of the County Council of Sutherland, that the application was made in general terms and the answer in particular, stating that there was no land but what was under lease with the exception of this park at Embo. Joseph Macleod.

26,207. A general application followed by that answer? [Mr Bannerman].—And the answer was that all the farms or places suitable for holdings were under lease, with the exception of this park at Embo, which I may say was without a tenant.

26,208. Then, do you know, Mr Bannerman, whether any request was made by the estate to specify lands suitable?—The terms on which the land was to be granted were so enormous that we could not approach the estate any further, because £1 was asked for an acre there, and knowing that the rent of the farm in general was just about one-half of that, we could not agree.

26,209. Was any request made on behalf of the estate to specify particular lands?—We were told that all the land that should be available was under lease, and that it could not be granted.

26,210. That was the ultimate answer; but did the estate make any request to the committee to specify particular lands?—I don't think so.

26,211. Are you a member of the Small Holdings Committee?—I am a member interested in the land.

26,212. But are you a member of the Small Holdings Committee?—No, but I have attended all the meetings of the Council and know what was done.

26,213. Who is the chairman of the Small Holdings Committee?—Both the Convener and the Vice-Convener sit ex officio; the one sits in the absence of the other.

26,214. Rev. John Murray, Brora.—Perhaps you will allow me, as chairman of the County Council, to make a short explanation on the point. In the first place some confusion has prevailed between the Allotments Act and the Small Holdings Act. The land offered to us was offered under the Allotments Act. Mr Maclean, the factor, replied to us that so much of the land on Embo farm was available not for small holdings but for allotments for the fishermen, and he laid down conditions on which the land was to be given. These conditions were, in our opinion, so unreasonable that we could not look at them, and our reply to that communication was that in the circumstances we could not entertain his proposals, but the Act, in our opinion, allowed him to arrange directly with the tenants, and if he should do so we should be satisfied. I don't know whether any definite arrangement has been come to between the Duke of Sutherland and the fishermen of Embo. You will observe, my lord, that the land offered to us was to be possessed by the fishermen of Embo, and that we were to be in the position as County Council of being rent collectors from the fishermen, instead of the Duke of Sutherland. If we were going to buy land and have tenants under us, we would not like to begin with perhaps Embo, and how that question stands now I cannot tell you, but that is the upshot of that particular point. Now, as to the applications to the Duke for small holdings we were dealing with the whole county, and undoubtedly applications were sent to us from particular districts. I cannot say specifically whether we mentioned the districts, but, certainly, we led the factors to understand that applications were sent to us from various districts. I don't know whether we mentioned the particular spot and the particular acreage,—I cannot be definite as to that; but the reply was that there was no land available, and when we heard that we thought there was no particular use in saying very much about it. But our last communication to the estate, and I think to Mr Maclean here was to state in reference to any land which he would have, such as Embo or any other, whether he would be willing to submit it to arbitration, so that there would be no disagreement as to conditions or stipulations. To that communication we have received no reply to this day, and I hold that a courteous reply, at any rate, to these communications would keep matters smooth. Civility costs nothing, but it goes a long way.

Golspie. Joseph Macleod.

John Mackenzie.

JOHN MACKENZIE, East Brora (63)—examined.

26,215. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

26,216. Was your rent settled by the Crofters Commission?—Not yet.

26,217. What is your rent?—My rent is £1 now, but it was only 5s. before, and tramway and railroad went through it for twenty-four years, and we are paying rent to his Grace for that railroad and tramway land.

26,218. Can you tell us the extent?—About one and a half acres; it is all spoilt by the railroad and the tramway now.

26,219. One and a half acres altogether?—Yes, that we can cultivate now.

26,220. Arable land?—Yes.

26,221. Have you any outrun?—No.

26,222. Have you any stock?—I have one cow.

26,223. You heard the evidence of Joseph Macleod?—Yes.

26,224. And do you concur in it?—Yes.

26,225. I suppose it fully sets forth what you wish to tell us?—Yes.

26,226. Then, we may take you as concurring in his evidence. Have you anything additional to say?—Not much, except this that I hear it often said that the people are far better off since they were put out of the strath than they were in the strath. Now, I was questioning one of the men who were evicted from the strath. He was one of our Free Church elders, David Gordon, and he told me, himself, that if there were seven of a family, two lads might be out with the man working on the bit farm, one of the daughters would be teasing wool, another would be knitting, and another spinning, and the wife would be making ready the meat, and thus every one was taken in for the house. So if a stranger would come their way they would keep him a fortnight for his good company. Now, we will come down to where you are now. If a friend comes our way we need to go to the shop and buy things for which we may perhaps not be able to pay for a month. And I will defy them to say that they had arrears of rent at the strath. They did not hear of any one putting his parents or his sister or his brother on the parochial board; they could keep them themselves, and the sons and daughters were not needing to go away, as they could maintain themselves at home, but down here in the low land, whenever they are sixteen years of age, the daughter or the son must leave the parents and go away; and when the father comes to old age, or loses his power of working, he must go on the parochial board.

Alexander Mackay.

ALEXANDER MACKAY, Wester Clyne (44)
—examined.

26,227. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—My mother is the crofter.

26,228. You live with your mother?—Yes.

26,229. What rent does she pay?—£2, 16s.

26,230. The holding has not been dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—No, it has not been dealt with by the Crofters Commission.

26,231. Do you agree with the previous evidence?—Yes.

26,232. Have you anything else to tell us,—anything additional?—No, I have just been here to answer any question that may be asked.

26,233. Well, I think we have pretty nearly exhausted what we may desire to have laid before us, both with regard to Strath Brora and other districts. I have no question to ask.

26,234. Mr Sutherland.—Is West Clyne the same as Doll?—No, West Clyne is on the north side of Brora river. Doll is on the south side.

26,235. Have you then a share in Killean grazing?—Yes. Golspie.

26,236. Mr Macaulay, Solicitor.—You are connected with this Clyne grazing?—Yes. Alexand Mackay.

26,237. You are secretary of it I think, are you not?—Yes.

26,238. With what success has that undertaking been carried on? Has it been a success do you think?—More so since the rent has been reduced, but while the rent stood at the old figure it was not.

26,239. Do you find that the crofters work well together in this club farm? Are there any disagreements among themselves, as a rule, as to the management?—No, I am not aware of any in the meantime.

26,240. So upon the whole you found that the club farm worked well?—Oh, yes, it has been working well.

Angus Murray.

ANGUS MURRAY, Achrimsdale, Clyne (68)—examined.

26,241. The Chairman.—Do you concur in the previous evidence we have had with regard to Strath Brora?—Yes.

26,242. And does it express your views on the matter before us?—Certainly it does.

26,243. Mr Sutherland.—What rent do you pay yourself?—The croft that I am in now was only paying 10s. When my name went in another 10s. was put on. I was not able to build a house, and I applied to Mr Loch to build one for me, which he did. We settled that I would pay £1 of interest in the year, and we settled at the time when the house would be paid, that the house would be free to me. Now, it came on me that there were taxes to pay for this £1, and I went to Mr Maclean and asked him what was the reason that taxes were added to the interest. He said that it was on account of the rental. Now, there was another croft beside me that was vacant, and I got the promise of it from our present Duke when he was Marquis of Stafford; that if he would get a place for the tenant that was in it, viz., William Macglashan, I would get the whole croft along with my own.

26,244. Did Macglashan get another place?—Macglashan died, and I went for the half of the land. It was only the half I asked, and Mr Maclean said that I was too old to ask more land. But I said there was a family of mine that would rise and help me if I had more land. I had not three acres altogether, and I said I would be satisfied if I got four.

26,245. What became of Mr Macglashan's holding?—It was shared between me and Mr John Barr.

26,246. Did not you get then what you wanted?—No, I did not get but one and a half acres, and the half acre is under whins.

26,247. But you did not ask the whole of it?—No, I asked the half.

26,248. And did not you get the half?—No, but I got one and a half acres. That land was paying 30s. when Macglashan got it, and it was raised between me and John Barr to £3, 5s.; I, myself, paid the compensation, £4, for it.

26,249. To whom did you pay the compensation? To the ground officer, Machardy.

26,250. Mr Macaulay, Solicitor.—I suppose you quite approved of this croft being divided between yourself and your neighbour?—I am not satisfied, because I asked the rent of Machardy twice, and he was not able to tell me.

Robert Matheso

ROBERT MATHESON, Labourer, Rogart (35)
—examined.

26,251. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—No.

26,252. What are you?—I live with my mother on the croft.

26,253. Your mother has a croft?—Yes.

26,254. What rent does she pay?—£8.

26,255. Was that rent fixed by the Crofters Commission?—No.

olspie.
obert
atheson.

26,256. Does she hold from year to year, or under lease?—From year to year.

26,257. You heard the evidence I daresay of Mr Bannerman and of Sutherland of Pittentraill?—Yes.

26,258. Do you concur in their evidence?—Yes.

26,259. I suppose it fully sets forth the views you wish to submit. Have you anything additional to state to us?—No.

26,260. Mr Sutherland.—Would you be prepared to take a holding under the circumstances we have been talking about to-day if you had the opportunity?—I would.

utherland.

DONALD SUTHERLAND, Burnfoot, Kinbrace (30)—examined.

26,261. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—We hold a piece of ground under lease.—

26,262. Who is "we"?—My brother and myself.

26,263. What is your brother's name?—William Sutherland.

26,264. You are joint-tenants?—Yes.

26,265. Under a lease for how many years?—Nine teen years.

26,266. And the lease is still current I suppose?—Yes.

26,267. What rent do you pay?—Over £37.

26,268. What is the precise rent?—I am not sure as to the shillings.

26,269. £37 odds you mean?—Yes.

26,270. You are anxious to obtain an addition to your holding. Do you think there is available land in the district which would make a good addition to your holding?—One thing that we know is that our holding in its present position does not pay.

26,271. And you think you could make it pay if it was made larger?—By pasture but not by arable land.

26,272. How much additional pasture would you like?—I am not prepared to say how much we would require to make it pay. But one thing is plain to us, that in the meantime the arable does not pay.

26,273. What extent of additional pasture would you like to get?—I am not prepared to say in the meantime how much additional pasture we would require, but probably double what we have.

26,274. What rent would you be willing to give if your pasture was doubled?—Just according to the quality of the pasture.

26,275. Would you be willing to pay a similar rate per acre as you are now paying?—Oh, no.

26,276. You think it should be cheaper?—Yes.

26,277. Then, is it your opinion that your rent is too high?—It would depend very much on the quality of the ground that we might get in addition to what we have. If the quality was good it would perhaps afford the rent we pay, but, of course, if not,—if it was black ground it would not do so.

26,278. You are in favour then of tenants of contracted holdings getting additions to their holdings if it can be done?—Any available ground; that means ground that is fit for cultivation to profit.

26,279. Or otherwise capable of being advantageously occupied,—that is the remit to us, to consider what land is capable of cultivation to profit or of being otherwise advantageously occupied?—Our experience is that the arable land we have in Kinbrace does not pay, we are not profited by it. We labour the land and yet we have to live otherwise; we have to work for our living outside the ground that we hold.

26,280. When did you begin your lease?—About nine years ago.

26,281. It paid some years, I suppose?—Not the arable.

26,282. But the holding in its entirety?—Well, it would be very hard on it to pay.

26,283. Have you been working at a loss for nine years?—Yes, at the arable.

26,284. But on the holding altogether?—Almost, if not totally at a loss. We had to seek work elsewhere to make ends meet 26,285. Has your rent been reduced since you entered?—No. Golspie.

26,286. Have you always paid your rent?—Yes. Donald Sutherland.

26,287. But you had to supplement the profits you got from the holding by labour done otherwise?—Yes, we had to labour elsewhere.

26,288. What did you labour at?—We hired. We did posting work, and we held a contract of the high road.

26,289. And by that means you were able to get along?—Yes, in every way we could get to win our living; we were always ready to do any work we could get, so as to make ends meet. But one thing clear to us, is that we could not live in our holding if we were depending on it entirely.

26,290. Is your arable a good quality, or a poor quality?—It does not yield crop.

26,291. Then, it is a poor quality?—The soil is fair to look at; but whether it is in the soil, or whether it is in the climate I don't know, but we cannot make it pay.

26,292. It is fair to look at, but it does not yield a good crop?—No, it does not.

26,293. Does it stand high?—I am not quite sure of the exact height, but it is not very high; it is at Kinbrace.

26,294. Is it near where the reclamations have been made?—Yes, it is reclaimed land we hold for our arable.

26,295. Is it exposed?—It has a northerly aspect.

26,296. And your crops are always late?—Always late, and always light.

26,297. And exposed to frost?—Always exposed to frost; we have never yet raised a potato since we went there until this year.

26,298. This is an exceptionally good year?—Yes, that is so. We never before raised a potato that was fit for human food; we always raised what potatoes we had down at the shore at Helmsdale.

26,299. Have you proposed since you entered on your lease to renounce the lease?—We would not renew our lease in the circumstances.

26,300. But have you tried to give up your present lease?—No, we signed the lease, and we were bound to continue the lease until it expires.

26,301. But perhaps the Duke might have agreed to relieve you?—Well, the Duke did not relieve us of the lease, and we have been striving to go on.

26,302. Did you make any application to be relieved of the lease?—No.

26,303. Mr Sutherland.—I understand that your position is that you would like more pasture ground?—So as to make our place pay, because in the present state of matters our arable land does not pay the labour spent on it. Whether the pasture would pay or the arable would not matter if only we could get ends to meet on our holding and not have to work outside.

26,304. You think that is a very undesirable thing on the part of people who pay £37 of rent? They should be on a holding that would afford them a livelihood without doing any outside work?—Most decidedly, whatever size the holding might be.

26,305. But especially one for which you pay £37 of rent? You think it is a reasonable thing to expect?—It is a reasonable thing.

26,306. Does the value of the grazing not depend upon the amount of land you have in cultivation attached to it?—Oh, I don't think so.

26,307. We have been hearing that everywhere?—There are plenty people who have pasture land without arable land at all, and they have to live by it.

26,308. But it is not what they can barely live by we are inquiring into, but what is best for occupation?—Well, that is one's experience.

26,309. Well, we have been hearing difficulties raised in the way of the occupation of the land at present, because there was too little arable land in proportion to the pasture. Now, you have got too much arable land in proportion to the pasture, and you want more pasture; is not that the position you are in?—We want what will pay, because our arable land does not pay.

26,310. But you don't farm the arable land apart from the grazing land? You don't separate them?—They are enclosed; the arable land is enclosed.

26,311. What I mean is that your farm is conducted not as arable land and as pasture separately, but as a whole, and you stated over and over again that your arable land did not pay?—No.

26,312. I could understand your saying that your farm does not pay, but I am bound to say I do not follow you in saying that your mere arable land does not pay.—Perhaps I could explain it to you. Our corn is not fruitful; our seed is not good. We cannot raise turnip, and there is our labour spent on these two things.

26,313. Is your land then different from the other land we saw up there?—That is our experience of the land, others can speak of their experience.

26,314. No doubt. But then you say that the crops are late?—Yes.

26,315. May I ask you if you have your crop in now?—Yes, but I have already stated that this is an exceptional year.

26,316. Quite so: it is exceptional everywhere.

26,317. The Chairman.—I see your rent is £37, 12s. 10d.?—I suppose so.

26,318. What is the precise extent of your arable land?—27½ acres.

26,319. And of your grazing?—I am not certain; I cannot put the grazing into acreage.

26,320 Mr Gordon.—How many sheep do you keep?—Varying from 70 to 80 ewes.

26,321. And how many cattle?—Three cows and three calves.

26,322. Have you 70 acres of pasture?—I could not say; but as to the arable land I have seen a statement that we had 35, whereas we have only 27½.

26,323. Mr Sutherland.—And for that you pay £37?—Yes.

26,324. So does it not come to this that your rent is far too high?—Well, we entered on the lease, and we promised to pay that rent, and as long as we are able to pay it—

26,325. The Chairman.—You must adhere to your bargain?—Yes.

26,326. Mr Macaulay, Solicitor.—You talked of the quality of your crops up there. If you could raise a decent crop on that arable land do you think you would be able to make the farm pay at the present rent?—A decent crop is money itself. We have done our best, and there is no person that can impute bad farming to us.

26,327. You are one of the three crofters up at Kinbrace there, on that reclaimed land?—My father was a crofter, but we never were crofters.

26,328. Well, you are one of the parties who have three holdings up there, yourself and Bannerman, and another?—Yes.

26,329. Now, is the quality of the crop that these other people raise, to look at generally, much the same as yours?—Of course, I cannot speak for other people, but one thing I can say from our neighbour, Henderson, he told me he did not thrash a sheaf since two years. And I suppose we are just as anxious to make a living as any one, and if there was money in it we would thrash it out.

26,330. To what do you attribute this failure, to the climate, or what?—Very much the climate. There is a good deep soil; anyone looking at the soil would say it was very good, and so it is; but it is very much the climate; it is too high and exposed, and is much taken with frost. I think it is two years ago on 1st May, but I am not quite sure,—at any rate, it was the year Mr Muir went to Badanloch, we sowed our corn in March, in the latter end of March, and it came out very fair and beautiful, but about the 16th of May, in a week, there came one storm of snow and frost that made every spot of our crop quite bare. Down on the east coast they did not suffer nearly so much.

26,331. Now, in the other parts of Kildonan, what is your opinion as regards the crops that might be raised there, say down from Kinbrace to Kildonan, and these places?—My father was born on the Strath, and I used to hear a great deal about it. It was a generally understood thing that the people were often in want and difficulty and poverty, owing to a good crop one year and a bad crop numerous years.

26,332. That is what your father told you?—That is the general thing we used to hear about it. Since you have referred to that subject, there is one thing I have to say. I am not sure whether it is two years October last or one year October last, but the men we took up with us to work along with us at the harvest I had to send home on account of the continuous wet weather, they were not getting any work done. And the whole Strath from some place under Mr Rutherford's parks until the parish school was all one flood.

26,333. Mr Sutherland.—What time of the year was that?—In October.

26,334. How often did that happen in your memory?—That was my experience in eight years.

26,335. Mr Macaulay.—One such flood in eight years will do a deal of harm?—If one met with such a total loss in eight years it would do for him.

26,336. Suppose you had this place for nothing, and were to do nothing outside your land, do you think you would be able to make a living?—No, and pay our rent, and I don't think we could live on it even with no rent at all.

26,337. As an arable place?—Our living will not grow on it.

26,338. But the grazing is fair?—I made no objection to the grazing.

26,339. It is the arable that you complain of; you cannot grow a crop up there?—Not to advantage.

26,340. And are you satisfied that any people settling down on that strath would be equally unsuccessful?—If they had eight years' experience as I have had, perhaps they will just find the same. When we took the place we thought we were getting a lift and improving ourselves, and we did our best but failed utterly.

26,341. Your expenses there would be comparatively small,—there is just yourself and your brother?—And a housekeeper.

26,342. You are quite a small family?—Oh, very small.

26,343. And you are not in the way of spending; you are always economising?—We are trying our best, or we could not have our rent paid.

26,344. And if it were not for the fact that you get work outside, at roads, &c., you would not be able to pay your rent?—No.

26,345. The Chairman.—Do you think if you had pasture that would carry 160 ewes instead of 80, you would be hopeful of carrying on the holding to a profit?—Considering the rent.

26,346. But with the present rent?—I could not say with the present rent and with present prices; prices are extraordinary low.

26,347. But do you think that if prices were better and you were paying a fair rent you could carry on the holding to a profit with 160 ewes on the pasture?—Well, 160 is a very small number.

26,348. How many would you require to have in order to carry it on to a profit?—300 is what would make work for one man. One has just the same labour with 160 sheep as with 300.

26,349. Then, you think if you had 300 ewes and land at a Fair Rent you would be inclined to stay with the hope of carrying on the undertaking to a profit?—Yes, that would be nearer the mark.

26,350. Mr Sutherland.—But as to the present holding, I suppose you would be anxious to get rid of it?—We would not renew our lease.

26,351. And upon the whole you are sorry you took it?—We would not take it to-day.

26,352. Now, with regard to the storms that devastate the fearful country you live in,—you know it very well?—Yes.

26,353. You don't deny that I also know it very well?—I think you should.

26,354. As well as you?—I cannot say that; I have lived there summer and winter.

26,355. But you will admit that I am not ignorant of the country?—I lived there a number of winters. Golspie.

26,356. So did I. But we have seen the crops that were raised there; we saw some of the finest turnips in Sutherlandshire there?—Well, you would have seen our turnips too if you had passed; I waited three days thinking the Commission would come, and our turnips were there for inspection. Donald Sutherland.

26,357. But we saw other turnips in the strath?—There is no person that would say but we do equal justice to the ground.

26,358. I do not question that for a moment. Do you know Kinbrace farm?—Yes.

26,359. Have you ever seen any of the crops raised by Mr Fraser there?—Yes.

26,360. Do you know the weight of the oats he raises?—I know the weight of a rig of barley.

26,361. I am asking you about the oats?—No.

26,362. What about the barley?—I have seen a rig of barley at his place, and it was quite unfit to be used for food.

26,363. What would you consider a good weight for a bushel of oats?—The standard weight.

26,364. What is the standard weight?—Forty-two.

26,365. And do you know if any of the oats raised by Mr Fraser were up to the standard weight?—I never was aware of it.

26,366. How far is his place from yours?—Barely a mile. But Mr Fraser's arable land is not the same as mine. There is a ditch between them, and Mr Fraser never as far as I am aware put a plough into the arable land beside us.

26,367. But he raises oats nearly up to the standard?—I am not aware of it.

26,368. Have you not been successful in raising turnips?—Fairly successful.

26,369. I thought you said in reply to a question that you were not successful in raising turnips?—No, I did not say that.

26,370. Are you aware that those who are responsible for the reclamations, part of which you occupy, have publicly stated that they answered the purpose for which they were made?—I have nothing to do with that.

26,371. Are you aware of it?—No, if I understand your question, I am not aware of it.

26,372. Certain parties who were responsible for these reclamations said in print that they were perfectly satisfied with the result?—I am not aware of that at all.

26,373. From where could the additional arable you want be got?—I made no reference to additional arable.

26,374. I beg your pardon,—additional grazing. Is there plenty additional grazing round about you?—It is all occupied.

26,375. So you see no prospect of getting an increase of the grazing land you want?—No, it is all occupied in the meantime.

26,376. So then, at the end of your lease there is nothing for you but to remove?—Well, we will not renew our lease in the present circumstances.

26,377. That is, at the present rent?—Well, perhaps the rent may be an item, but there are other matters. A lease is a thing that is signed privately.

26,378. But you are perfectly well aware that a great number of leaseholders on the Duke of Sutherland's property have got reductions of rent. We were told by Mr Maclean that there was a considerable reduction made; why did not you share in that reduction?—I don't know.

26,379. Don't you think you have a good case to go to the landlord with?—Well, a bargain is a bargain, and we just bargained with the Duke of Sutherland to hold the land for that time, and we have been provided for till now, whatever be the result after this.

26,380. Mr Macaulay.—You got an addition of grazings some time ago?—Yes.

26,380*a*. And there was no extra rent charged for hat?—No.

26,381. So that that was the form that your reduction of rent took?—Yes, but it does not pay all the same.

26,382. Mr Sutherland.—You did get addition of certain grazing?—Yes.

26,383. But it was not enough to benefit you substantially?—No.

26,384. Mr Gordon.—You have been eight years in the strath?—Yes.

26,385. What has been the average weight of the oats grown in your place since you went there?—It varied.

26,386. Give us the top weight?—From 35 to 40, but I never saw it above 40. Perhaps, as a rule, it would be about 36, but I don't think it made 35 last year.

26,387. Last year and the year before were bad years?—Yes.

26,388. And 1888 was a bad year?—Yes.

26,389. But in 1886 and 1887 and 1884, had you not good crops?—Fairly good, but always light crops.

26,390. You have been unfortunate in having a number of bad years lately?—Yes, and low prices.

26,391. The average weight of your crop would not come up to 40 lbs?—No, it never stood at 40 with us, as far as I am aware.

26,392. In any individual year, was the average weight 40 lbs?—Not that I am aware of.

26,393. And in some bad years it was less than 35?—Oh, yes.

26,394. You are a little lower down than Mr Bannerman, are not you?—Yes.

26,395. Is he higher or lower?—Probably lower, but not much; there is not much difference. [Mr Sutherland.—You are a little higher? We may be higher.]

26,396. Did Mr Gunn ever cultivate any part of Lochside?—I am not aware that he did.

26,397. How long has he been tenant there?—I suppose for five years.

26,398. Has he been in the way of sowing corn or turnips?—His shepherd did; I don't know whether Mr Gunn himself ever did.

26,399. But has he ever sown a whole field of turnips?—No, not to my knowledge.

26,400. He finds it more profitable to use the land for grazing purposes?—Yes.

26,401. He has very good sheep?—Fair.

26,402. They are extra good I think. If your sheep are as good as Mr Gunn's they will do?—Oh, no, they are not.

[Adjourned.]

TWENTY-SIXTH SITTING.

LAIRG, September 27, 1893. Lairg.

Present:—

David Brand, Esq., Advocate, Sheriff of Ayr, and Chairman of the Crofters Commission, Chairman.
Angus Sutherland, Esq., M.P.
James Noel Muller Forsyth, Esq.
George Gordon, Esq.
William Mackenzie, Esq., Secretary.

David Mackay, Crofter, Rheanbreck (50)—examined. David Mackay

26,403. The Chairman.—Was your holding dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—Yes.

26,404. What had your former rent been?—£1, 12s. 6d., or thereabout.

26,405. And what is your new rent?—£3, 8s.

Lairg.

David Mackay.

26,406. The blue book says—Widow John Mackay, Rheanbreck, 7 acres arable, 1 acre 1 rood 20 poles outrun, and a share in 3000 acres of hill ground divided into 44 shares, according to the rent. Present rent, £2, 10s. 3d. Fair rent, £3, 8s.; but the 3000 acres included 1800 acres of hill pasture added which was not included in the old rent. That is from the farm of Achinduich. A note in the book says—'The Duke of 'Sutherland enlarged these holdings of Torrobol, 'Rheanbreck, and Tomich by adding to them 1800 acres 'of hill pasture. The "present rents" apply to the 'old holdings, the "fair rents" to the holdings as 'enlarged by the addition of said pasture.' Have you a written statement?—Yes, a short statement.

26,407. Read it, please. — Without going into any formal remarks, I beg to point out at once such land as I am directed to call the attention of the Commissioners to. The first is a portion of Dalchork farm, in south end of said farm and within three-quarters of a mile from the village of Lairg, called the Upper Lairg parks. These parks were for some years under cultivation by Mr Graham, the then sheep farmer of Dalchork. The reason why it was put to grazing purposes was the distance it was from the farm steading. It yielded excellent crops of every kind. There is abundance of hill grazing attached to it. This arable land, with its hill pasture, is very suitable for two or three small holdings. The area of the arable is 48 acres. The next is Dulaich sheep farm, a portion of the Achany estate, which is surrounded on all sides by the Duke of Sutherland's property.

26,408. On whose estate is Dulaich?—Lady Matheson of the Lews. The extent of old arable land is about 160 acres, with about 8 acres of old birch wood, which is very good land and very easily improved. The land was once occupied by 13 tenants, all in good circumstances, who were turned out of their holdings without any cause whatever, only it was the landlord's will. Their names were Widow H. Ross, Donald Munro, Widow R. Ross, Hugh Mackay, William Mackay, John Macdonald, Hugh Macdonald, James Mackay, John Mackay, James Mackay, Hugh Mackay, John Mackay, and John Ross. All these tenants had to leave their holdings and their birthplace, which was perhaps more dear to them than we can imagine, in 1822. Tighcraig on the same farm had two tenants, Donald Matheson and John Matheson; and Loch Tighcraig one tenant. The whole of this small farm is well adapted for small holdings, and is recommended to the Commissioners as such.

The next place is Allt-breac, another portion of Dalchork farm. It had formerly two tenants, but there is sufficient land for three, and abundance of hill pasture.

I now beg to call your attention to three arable farms in Shinness, which are now put to grazing purposes, and which are considered by good authority to be well adapted for ordinary small holdings. Achadh-a'-phris, which comprises 350 acres or thereby, is pretty good land on the whole. It is quite true that some of it is not good land, and should never have been improved; but on the whole it is very suitable for small holdings. Achanaran, with 300 acres, is still better adapted for small holdings. The whole of this farm has a good exposure, with hard soil well adapted for all kinds of crops. Lubvreck, with 400 acres, is not quite so good as the other two farms. There may be 100 acres of this farm not suitable for cultivation, but very good grazing ground for sheep and cattle. The climate of the district will compare favourably with the rest of the parish in every respect, and the ground yielded excellent crops. The corn raised there will weigh as much as in any other district in the parish.

(Signed) David Mackay.

I may add that both the old arable land and the new land in Shinness is considered to be well adapted, as I have said, for small holdings, especially the arable land in Dulaich and Upper Lairg here. In fact, it is much superior in every respect, so far as climate and soil are concerned, to a great deal of the land now occupied by tenants in the parish. I may say that about seventy years ago the rental of the two townships of Rheanbreack and Tomich was only about £14; at present I should think the rental is about £80, though I cannot state it with certainty. That shows the great improvement made by the tenants of the crofter class, because when they entered it was all waste land, and the men were imported from other places because it was worthless. The holdings were at that time let for 10s. or 15s. to the people who were got to occupy them; and since then these great improvements have been made from time to time, so that the land has reached such a condition that there is scarcely an acre uncultivated.

Lairg.

David Mackay.

26,409. Mr Gordon.—How is this land occupied just now at Allt-breac?—Under sheep.

26,410. What farm is it?—On the Dalchork farm, Allt-breac.

26,411. Is that one of the reclaimed farms?—No.

26,412. Do you know the rent of Dalchork?—No, I did not make any inquiry.

26,413. You mentioned also this place of Dulaich. How is that land occupied?—As a sheep farm.

26,414. Who are the nearest crofters to Dulaich?—The township of Kinvovin on the south, and Shallovulbeg on the west.

26,415. What size of a farm is Dulaich?—Two hirsels, perhaps about 1000 sheep.

26,416. Does the pasture come in to the east of the arable lands at Dulaich?—The Duke of Sutherland's property and the Dulaich property join on the summit of the hill; there is a new fence erected there to the south of Dulaich.

26,417. Dulaich is part of the Duke of Sutherland's property?—No, it is Lady Matheson's.

26,418. Do you know what rent Dulaich pays?—I cannot say.

26,419. Is that little place called Torbreac within the farm of Dulaich or in the farm of Allt-breac?—Partly in both. There is a little plot of ground in Torbreac belonging to Lady Matheson's estate and the rest to the Duke of Sutherland's estate.

26,420–21. Does the burn form the division between the estates?—No, I don't think there is a burn dividing the estates, but there is an old dyke.

26,422. Can you tell us anything about what you would suggest being done with that land; is it for new holdings or for an extension of grazings?—For arable holdings, and the grazing attached to it would be, of course, as it is.

26,423. You would propose to break up the farms of Allt-breac and of Dulaich both?—Well, of course I did not mean the whole of Dalchork farm but a portion of it. Allt-breac and the parks I mentioned at Upper Lairg are in the same farm, the farm of Dalchork.

26,424. But you propose to form new holdings up there?—Yes.

26,425. Now, can you give us any idea what size of holdings you propose?—No, I could not. That depends entirely upon the nature of the land.

26,426–27. But you have mentioned this land? Take either of these places that you like, Dulaich or Allt-breac?—Well, I would fix the average at 15 acres arable.

26,428. And what pasture?—I am not prepared to say about the pasture, but I would suggest that the pasture should be corresponding, and rather above.

26,429. But would you propose that the pasture should be common pasture, or that it should be held by the individual tenants?—I think it would be better adapted to be held as common pasture unless there was an extension of it further than what is attached to the arable land in the meantime.

26,430. You would propose to have it in common between the two or three or more places that you might form there?—Yes, Dulaich, Tighcraig, and Allt-breac, because they are in the very centre of the grazing.

26,431. Have you any club grazings up there at all just now?—No.

26,432. Have you any knowledge of the working of club grazings?—We have plenty knowledge, providing we had the land to work on.

26,433. Are you a member of a club grazing?—No.

26,434. What is your knowledge of a club grazing?—Just that the flock of sheep would be held and regulated by a committee of management, and so forth.

26,435. How many would you suppose there would be in this club grazing; would there be enough for it to occupy a shepherd's time?—Scarcely, the lands that I indicated to you just now unless, as I said before, it would be still extended northward where there is sufficient land.

26,436. Do you think there are people up there that would take the new holdings and stock the places?—Not there; but they are to be found in the parish and elsewhere. I have not the slightest doubt at all that, if the holdings were once formed, there would be plenty tenants to take them up.

26,437. With sufficient capital to take them and stock the land?—There is some difficulty there, because no doubt people might be got with sufficient capital; but then, perhaps, these are the people that are not most in need.

26,438. The people who are most in need have least money, possibly?—Exactly.

26,439. Mr Sutherland.—Are you the tenant now?—Yes, of my own holding.

26,440. And you know the circumstances of the fixing of your fair rent perfectly well, do you?—Yes.

26,441. Did you work the croft before you became tenant yourself?—Yes, I have worked the croft for the last thirty years, since my father died.

26,442. Were you born at Rheanbreck?—Yes, and my forefathers before me.

26,443. How long were they there?—My grandfather was there anyhow, and they lived to a great age my forefathers.

26,444. Well, then, with regard to the fixing of the fair rents, the figures that have been stated bear on the face of it that your rent was increased?—Yes.

26,445. But that apparent increase of rent was due to the enlargement of your holdings?—We suppose so.

26,446. The two events are concurrent, are they not?—Yes.

26,447. The fixing of your fair rent and the enlargement of your holding?—Yes.

26,448. Would you kindly describe to us, in order to make it clear, how they came to be at the same time?—Well, we got this extension of grazing from his Grace the Duke of Sutherland.

26,449. In what year?—In 1885, I think.

26,450. That is before the Act was passed?—Yes, the previous year; and, at the time we got this additional hill pasture, the understanding was between the tenants and the factor then that the rent of this piece of ground would be fixed either by arbitration or by the Crofters Commission. The thing remained so till the fence was put up. There was a fence erected between the Achinduich farm and the tenants in the new march, and we got notice from the Duke's factor, some time afterwards, that the rent of this piece of land that we have got would be £52, 10s. Now, we objected to this on two grounds, first, that we thought it too dear, and, second, that it was not according to bargain that it should be fixed either by arbitration or by the Crofters Commission.

26,451. But was the result of it all that you agreed to leave it over to be fixed by the Crofters Commission?—Yes, that was the whole purport of it.

26,452. And that is how the apparent increase of rent came to be?—Yes.

26,453. How did the rent that was fixed by the Crofters Commission compare with the rent the Duke of Sutherland wanted at first?—As I said before, the Duke of Sutherland wanted at first £52, 10s., and, so far as we can ascertain, they have only got £35, 10s.

26,454. What they asked £52 for?—Exactly; that is according to the increase of the rent that we now have between the old rent and the new rent, as far as we can ascertain; the difference is that the Duke asked £52, 10s. and received £35, 10s., or thereabout. Of course, that is according to our own calculation; we don't know particularly as to anything.

26,455. The thing got so mixed up that it is difficult for you to ascertain?—Yes. Lairg.

26,456. What is your own opinion now with regard to the reduction of rent the Crofters Commission have given you?—We thought it was far too high. David Mackay.

26,457. I am talking of the reduction?—We have got no reduction, it was an increase.

26,458. But along with the extension of the grazing?—Well, even along with the extension of the grazing we thought the rent should not be raised.

26,459. Have you formed any estimate as to the amount of reduction you have got all over?—No, we did not.

26,460. Is it 30 per cent.?—I could not exactly say.

26,461. But is your rent higher than it was before?—Certainly.

26,462. How much?—To the extent I have mentioned. [The Chairman.—£2, 10s. 3d. against £3, 8s.]

26,463. Can you give us it for all the township?—No.

26,464. Could you give it for yourself?—Oh, yes.

26,465. Has your rent been raised or lowered?—I consider my rent has been raised.

26,466. Taking into account even the extension of grazing?—Yes.

26,467. Then, are you actually paying more than you did before?—Oh, yes, actually we do.

26,468. You, yourself?—Yes.

26,469. More than when you got the 1780 acres of pasture added?—Yes.

26,470. Well, what was your old rent?—My old rent was £1, 10s.

26,471. And what is it now?—£2, 10s. [The Chairman.—There seems to be some misapprehension about that. The rent in the blue book is £2, 10s. 3d. not £1, 10s.] Witness.—Yes, £2, 10s., and it is now £3, 8s.

26,472. You got 1800 acres among how many people?—Forty-two or forty-three people.

26,473. That is about 40 acres each?—Yes, it would just run about that.

26,474. Then, the land added to your holdings was from the parish boundary, was it?—Not altogether from the parish boundary. We had not it to the parish boundary before altogether, and then we got it now down to Allt-na-Fearna, as Allt-na-Fearna runs from the river up to Loch Cracail.

26,475. I want to know the extent and value of this addition of grazing you got. You say it extends to 1800 acres?—Yes.

26,476. That there are forty participants in it?—Over forty.

26,477. It gives you about 40 acres per holding?—Yes.

26,478. How much of that land will it take to graze a sheep? Do you know the rule as to that?—I suppose that 6 acres elsewhere of good ordinary land——

26,479. But do you know that 10 is the rule that has been laid down?—Of course, 10 of this would not do.

26,480. So, putting your extension of grazing in sheep, it amounts to about four sheep per holding?—Yes, that appears to be so.

26,481. And for the whole of that there was asked £52, but it was not got?—Exactly.

26,482. Have you benefited in any way by this extension of holdings?—We have benefited, there is no doubt at all about that.

26,483. So that the extension of a holding to the extent of four sheep per family is a benefit?—Yes.

26,484. Did you find any difficulty in stocking it?—Not in the slightest; but we find a great difficulty in keeping under our stock, because we must sell them.

26,485. What is the nature of the extension, is it the average pasture that a sheep farm has got on it, or is it above that, or below it?—I should think it is below it to a certain extent.

26,486. What makes it below it? Has it got much green in it?—Not very much. Some seasons of the year it is somewhat good; but taking the year all round it is not good: too much exposed and too cold, and a very bad subject as a whole.

Lairg.

David Mackay.

26,487. Now you stated a remarkable fact, that, I think, some eighty years ago the rental of the townships —I take it the townships you meant were Rheanbreck, Torrobol, and Tomich?—Yes.

26,488. The rent was £14?—Oh, no, I made reference to Tomich and Rheanbreck. That was previous to my day, but I heard old people passing the remark, but probably there might not be above four tenants there, or five.

26,489. But that would not affect the rental in the slightest degree?—Not in the slightest degree.

26,490. £14 raised to about £80?—Yes, I think so.

26,491. Can you give us any idea of the amount of the expenditure that raised the value to that, that was made by the landlord?—Well, of course there was money advanced by the landlord.

26,492. To what extent?—I could not tell you, but it was charged, of course, at the rate of 5 per cent.

26, 493. As soon as it was made was it charged?—Exactly, as soon as we got the money.

26,494. As soon as you got the money the interest was charged upon it?—Yes. Say that we get the money at Whitsunday, the Whitsunday and Martinmas following we had to pay the half interest.

26,495. Immediately you got it you had to pay interest?—Exactly.

26,496. What rate was it at?—5 per cent. then; it is not 5 per cent. now, it was reduced.

26,497. When?—About six years ago; it was reduced to 4 per cent., but the first money that was given out by the Duke of Sutherland was considerably above the 5 per cent. During my time it was 5 per cent., and then it was reduced about six years ago to 4.

26,498. And there was no risk about it, it was paid as regularly as the rent?—Oh, there was no risk. Of course if there was a risk in the rent, there was risk, but it was paid along with the rent. Of course there is another thing, there are a few of the houses in the two townships, but very few that were built, the Duke advanced wood and lime for a few, but there are not above three or four.

26,499. So you think it was a very good investment for the landlord?—I think so.

26,500. A very safe one?—A very safe one.

26,501. The climate did not seem to affect it in the slightest?—Not in the slightest.

26,502. Nor early frost?—No.

26,503. Nor late harvest?—No.

26,504. Nor floods?—Nothing whatever.

26,505. It came regularly. You pointed out certain lands. I am simply going to ask you if you were satisfied in your own mind that those lands you call our attention to would be very suitable for the purposes for which we are here?—I am fully satisfied as to that, and besides, we called a public meeting in the month of March, in order to make arrangements to meet this Court when they would visit this parish. We discussed the matter there and then between ourselves in the public school-house over there. The meeting was quite a representative meeting of the whole place, and we discussed the question as far as we possibly could, and they were fully of the opinion that the grounds that I have mentioned and alluded to were quite suitable for small holdings.

26,506. Were you appointed a delegate at that meeting to lay these views before us?—The meeting appointed a committee of nine or ten gentlemen, with power to choose representatives from amongst themselves or besides themselves, and it appears I am one of them.

26,507. I think you expressed the view that the people here, who know the circumstances very well, would have no fear of taking the reclaimed land at Shinness and working it to a profit?—Yes, because it is not my own views I express here, but the views of those who sent me.

26,508. Now, I wish to ask you one or two questions with regard to these holdings. Are there any small holders at all on the Shinness reclamation?—Oh, yes, there are a few, not many.

Lairg.

David Mackay.

26,509. How many are there?—There will be eight.

26,510. What is the size of these holdings?—They vary in size, some of them have as low as 4 acres, I think, and some as high as perhaps 25 and 30 acres.

26,511. Are these crofters now?—Yes.

26,512. Statutory crofters?—Yes. They were crofters before the passing of the Crofters Act.

26,513. They could not have been crofters before the passing of the Crofters Act you know. It is the Crofters Act that made the crofters?—They were not under lease.

26,514. They were tenants at will?—I think so.

26,515. They were made crofters by the passing of the Crofters Act?—Probably.

26,516. I mean to ask if they are under the Crofters Act?—Oh, I think so.

26,517. Did you hear if any of them wished to give up their holdings?—No, I never heard; but I have often a complaint of the smallness of their holdings, especially the small ones.

26,518. And is their land now the average land representing reclaimed land?—Their land is on the outskirts, on the reclaimed land, and I can conscientiously say it is the worst land.

26,519. And you never heard of them being anxious to be relieved of their land?—No, I never heard anything of the kind. Of course they did have a grievance in regard to the rent; they thought they were too highly rented.

26,520. But do they cultivate their land still?—Yes.

26,521. Have they let any of it out of cultivation?—Not an inch.

26,522. Have you heard that the land on the large farms at Shinness has been allowed to go back into a state of nature?—I have heard it, and I have seen it.

26,523. But it is not these small holders that have done it?—No, not a foot.

26,524. Who, then, have done so?—The three large farms that I have indicated are under lease.

26,525. What have the farmers done with regard to the cultivated land, are they cultivating it still?—No, it is under grazing now, the whole of these three farms.

26,526. Is the net result of it this, that the large farmer has allowed the land to go out of cultivation, and the small farmer has kept it in cultivation?—That is a fact.

26,527. Within your own knowledge?—Within my own knowledge.

26,528. Which no person can gainsay?—Certainly.

26,529. Mr Forsyth.—You say there is no cultivation at all on the large farms on the whole of the reclamations at Shinness?—Oh, no, not on the whole. There is the arable farm of Coloboll still under cultivation, and the Western Shinness farm is partly under cultivation still. On the other three farms I have mentioned there is none whatever except there may be a very small plot on the Achadh-a'-Phris farm, which is under crop this year, but very little.

26,530. But by going back to waste, do you mean to say they are going back to heather or laid under grass?—Partly under heather and partly rushes and partly grass.

26,531. Is there any under grass at Achadh-a-Phris?—Yes, I think they are cutting grass there.

26,532. But under sown grass?—Oh, yes, there is some, because it is quite recently it was laid out.

26,533. And there is a good deal of crop this year there I think, isn't there?—Oh, yes.

26,534. And the whole farm of Coloboll is under cultivation?—Yes.

26,535. So that it only applies to a certain portion of the reclamation that they are under grass?—Exactly.

26,536. Then, you would confine your remarks more to Blairbuidh?—Yes, I do.

26,537. Blairbuidh is under grass, the whole of it?—Yes.

26,538. That is the highest one on the Strath Tirry side?—Yes.

26,539. And the rest is partly in cultivation and partly under grass?—Yes.

26,540. Mr Gordon.—Going back to this place of Dulaich, I now see the march on the map. That place bounds, as far as I can see, with four crofting holdings—Culbuidh, Culmailly, Balcharn, and Balindialish?—Yes.

26,541. Do you know how many crofters there are in these four townships?—One in Culbuidh, two in Culmailly, two in Balcharn, and six in Balindialish.

26,542. Now, suppose we were to find land there suitable, what is your opinion as to the benefit that would be derived by placing tenants on the ground, or giving it to these eleven people as an extension of their grazing?—My opinion is that it would be the best plan to put tenants on the arable land there.

26,543. How many tenants would you get on the arable land there?—As I have indicated already, I would fix the average at 15 acres.

26,544. But I wish to point out to you that in one case you expressed some difficulty about money?—Yes.

26,545. In the case of extension of grazings you would benefit eleven people without a single addition to their capital?—Yes.

26,546. They would be at once benefited by getting extension of grazings for their present stock, whereas in the other case you would have to erect buildings and possibly fences, and you would have to find money for the stocking?—Oh, yes; but I think in the case of those tenants their hill grazing could be extended, although the new tenants would be placed in the arable land of Dulaich.

26,547. But you would place the hill grazing farther away from the eleven people?—Of course, the hill grazing of the eleven people would extend to the new tenants, as it were.

26,548. Well, we need not discuss the details; but is it your opinion or not that the advantage would be greater and more immediate by extending the grazings than by placing new holdings upon that kind of land?—Just by placing new holdings.

26,549. You would prefer new holdings to extending the grazings?—Yes.

26,550. The Chairman.—You made a very pointed statement, and I have very little to ask. You mentioned a fence, however, that was erected at the time when these 1800 acres were assigned, and the valuation made by the Crofters Commission. At whose expense was that fence erected?—The proprietor's. We have promised to maintain the half of it.

26,551. You promised to bear your share of the upkeep?—Exactly.

26,552. But you had no share of the original cost?—No.

26,553. How do these 1800 acres compare in quality with the rest of the grazing on the farm from which they are taken?—They are inferior to the grazing of the farms from which they were taken; there is no doubt at all of that—inferior to a great degree.

26,554. Do they lie into your holdings?—Oh, yes; quite in proximity to the holdings.

26,555. Mr Macaulay, Solicitor, Golspie.—These farms that you mentioned here—Achadh-a'-Phris, Achnaran, and Lubvreck—these are the lands that were reclaimed by the late Duke?—Yes.

26,556. Now, you referred to the crops that are grown there. Have you any idea what was the weight last year of the oats upon the farm of Achadh-a'-Phris?—I have, and I have ascertained from a miller that the average weight of Achadh-a'-Phris and the whole of Shinness farm was about 40 lbs. per bushel.

26,557. Now, regarding these crofts that you referred to, do you know who erected these buildings, and put up fences, and put the place in order?—The proprietor.

26,558. None of that was done by the tenants?—No, so far as I understand.

26 559. Then, with regard to your own holding, you consider that the Crofters Commission has actually raised your rent?—Yes.

26,560. Then the view of the Commissioners apparently was that you held these lands too cheap?—No, no.

26,561. That they were undervalued at any rate. Your holding is dearer relatively than it was before the Crofters Commission was here?—Yes, that is the fact.

26,562. Then the only conclusion must be that they considered your holding too cheap, relatively again? [The Chairman.—You had better take these figures. The old rent, exclusive of the 1800 acres, amounts to £185, 13s. 6d.; the fair rent, including the 1800 acres, is the sum of £222, 1s.—the difference being £36, 7s. 6d.]—Yes, my lord, but I am referring specially to this man's own holding.

26,563. [To witness].—So that the only conclusion must be that the Commissioners thought you had your holding too cheaply?—Unless they have taken into consideration the extent of new grazing we have got.

26,564. Oh, yes; but even with that you consider that the rent has been raised?—Yes.

26,565. So that before the Commissioners came you held your holding cheaper than you do now?—Yes.

26,566. Now, as to the reclamations which were done upon some of these lands you referred to. Have you any idea of what advances were made by the late Duke of Sutherland to any of the crofters?—So far as I am concerned myself, about £25, or thereabout.

26,567. Do you know a party named James Mackay, Torrobol?—Yes.

26,568. Have you any idea what was advanced to him?—No, I could not say.

26,569. Probably between £80 and £100?—I could not say.

26,570. Now, do you know what his present rent is; what was the fair rent fixed?—Something about £3.

26,571. That is the sum?—I am not going to say.

26,572. That is the fact. Now do you consider that is a fair return for the advance of £80 plus the land?—No, I don't consider it a good return. The subject was not what it ought to be, because it was not at all a fit subject to be improved.

26,573. But even in your own case you got about £25?—Yes.

26,574. Now do you consider that £3 is a fair return for that sum plus the land in the state in which you got it? Do you think it cheap, or do you think it a good return for the proprietor?—I think it is a good return for the proprietor, because that is all his outlay.

26,575. But you had the land besides the £25?—Yes.

26,576. So that the fact is your first rent was £2, 10s., and you got some £25, so that you got some ten years' rent to reclaim these lands?—Yes.

26,577. What return had he for that £25, which you consider a good investment?—Certainly; because by this time the whole of that money is paid up again.

26,578. But you paid that rent before?—Yes, I did.

26,579. So that your original rent must only have been about £1, 6s., and you are paying interest on £25?—The original rent of the holding has been 15s., but then there was no land reclaimed except an acre of land.

26,580. So that taking 15s. from £2, 10s., the balance is 35s., so that you paid 35s. for your advance?—Yes.

26,581. Now you said that some of these farms were going back to a state of nature?—Yes.

26,582. Do you remember these lands before the reclamation?—Perfectly well.

26,583. What sort of lands were they?—Some very good, some very bad.

26,584. Were they good subjects for reclamation?—Some were so.

26,585. And some very bad?—And some very bad.

26,586. When you use the term 'state of nature,' do you mean to say that they are going back to the same state they were in before the reclamations?—Well, not actually so. I find some of the land reclaimed then is even worse pasture than it was before.

26,587. But speaking generally?—Well, speaking generally, they are not, as yet, as bad.

Lairg. David Mackay.

26,588. So that when you say that these lands are practically now in a state of nature, it is not the fact? [The Chairman.—He makes the statement subject to the observation he has now made upon it in answer to your allegation].—[Witness].—Yes, my lord. Of course, in the course of time, there is no doubt that by letting the farm still out of order, they will be getting worse and worse every year.

26,589. Do you mean to say that they will get back to the state they were in before this reclamation?—Yes, to a certain extent.

26,590. What was the state before: were they not bogs?—Some were so.

26,591. They will not go back to that extent?—Yes, that part that was bog before will go back to the same bad state.

26,592. But it is not the fact they are now in the same state as before the reclamation?—No, it is not the fact.

26,593. There are certain lands that have been sown down; these are still practically in rotation, are not they?—Yes.

26,594. They have not been in grass for years?—No.

26,595. They are practically now in rotation?—Yes.

26,596. May I ask how many sheep you have on your own holding: we heard a little ago something in regard to the number of sheep this new land would hold?—The number allowed for my holding is nine sheep.

26,597. And that is the number you keep?—That is the number I keep, only I have a share of my neighbours to the extent of eight sheep, that is all my stock.

26,598. And what other stock have you besides?—I have two cows and one horse.

26,599. And your rent is £3, 8s. You did not refer to any lands at the Dalchork farm-house, did you?—No.

26,600. Mr Sutherland. — I wish to make this clear. You said that your estimate of what you paid for the additional grazing that was given to you was £35. The best estimate you could make of what you were charged for that separately was £35?—Yes, so far as we could ascertain.

26,601. And what the landlord wanted was £52, 10s.?—Exactly.

26,602. Well, then, with regard to the advance that was made to yourself, how much did you say it was?—About £25.

26,603. And for how many years did you pay interest on that at five per cent.?—Up till now?

26,604. No, I think you said it was reduced?—For sixteen years I think it would be.

26,605. For sixteen years you paid five per cent. upon the £25?—But the money was not taken out all at the same time: there might be £5 at one time, and £10 at another.

26,606. And for all the time you had got the landlord's money you paid full interest?—Oh, yes.

26,607. Then, as to the value the croft had before this money was advanced, who gave it that value?—Myself, and my father, and my grandfather.

26,608. You are of that opinion?—Yes.

26,609. The Duke of Sutherland gave it no value whatever?—No value whatever.

Alexander Shaw.

ALEXANDER SHAW, Farmer, Balindialish (67)—examined.

26,610. The Chairman.—What rent do you pay?—£23, 12s.

26,611. Was your rent dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—No, I am under lease.

26,612. For a term of years?—Nineteen years.

26,613. And when does it expire? — There are twelve years to run. I have been seven years there.

26,614. Have you any written statement?—No, none.

26,615. Are you appearing as a delegate appointed at a meeting, or as an individual witness?—Just an individual witness for the quality of the soil. Of course, my holding has got nothing to do with the statements given. Lairg. Alexander Shaw.

26,616. What is it you wish to tell us with regard to the quality of soil?—I am perfectly well acquainted with Dulaich and Craggie, and it is good quality of soil, I think preferable to some that is reclaimed in our straths.

26,617. Reclaimed by crofters or by the landlord?—Well, of course, I believe there is part of both.

26,618. But you say it is better than some that has been reclaimed?—Yes.

26,619. Both crofters' reclamation and landlords' reclamation?—Yes.

26,620. And suitable for occupation?—Yes.

26,621. Could settlements be made on the lands to which you refer, in which the crofter could earn a sufficient livelihood without labouring elsewhere?—Yes, I think they could, because it is superior soil to some that is under crofters at present.

26,622. And could he do so, even in these times?—If they are pulling through in the hard barren ground in these times, I should think they would do better in the fat land.

26,623. You heard the evidence given by the previous witness, Mackay?—Partly.

26,624. And does it express your views so far as it goes?—Yes, I think myself that his statements are quite correct with regard to the quality of the soil.

26,625. And with regard to the land which he thinks available for the purposes of our inquiry?—Yes.

26,626. You don't ask our attention, I take it, to any other lands than those he specified?—No, of course I am not acquainted with any of the rest of it except what lies in beside ourselves.

26,627. And what about the land that lies in beside yourself, what land is it?—That is Dulaich and Craggie.

26,628. Are you in favour of extension of grazings, or of new settlements, or both?—New settlements.

26,629. Rather than extension of grazings?—I think so, I think it would be more profitable.

26,630. Then do you say that the crofters here have in the main sufficient hill grazings?—Well, on the whole, I believe they have, according to the size of their holdings, they are not so ill off for grazing. The grazing is not so needful as new holdings are. Of course, there are some that very much require extension of grazing.

26,631. There are some exceptions?—Yes, there are some.

26,632. Would you place some of the tenants that have very small holdings in this neigbbourhood upon the new holdings you are referring to?—I would, I would take one out here and there and put them on the new holdings, and give their patches to others.

26,633. Consolidating the vacated holdings with a neighbouring holding?—Yes.

26,634. And do you think that would operate a substantial relief?—I think it would: I think it would be more satisfactory to the tenant and to the proprietor.

26,635. Mr Sutherland.—You are, of course, speaking from your knowledge as a practical farmer, and from your experience of your own holding?—Certainly.

26,636. You said, I think, in reply to his lordship's question, that some of that land which you refer to, and which Mr Mackay pointed out, was better land than even you had yourself?—Yes, it is.

26,637. Did you find the farm you have now when you went there in a very good state?—I did not.

26,638. And had you to make improvements on it yourself?—Well, I make improvements every year on it, because there is a deal of it that is very wet, and a deal of it full of stones, and there are stones always coming up.

26,639. And you have been improving that since you went?—Certainly, a good deal.

26,640. So that you know something about improving land by personal experience?—I have had personal experience of improving land ever since I could do it.

26,641. And you are not talking merely as a theorist with regard to that?—It is by practice I talk, because I have been amongst the land.

26,642. In fact, you know experimentally what you are talking about?—Yes, of course; I have no statement, but am only speaking by experience.

26,643. And you think that new holdings could be formed on this land that you have referred to in the glens without any fear of failure?—I have not the slightest doubt in saying that, because the land is a better quality than a good deal of what is under cultivation. Of course, when the straths were all bare first, those straths that are barren now were the first that were taken up, so there is no mistake, but it is a clear evidence that the best was reclaimed first.

26,644. You think the natural order would be to take the best land first?—Yes, that is what I would expect anyone going to occupy a strath would do,—go to the best of it first.

26,645. He would leave the worst land to the last?—Yes, that is what I would do myself, and I think any other would do the same.

26,646. So that you think it is the natural order of things that the land we see green now was the best land, because it was so selected by the people when they settled there?—Yes, I think so.

26,647. Mr Gordon.—Where is your farm?—About 1¼ miles from the Inn.

26,648. Is it in Achinduich way?—No, it is away the Golspie way.

26,649. At the top of the railway there?—Yes.

26,650. What is the name of the township?—Balindialish.

26,651. You mentioned some land as being specially well suited. Mr Mackay mentioned a good many places. Do you refer to Dulaich?—Yes.

26,652. Is that good land?—Yes, and Allt-breac, that is good land.

26,653. Allt-breac is a green spot, something in the middle of the farm of Dalchork?—Yes, but there is very good soil about it.

26,654. Is there any access to it, a road or anything?—No; there is a road, but the road I think is about half a mile distant from it.

26,655. The public road is a mile and a bit?—Oh, yes, the public road, but there is a road that goes in through the strath that shepherds use, a sort of track, not a proper road.

26,656. Do you know the farm of Dulaich?—Yes.

26,657. Is it under cultivation at all, or all under pasture?—All pasture, with the exception of a small bit round the shepherd's place.

26,658. Is the tenant resident on it?—No.

26,659. It is practically a grazing farm then?—Oh, yes, this good number of years.

26,660. Who is the tenant of it?—Peter Robertson.

26,661. Is it flat land, or is it naturally dry land?—It is naturally dry; it is in the flat down on the level, but it rises up and down; it is not level.

26,662. Undulating?—Yes.

26,663. It is not very high, 400 feet I think?—It lies low from the hills, but it rises up and down; it is not a dead level and is not ill to keep dry.

26,664. There is a considerable extent of land there seemingly; is there a road to it?—There is a road goes through the end of it, a shepherd's road, but there is no road through it itself. It lies to the east of the road, the most of it.

26,665. Yes, I see, south east. We will see it ourselves.

26,666. The Chairman.—Have you your lease with you?—No.

26,667. Were there advances made by the landlord under the lease?—No, I don't think there were. Of course, we got an extension of grazing.

26,668. Where was that?—Balindialish.

26,669. What extension was it you got?—I think about 700 acres, or thereabout.* Laing.

27,670. Does that go to you alone, or do you share it with others?—There are eight in it. Alexander Shaw.

26,671. You are one of the eight?—Yes.

26,672. Possibly you have a larger share in it than some of the others?—I don't know.

26,673. Have you been able to meet your rent under the lease, or has it had to be reduced?—The rent has not been reduced since I came there.

26,674. The rent has always been exacted and you have paid it, is that so?—No, there is a difference. The hill is a common, and, of course, I always reckon that the hill is too much stocked and that I never get up the quantity of stock that was put on me for the rent, and there is a difference always betwixt the factor and me for that.

26,675. But has any reduction been made on the rent of your croft, apart from this common grazing?—No.

26,676. What I mean by reduction is, has there been any abatement given?—Yes, we got an abatement twice, a reduction twice.

26,677. What was the extent of that reduction?—I think it would be about 25 per cent.

26,678. And in what years was that reduction given?—I don't exactly remember.

26,679. Was it recently?—Yes, within three or four years.

26,680. Was that owing to bad times?—Yes.

26,681. Mr Macaulay, Solicitor, Golspie, Agent for the Duke of Sutherland.—In making the statement you have made, I suppose you speak as a practical farmer?—Yes.

26,682. And when you state that you believe the people in holdings on these lands you referred to should succeed, you are judging, no doubt, from your own success, are you?—Yes.

26,683. Now, what is the acreage of your arable land?—25 acres.

26,684. And you have outrun, haven't you?—Yes.

26,685. How many acres outrun?—I believe close on 1400 acres.

26,686. That is of hill grazing?—Yes.

26,687. And you have your share of that?—Yes.

26,688. How many crofters are there in it?—Eight.

26,689. And how much rent do the other seven pay? What is the addition of the other seven rents can you tell us?—I could not tell you.

26,690. Will it be as much as £25, the other seven put together?—Yes, and three times that.

26,691. Perhaps £50, or will it be £75?—There are some I think £16, and some of them £15 and £8, 10s. and £8, 12s., and I expect some of them down to about £4, 12s., or so. I think they range like that.

26,692. You pay £23, 12s. of rent. When you went into this place were your buildings put in order?—No.

26,693. Was there nothing done to them?—Yes, the carpenter came up and——

26,694. They were repaired?—They were not repaired.

26,695. They were repaired?—The carpenter came up and made a slight repair, merely for the time, and said he was coming back, but he never came back.

26,696. When were they rebuilt can you say?—The last of it was rebuilt by myself after I went there, that was knocked down, but I could not say what was the actual time of it either.

26,697. Well, in speaking of the success you expect, you are judging by your own success. Now, how far have you fulfilled your obligations to the landlord; have you paid your rent?—I did not.

26,698. And how much are you in arrear?—I stated that I did not pay my rent for the hill grazings.

26,699. You did not pay it for the hill grazings. How much are you in arrear then, because I want to bring out your own success? [The Chairman.—He says he has a dispute about the stock].—Witness.—I have got no success, I tell you I am in dispute.

* Shaw has since written that the extent should be stated at 300, the 700 acres including the old and new pasture.

Lairg. — Alexander Shaw.

26,700. So you have not been successful?—Certainly I have not been successful myself.

26,701. Well, then, how do you expect these other people to be successful?—I expect the other people to be put on a different footing.

26,702. What footing do you expect them to be put upon?—That they will get the proprietor to equalise their grazings or holdings to give every man a proper share—to let every man know what he has.

26,703. And would you expect him to put up buildings on these new holdings?—Well, I would expect him.

26,704. And to fence them?—I don't know.

26,705. In fact, to put them in shape for any man to go in, just as was done in your case?—Well, that would depend of course upon the agreement between them.

26,706. Well, do you think they would be able to do that themselves?—Some might be able, and some would certainly require assistance.

26,707. What proportion do you think would be able to stock these places, have you any idea of that? Would you be able yourself to go into a place of that kind and stock it?—No, not in the position I am in at present.

26,708. So that you have not been a success, it appears?—I should not have done as far as I have done without getting money from other places.

26,709. So that, though you are speaking as a practical man, you are speaking as a man who has not been successful?—I have not been successful, because I have not had the chance to be successful.

26,710. You entered into a lease?—Yes.

26,711. And you have not done what you undertook to do when you went in?—No.

26,712. Did you get everything you expected when you went into the land? [The Chairman.—He imputes his want of success to this overstocking of the common ground. That is the position he takes up, and you must accept the way he puts it.]

26,713. Was it not after you went to your place that this addition was made?—Yes.

26,714. So that, if any overstocking has taken place as regards that, it is since you entered on your lease?—Of course, it is since I entered on my lease.

26,715. So that it must be you or your neighbours who must be overstocking, it is not the proprietor?—I don't think the proprietor puts stock there, it must be the tenants themselves. I don't see any of the proprietor's stock there.

26,716. So that your tenants are to blame for this, not the proprietor?—Well, of course, each tenant puts on exactly what he likes; it is not my place to dictate to the Duke of Sutherland.

26,717. So that your neighbours are the ones to blame for your want of success, is that the case?—Certainly, it is those that have the stock.

26,718. Did it not suggest itself to you that you should get the stocks regulated under a recent Act of Parliament—under the Grazings Act? Did you not consult with your neighbours as to getting your neighbours' stock regulated under the recent Act of Parliament?—Yes.

26,719. And did they join with you?—No.

26,720. They refused?—Yes.

26,721. Mr Sutherland.—I want to make this point clear. You say you have 25 acres of arable land?—Yes.

26,722. And that you have an eighth share of 1400 acres of hill pasture?—I think that is about right.

26,723. Well, for the 25 acres of arable land and the keep of 19 sheep, because that is what it amounts to, you pay a rent of £23, 12s., do you?—Yes, that is the rent.

26,724. And that is the rent you have not got reduced?—No; I got a reduction once or twice. I could not exactly say how much.

26,725. But you did not get a permanent reduction?—No, no.

26,726. So that the rule that has been intimated to us of reductions of 26 to 30 per cent. does not apply to you?—Well, of course, I never got under the Crofters Act.

Lairg. — Alexander Shaw.

26,727. You have had no permanent reduction given?—No, and I never got under the Crofters Act. Of course, the only difference with us was the regulating of the stock.

26,728. Well, I wanted to ask you a question about that also. Then, you are practically paying about £1 an acre, or nearly so, for your land?—Yes.

26,729. And is that one of the reasons why you are not more successful, do you think? Would you be more successful as a farmer if you paid less rent?—No, if I could get the stock on the grazings—if the thing was regularly made up and I could get my stock on—I could pay it, hard as the times are.

26,730. You could pay even that?—Yes.

26,731. Even with the 19 sheep?—Not 19.

26,732. But you have only land for 19 sheep?—But I have a share in the hill.

26,733. Is not the whole of your hill pasture 1400 acres among eight of you?—Yes.

26,734. That gives you 195 acres each. Divide that by 10, and that only gives you 19 or 20 sheep, according to the rule that is given for the large farms. It could not vary more than 5 to 10 per cent.?—Well, we have a good advantage. We take the sheep in, and the only success I have in sheep is by taking in lambs on the arable land and rearing them through the winter, and then selling them off in spring.

26,735. But do you not consider that nearly £1 an acre is much too high a rent for that land you have got?—Well, it is that; but then, of course, the hill is included in that.

26,736. But the hill rent is included in all these calculations?—But still, if the thing was put right, I believe I could live on it after all.

26,737. You heard the difficulties that have been urged against the power of the people to stock land, have not you?—Well, yes; of course, I have.

26,738. But does this overstocking of land look as if there was any difficulty?—There is a great want for pasture with a good few, because there is a good many fit to double stock it if they could get it.

26,739. What we are complaining here of is overstocking, isn't it?—That is the whole cry, that it is overstocked.

26,740. But you hear, on the other side, the cry that the tenants cannot stock?—Yes; but I say this, I would take out some of the tenants and put them out into the new buildings and enlarge their holdings, and that would allow their stock to get on better.

26,741. But I am only talking about objections that are being urged against having new holdings, and that is, that the tenants cannot supply more stock; but what you are complaining of, and I have no doubt rightly complaining of, is that there is too much stock on the land?—Yes, of course, there is too much stock on the land.

26,742. So that the stock difficulty is, that they are complaining of the absence of it, on the one hand, and the presence of it on the other hand. Then, are you responsible for not putting the estate rules into effect?—I don't know.

26,743. You understand that the estate management has given you a lease, has it not?—Yes.

26,744. That, according to the terms of that lease, or under the estate management, it is the duty of the management to make regulations, is it not?—Well, I appealed for that, and, of course, they told me that they could not do it.

26,745. It was put to you that you are not successful because you had not your proper share of stock. Is it your duty to enforce the estate regulations; or is it for the estate management to do it?—Well, of course, I appealed to the estate managers.

26,746. And did they give you the justice you ought to get?—No, because it is rather difficult.

26,747. Was it not their duty, in your opinion, to do that?—It is rather difficult to do that.

26,748. I grant you that, but it is not your duty, but theirs?—Well, certainly, I have suffered through it.

26,749. But it is the duty of the estate management to put the rules into effect and not yours, don't you think so?—Well, of course, it is the estate manager's place to put things into the proper state, if it is possible.

26,750. The Chairman.—What stock have you got at present, how many cows?—Three cows.

26,751. And how many followers?—A heifer and four calves.

26,752. Have you horses?—Yes, I have got two.

26,753. How many sheep have you?—I have thirty-five sheep.

26,754. Are these ewes?—No, lambs; they are all on the arable land.

26,755. You mean thirty-five hoggs?—Yes, this year's lambs.

26,756. Have you any other sheep?—Yes, I have got two, but I can't get them, I don't know where they are.

26,757. Suppose this common grazing put under proper management as to the carry of the ground, would you consider your present rent a fair rent even in these times?—Oh, I would manage it.

26,758–59. You would not complain of the rent in that case?—No.

26,760. Now under your original lease what was the rent; before you got the share of the common hill?—£20.

26,761. And the addition made when you got the common grazing is £3, 12s.?—Yes, £3, 12s.

26,762. What additional stock have you been able to keep since you got the common grazing?—Oh, I have no stock on the grazing, because we differed about the grazing.

26,763. But do you not put stock on the grazing?—No, I have put no stock this summer on the grazing.

26,764. Had you any last summer?—I had a few sheep a while, and I took them off; we were disputing about it, and I wanted to clear off.

26,765. It was on account of the dispute about this regulation of the grazing that you took the stock you had upon it away?—Yes, because it was overstocked.

26,766. And you endeavoured to get your friends who share the grazing to put the Grazings Act in force, but you did not succeed?—Yes.

26,767. Mr Gordon.—How many sheep are there on the common?—I could not exactly say.

26,768. How many sheep do you think it would keep?—It would keep about 250, or between 250 and 300 sheep alone; but it is very different when there are horses and cattle and sheep. Reckoning it all in sheep it would keep about that.

26,769. Would it be more advantage to you and the other crofters if there was nothing on it but sheep?—No, I don't think it would.

26,770. You want to graze your stirks and horses on it?—I think horses and stirks would do.

26,771 Don't you think the horses do a good deal of harm to sheep?—No, but you cannot live without them.

26,772. You might live without some of them?—But you cannot work the land properly without them.

26,773. Supposing you had a sufficient amount of ground for a hirsel, would you approve of keeping the sheep on a club-farm and avoid the dispute?—Yes.

26,774. The only alternative to give every man fair-play is to put it under a club, and let the sheep belong to nobody but the corporation?—It would be honest.

26,775. I believe it would?—It would, and it would save many disputes, because there are many people who would always overstock, and that would keep down the stock.

26,776. The stock would be fixed by a committee of management, and they would regulate the number of stock, and the dipping and clipping, and so on, but you would require enough land to employ a shepherd before you could have a club farm worked properly?—Yes.

26,777. Mr Macaulay.—The acreage here is 1400 acres, and this gentlemen says he estimates it would carry 300 sheep. The result would be that on this ground less than 5 acres would do for a sheep. I only want to compare that with the statement that was made by one of the Commissioners. Lairg.

26,778. The Chairman.—Of course, it compares itself. Alexander Shaw.

26,779. Mr Macaulay.—Yes, if that is clearly brought out.

26,780. Mr Gordon.—The quality, of course, differs very much. Witness.—I remarked that when we took our stock in to the arable land in the winter, it did not keep all that stock,

26,781. Mr Macaulay.—Have you got a park for horses fenced?—Yes.

26,782. Who fenced it?—That is a hard question to me to solve. The proprietor fenced part of it, and I did my share of it.

DONALD MACLEAN (46), Factor for the Duke of Sutherland at Dunrobin (recalled)*—examined. Donald Maclean.

26,783. The Chairman.—You are prepared to answer any questions which may be put to you on the subject of the paper you read before us at Helmsdale?—Yes, I have attended here to-day with that object.

26,784. You mention in your statement that there are thirty-three sheep farms, and in the document entitled "Classification of Sheep Farms Area" you mention as being under 1500 acres six holdings?—Yes.

26,785. What is the average rent of these?—I can hardly say offhand.

26,786. What is the rent of the highest rented?—Under 1500 acres?

26,787. Yes.—£50 I think.

26,788. And going as low as what?—Going as low as £36. I am just quoting from memory; it is something like that.

26,789. You say that 'since 1882 the sheep-farming 'rental, owing to depreciated value of wool and stock 'and increased cost of wintering, has depreciated 37 per 'cent. and the arable farm rental has fallen 26 per cent.' May we take it that this year the depreciation is even more?—There has been no reduction since the statement that I made.

26,790. There has been no average reduction, but has there been a reduction in any individual case?—Not since I made that statement.

26,791. You submit a plan showing all the sheep farms, deer-forests, and cleared ground. Has there been any additional afforestment of land within the last twenty years?—Oh, certainly. In this district the land afforested within the last twenty years is confined to Corry Kinloch and the several cleared pieces of Dalnessie, Shinness, Borrobol, and Balnacoil; that is so far as I remember just now.

26,792–93. These have been afforested within the last twenty years?—Yes.

26,794. Can you say what was the addition to Corry Kinloch by afforesting?—The whole of the Corry Kinloch farm was afforested, and the area is given in my statement.

26,795. The area I see is given as 10,800 acres. The whole of these places, Corry Kinloch and the cleared pieces of Dalnessie, Shinness, Borrobol, and Balnacoil, have been turned into forests within the period I have mentioned?—Yes.

26,796. Perhaps you could explain how that came to be?—It arose from the fact that they were unlettable as sheep grazings. There was only one, I may say, that could have been let as a sheep farm—Corry Kinloch. That might, at a very considerable reduction of rent, have been let as a sheep farm, and it is the only case, so far as I know. Of course, some of those cleared places were cleared before I came to the county, and I am not particularly conversant with the exact facts as to their afforestment.

26,797. Is this your meaning—that these lands were afforested because they could not be put to any other purpose?—Yes.

* See above, p. 599.

Lairg.

Donald Maclean.

26,798. You mentioned Badanloch and Gearnsary, and you say 'those portions of land (Nos. 2 and 4) are 'not fully stocked, the wedder ground being kept 'mostly cleared of sheep.' Is that forest land at present?—It is not under sheep except at certain times of the year. It is not regularly under sheep.

26,799. What is its main purpose—for what is it kept mainly?—For deer, I suppose; that is a matter entirely with the tenant. They are let as sheep farms, and it is the tenant who deals with the matter. I don't know exactly what parts of those farms are afforested or what parts are under sheep.

26,800. They are let as sheep farms?—Yes.

26,801. You say that none of that cleared ground is adapted for small holdings?—Not in my opinion.

26802. May I ask why?—They are at too high an elevation for one thing; the climate is against it.

26803. What is the elevation?—You will see by the map.

26804. Yes, we will find that from the map. Are there any other causes besides the elevation?—Because of the fact that there is very little arable land on it for one thing.

26,805. Is there not a considerable tract of ground that could easily be put under rotation without undue expenditure?—No doubt it could, but it would not do to put it under cultivation.

26,806. Are not some considerable portions of it more suitable for reclamation a good deal than parts of the land reclaimed by the late Duke?—Of those particular cleared places, I think not.

26,807. Take the immediate neighbourhood of Gearnsary; is not there a considerable portion of land there more suitable for reclamation and rotation of crop than many of the lands reclaimed by the late Duke?—I don't think so.

26,808. Don't part of these lands at least stand at a lower level?—Gearnsary, I think not; Gearnsary must be higher.

26,809. Is not Gearnsary at a considerably lower level than much of the reclaimed land at Kinbrace, near the shepherd's house, and along at Truderscraig?—It may be at a lower level; but I should say it is about the same level.

26,810. But is it not much lower in level than much of the reclaimed land?—I don't think so.

26,811. Well, we can find that out for ourselves, I dare say. You say 'there can be no better illustra-'tion of the absurdity of cultivation to any extent in 'high lying and exposed situations than that afforded 'by the late Duke of Sutherland's reclamations.' Were these reclamations mainly made upon high lying and exposed situations?—The greater part of them are high; Lairg is the lowest, I would say.

26,812. What you say therefore, speaking generally, is that much of these reclamations were carried out on subjects which, from their high altitude and their exposure, were not well suited for the object in view?—And also the nature of the ground; the climate and the exposure.

26,813. And the altitude?—I don't make so much of the altitude.

26,814. I am only asking because you mention it here; you say 'high lying.' Then at the end you mention a very important matter; you say 'In conclusion, I 'have the authority of the Duke of Sutherland to say 'that he is favourable to the formation of more small 'farms in this district, in localities well adapted for 'them, and where there is every chance of making a 'living; and as certain lands fall out of lease they will 'be broken up and offered to crofting tenants.' May I ask where these lands are?—I do not think it is desirable to state just now where these lands are, or what particular farms it is intended to break up, as it might be injurious to the future tenants if I did.

26,815. But we may take it that there are considerable tracts coming within this description?—You may.

26,816. You say these lands will be broken up as they fall out of lease 'and offered to crofting tenants 'who are known to be industrious and persevering and 'who are in a position to occupy larger holdings.' You mean persons with a certain amount of capital?—Yes, and who have done well on their present holdings.

Lairg.

Donald Maclean.

26,817. Is it your view that such holdings as are pointed at here could not be undertaken with fair prospects of success without considerable capital in possession of the incoming tenant?—It is.

26,818. You also say:—'Landlords as individuals 'and owners who wish to make the most of their land 'will as necessity arises offer stronger inducements than 'now exist to tenants to remain on the land and for 'the investment of capital in it; and no doubt an 'increase of small farms or holdings may be one 'inducement.' What other inducements do you refer to when you say 'stronger inducements'?—Inducements in the way of fair rents to meet the times, and inducements also in the way of buildings to meet the agricultural requirements of the times and the age.

26,819. You mean buildings by the landlord?—Yes.

26,820. And fencing too, I suppose?—And fencing too.

26,821. You are, therefore, of opinion that a landlord would act wisely in forming small holdings and encouraging an incoming tenant by means of these inducements?—Certainly, in situations which are adapted for such holdings. I am a very strong believer in small holdings myself.

26,822. And it is part of the policy of the estate management as indicated in this paper, whenever opportunity arises, to encourage and assist the formation of such holdings?—Yes, consistently, of course, with other interests.

26,823. And upon ground suitable for the purpose?—Certainly.

26,824. Therefore, not upon such ground as formed the subject of the late Duke's reclamations?—No. That has already been offered for small holdings and been refused.

26,825. You say 'small holdings in situations 'where there is a ready outlet for the smaller industries 'or products, dairy produce, poultry, &c., may pay.' Are these the main sources of advantage in the creation of small holdings? Do you look mainly to dairy produce and poultry for the success of these holdings?—Dairy produce and poultry, with cattle and sheep; the whole taken together.

26,826. These holdings to which you refer are holdings, as I take it, on which the occupant would be able to live without outside labour?—Yes.

26,827. Mr Sutherland.—You stated, I think, in regard to your paper that for the latter part of it you have the authority of the Duke of Sutherland. That does not, I presume, imply that the former part has not his authority?—Certainly not, the whole statement has his authority.

26,828. It is merely a phrase that has no bearing on the former part of the paper; is that so?—It is part and parcel of the statement.

26,829. You mention specially in the latter portion "In conclusion, I have the authority of the Duke of 'Sutherland to say so." That does not imply in any way that you have not his authority for the former part of the statement?—Certainly not.

26,830. Then you gave the acreages of the sheep farms and the arable farms,—that is, the large arable farms, with the numbers of the holdings: but you have not given us the number of the small holdings?—No, because that has already appeared in evidence in the Crofters Commission Reports. I state what the alternation has been pretty well on the crofts, but I have not repeated anything which appeared in the Crofters Commission Reports, or in the evidence given to Lord Napier's Commission in 1883.

26,831. I miss their presence, because it would enable us to make some comparison between the rentals charged for the different classes of holdings?—Well, of course, the comparison can be got by referring to the evidence of 1883.

26,832. Then, you stated that since 1882 the rentals of the large farms have depreciated to a certain extent?—Yes.

26,833. I presume you mean that you have found it necessary to give reductions to that extent?—Yes, I refer to the permanent reductions, not temporary abatements.

26,834. To permanent ones,—in fact terms of new leases given to new tenants?—No, most of these reductions are on current leases, not new leases. The new leases are, of course, taken into account also in cases where they came into existence.

26,835. But did you give any reductions during that time to the crofters?—There were temporary reductions given.

26,836. But not permanent ones?—Yes, a great many.

26,837. Permanent by agreement with them?—A good number, I have with me a statement of fifty cases in which I myself reduced the rent before the Crofters Commission came into existence.

26,838. But fifty out of such a large number of crofters is not so high a percentage as in the case of the large farmers?—It was the first year I came here.

26,839. What year was that?—1885. I was instructed to adjust any cases of over-rent which I might find to exist where complaints were made, and I think in every case where complaint was made I did adjust the rent.

26,840. You are aware, of course, that all these reductions to the crofters began in 1885,—they never heard of any before that?—No, I don't think they did.

26,841. That year was co-incident with your coming here?—I certainly know that their first reduction was given in 1885, because I had something to do with it.

26,842. So I understand; but is that not evidence then of the smaller reductions of rent necessary to crofters,—that the small tillage has been more successful than the large? Would it not be reasonable to take that view, because you found it necessary to give fewer reductions, therefore the crofter is more successful than the large farmer?—The reason is that we believed that on the whole the crofters were very much lower rented than the large farmers.

26,843. But it need not be left as a matter of belief?—It is the fact.

26,844. Can you tell us what is the average rental of the large sheep grazier over all?—About 8d. per acre.

26,845. And what of the crofters do you know?—But I should ask first, why do you compare the crofter with the sheep farmer?

26,846. Because the one is the smallest holder and the other is the largest.—But why don't you compare them with the arable farmers?

26,847. Give us an instance of the large arable farm in Sutherland?—There are fifty of them.

26,848. Give us one, if you please, so that we can have a standard of comparison.—Allow me to refer to the list. [Mr Gordon.—Skelbo?]—Skelbo, if you like.

26,849. Is Skelbo an average representative of the arable farms in Sutherland?—I don't think that it is quite a fair representative, but take any other farm you like.

26,850. Well, take the biggest farm we find on the east coast,—is that not Crackaig?—Yes, I daresay.

26,851. How much grazing land is held in connection with it?—The grazing land is held separately from the arable.

26,852. But take them together. Why do you wish to separate them, when you do not separate the crofter's grazing from his arable?—You are making a comparison, I understand, between the sheep farmer and the crofter.

26,853. Certainly?—But we don't look upon crofters as sheep farmers, we regard them more as arable farmers than as sheep farmers, and, therefore, you must make the comparison between the arable farm and the croft, not between the sheep farm and the croft. Take the arable farm and its outrun, and compare that with the croft and its outrun.

26,854. Is it not the proper way to take one man's total acreage and another man's total acreage and make the comparison between them?—Certainly not. A sheep farm is entirely different from an arable farm.

26,855. A large farm has got arable land and pasture, and a crofter has got arable land and pasture; why not compare them?—Very well; compare them.

26,856. How does the comparison as to the rental come out?—I cannot tell you per acre, but I should say off-hand as a comparison between the arable farmer with his outrun and the crofter with his outrun, that the former is paying double as much as the latter.

26,857. How much does he pay per acre?—From 25s. downwards to 15s.; some of them are lower even.

26,858. Take the case of Mr Dudgeon of Crackaig, who holds a larger proportion of arable land than any other sheep farmer here; how much does he pay for all the land he holds in Sutherland?—That I cannot tell you, because I have not worked it out.

26,859. Do you mean to assert that he pays 15s. per acre?—Not over all, taking the arable farm with the sheep farm; but taking the arable farm alone.

26,860. But why do you break them up? I wish to compare acreage of the sheep farmer with the acreage of the crofter.—Take the case of Langwell in the parish of Rogart. Take the arable land which they have along with the hill and work it out per acre, and you will find that they pay to a fraction exactly the same as the sheep farm of Blarich. That is one instance.

26,861. Could you not mention one large farmer (it would be a very small matter if you could) where putting both his sheep farm and his arable together and dividing it we could find out how much he pays per acre?—Yes, I daresay I could.

26,862. I don't wish to detain you just now to perform that operation, but that is the reason why I regretted the absence of these figures. I could find it no doubt by going through the various processes you have indicated, but I have not had the time. I have no doubt, however, that you are aware of the statement that was submitted by Sir Arnold Kemball to Lord Napier's Commission, in which he calculated the rate paid by the crofters in the management you preside over as 8s. 9d. per acre?—Very likely, but I am afraid that is far short of what some of the arable farmers pay, taking in their hill along with their arable.

26,863. He has them altogether here?—These are the crofters altogether.

26,864. What I wish to know is how much a large farmer on the Sutherland estates pays for both his arable and his pasture together?—I think I could give you many instances where they are paying double that.

26,865. But you did not put before us in your statement the data by which we could easily arrive at it?—I can arrive at it and give you the result probably before you leave the room.

26,866. You stated, with regard to sheep farms, that the proportion of the arable to the hill land is exceedingly small?—Yes, very much lower probably than that of the crofters.

26,867. But who made the crofters land arable?—I have no doubt a great portion of it was made by themselves.

26,868. Do you know of a sheep farmer making land arable to any extent?—Yes, I think I do.

26,869. Where?—Take the farm of Culmaillie.

26,870. Did the farmer do it there, or did you do it for him?—It was done by the farmer, a large portion of it.

26,871. At his own expense?—At his own expense.

26,872. Do you know any other case where a farmer did it at his own expense?—I don't remember any other just at present.

26,873. What I wanted to know particularly was, what had you in your mind when you spoke of the proportion of arable being larger in the case of the crofter than in the case of the farmer. Did you mean what was cultivated of old, or what might be cultivated now?—Both.

25,874. But if it was not intended to take away tha arable land from the sheep farm, would it remove any of your objections to making small holdings?—If what?

26,875. If it was not proposed to pick these arable pieces out of the farms, would that overcome any of your objections?—That would depend upon how you intended to deal with the whole thing.

26,876. Your statement is:—'It will be seen from 'the statement as to the area of the sheep farms that 'the proportion of arable to hill land is exceedingly 'small. Diminish this area and you at once seriously 'injure the remainder of the grazings, and render 'immense tracts of land unlettable for either sheep or 'deer.' What I want to know from you is, provided these pieces were not picked out, but the land taken in entities as it stands, in farms or deer forests, would that overcome your objection?—It would to a certain extent, provided the whole was taken.

26,877. Was it present to your mind that there was a possibility of picking and selecting out of these farms when you made that statement?—Certainly.

26,878. And if it were not proposed to do that, but to take the land in farms or forest, that would be part of your objection taken away?—Certainly.

26,879. Then I take it, that you admit, or rather it is implied in this sentence of yours, that it is necessary to find arable land to maintain deer in deer forests?—Certainly, it is necessary to have green ground and better pasture than can be got on the higher hills.

26,880. And the same for sheep farms?—The same for sheep farms.

26,881. And is the value of a sheep farm considerably added to by the fact that it has a high proportion of that old arable in it?—Certainly.

26,882. And is it a fair inference that a great deal of the present value of the sheep farms depends upon the amount of old arable in them?—The value does depend to a certain extent upon the amount of green ground, low ground pasture.

26,883. A great deal, does it not?—Yes.

26,884. Was it the large farmers who gave that value to them, do you know?—Probably not.

26,885. I don't want to put it in any invidious sense, but is it not a fair inference that the value was given to it by its former possessors?—Certainly.

26,886. And, in your opinion, ought not some consideration be given to that in any redistribution of the land,—the fact that that injury was done to them before, and their labour confiscated,—does it not constitute a claim now upon the consideration of any one who has anything to do with the distribution of the land?—That is a great question, which I am not prepared to enter upon.

26,887. I do not press you with regard to it. Now, I think you stated in reply to a question by the Chairman that those lands that were reclaimed by the Duke of Sutherland were offered publicly for small holdings?—I have offered them to many myself.

26,888. What means were taken beyond verbal communications by yourself to let the people know that you were desirous of letting that land in small holdings?—No other means since I came into the county, but over and over again have tenants applied to me for land, and I have referred them to this land and offered it to them.

26,889. Do you mean the Shinness farms for instance,—the Shinness farms as they are at present, I mean of the same extent; or did you offer to sub-divide them?—They were sub-divided at that time, and we offered to sub-divide them further.

26,890. Was that intention on your part known to the people of Lairg, do you know?—I think the Lairg people have applied to me for holdings, and they have been offered to them. I cannot bring any particular instances.

26,891. If it was not known before, may this meeting take it, and may the public take it, that you are willing to let this to small holders?—They are let now: they were in hand then.

26,892. But whenever they come in hand?—I have no doubt the present Duke would be quite prepared, should they come in hand again, to consider the question of breaking these farms up.

26,893. You see you have made statements there from which it would be a natural inference that there is no demand in Sutherlandshire for small holdings; would you admit that?—I have not stated that. Lairg. — Donald Maclean.

26,894. But you have made statements in this paper from which it is a fair inference that there is no demand for small holdings?—Not in these outlying districts.

26,895. What I want to know is, are you justified in giving us to understand that? Are you justified in saying that with regard to the parish of Lairg and the Shinness reclamations?—Certainly.

26,896. You are of opinion that the people of Lairg knew that you were willing to let the Shinness reclamations in small holdings, and they did not take advantage of it?—I don't say that, but I say there has been no expression of a demand for holdings on these reclaimed lands.

26,897. It is the fact, is it not, as stated here by Mr Mackay, that the small holdings that already exist on Shinness were occupied as soon as they were ready?—They were, by labourers.

26,898. And have been continuously occupied since?—Yes, and enlarged.

26,899. Is that by practically the same people?—The same people.

26,900. Whereas the larger ones have not been occupied continuously, and have not been kept in cultivation?—Some of them were never occupied by tenants at all.

26,901. They were, I understand, carried on by yourself under management?—Yes.

26,902. You made a remarkable statement,—I have no doubt at all as to its veracity, but it was a remarkable statement—that you carried them on for a number of years at a total loss of £22,000?—Yes.

26,903. How many farms did that refer to?—That referred to three in particular, you may take it, Shinness, Lubvreck, Achdaphris. Those farms, I may say, were advertised over and over again; they have been advertised at least three times since I came to this district, without success.

26,904. And are you carrying them on still?—No, they are let.

26,905. Did you get a person to take them?—Yes.

26,906. Who is the present tenant?—Mr Campbell and Mr Sanderson.

26,907. Is that Mr Campbell the previous manager?—Yes.

26,908. And has Mr Campbell taken a farm which he himself carried on at a loss of £22,000 for a number of years?—Yes, he and Mr Sanderson together, have taken the three farms, but under very different conditions from those under which they were carried on by the estate.

26,909. In making these calculations against these farms, were you allowing for rent?—Yes, but not for interest on capital.

26,910. Merely a rent according to the other rents?—Yes, reduced according to the average reductions that were given over the whole district.

26,911. And you maintain your general statement that the reclamations of the late Duke of Sutherland were not a success, I presume, from the rent point of view?—I do.

26,912. You have heard, no doubt, a few questions that were directed by myself among others, to finding out if we could the causes that in your opinion led to that. Were they, so far as you heard them, just, or do you think any of them overstated in any way?—That led to what?

26,913. That led to this expenditure being so large in these reclamations; e.g., was there not a great expenditure of money on reclamations that were not carried out as far as the machinery and other apparatus could carry them?—There was a very large expenditure, of course on machinery, which is included in that statement.

26,914. And could not that machinery have done a great deal more reclamation if it was found that you had land to work upon?—Probably it would.

26,915. And would that not increase unduly the amount that would go against the reclamations per acre?—Certainly.

26,916. So that the huge expenditure per acre was due to causes like that, as much as to anything else?—I have no doubt that if the area reclaimed had been double, the expenditure per acre might have appeared less.

26,917. And the machinery was perfectly capable of doing that, and perhaps three times the quantity?—No doubt, but the wear and tear was exceedingly heavy.

26,918. But it would not be so much as the initial expenditure of making the machinery?—It was estimated at 5 per cent. on the cost, but I am afraid it was more like 30 per cent. for maintenance.

26,919. But even with 30 per cent., would not the amount per acre have been lessened if more work had been done?—Certainly.

26,920. So that the Duke's reclamations form no criterion at all, do they, of the amount per acre at which land could be reclaimed?—A very large area was reclaimed for the machinery that was at work.

26,921. But not so much as the machinery could do?—Probably not.

26,922. Was the machinery not changed very much during the progress of these reclamations?—Some of the initial implements I think were changed, but after the first year or two, I don't think they were much changed.

26,923. There were a great many improvements made on the machinery during the course of the reclamations. Were you here during the time they were being carried on?—I was not here as factor, but I visited the improvements long before I came to Sutherland.

26,924. But you heard that the first machinery was purely tentative, and that all the improvements that were made as they went along were incorporated in the machinery, necessitating in many cases a total change?—But I am afraid the great cost did not apply to that machinery.

26,925. But then you heard the comparisons made as to the cost per acre, and the cost of the crofters' reclamations?—I heard a statement made at Helmsdale of £9 per acre, which I consider ridiculous. I could give you many instances where crofters have reclaimed at £40 per acre.

26,926. Would you be surprised if I could give you far more instances where it has been done for £9?—It all depends on the character of the land.

26,927. And on who carries them on?—And who carries them on. But I have no doubt the cost of a good part of the lands which the Duke reclaimed, would not at particular places exceed £8 or £9, even with the machinery.

26,928. That is quite possible; I don't deny that. But you heard the statements that were made, and you, yourself, admit that it depends very much on who carries on the reclamation?—Certainly, it does to a certain extent.

26,929. And if there were £180,000 given to the crofters of Sutherlandshire to reclaim land, don't you think they could reclaim a hundred times as much as could be reclaimed by machinery?—Not within the same time.

25,930. Possibly not, I don't say that, but it could be done; you see no reason to doubt that?—Anything can be done by hand labour, of course.

26,931. By industry?—By industry.

26,932. I do not desire to go into these matters at any great length, but you gave certain instances of offers of additional grazings that were made to crofters, particularly about Helmsdale, and were not availed of?—Yes.

26,933. I presume you wish us to infer from that, that because these were not carried out in the way you intended, there was a probability that any arrangement that might hereafter be made, might not be carried out?—Do you refer to Elderable?

26,934. Yes, particularly.—The offer of grazing was made there—

26,935. What were the objections that were urged against this? What was one of the reasons attributed for not taking the land?—It was not extensive enough: that was the only reason given. Lairg.

26,936. Did you ever hear it stated also that the land stopped short at the place where it became good?—That was never alleged. Donald Maclean.

29,937. Did you hear that they objected to the proposed rules for the management of it that you laid down?—It was never stated to me. I will put in the correspondence in connection with that.

26,938. I have it here, thank you: if you wish to hand it in formally I have no objection. And furthermore there was an application for it to the Crofters Commission?—That has still to be dealt with, of course. This is the correspondence connected with Elderable, and the present application to the Commission. (Produces document). [The Chairman.—If you wish to put it in we shall take it]. I may say that these applications are limited to 19 tenants out of nearly 100; and we are not aware whether it is only the 19 tenants or the 100 tenants who want this additional grazing.

26,939. Do they apply on behalf of the individual signatories, or do they apply for the whole of them?—The individual signatories, of course, so far as we can judge from the application.

26,940. You said also something about the County Council,—that there were no applications, specific applications: I think you objected to these not being specific enough under the Small Holdings and the Allotments Acts?—Yes.

26,941. You also heard what was said by the witnesses regarding that?—Yes.

26,942. But whatever informalities there may have been, Mr Maclean, from your knowledge of the county, you would not say that if land were offered on favourable conditions to the people, it would not be taken advantage of?—If they were offered in certain situations they might be taken advantage of.

26,943. May I ask what you would consider a favourable situation in which to give them land, supposing it was available?—The lower-lying portions near the sea coast.

26,944. And in the neighbourhood of the villages?—And in the neighbourhood of the villages certainly: but that would be more of the nature of allotments.

26,945. But there were applications made to you, were there not, under the Allotments Act?—Only one.

26,946. 'The Allotments (Scotland) Act, 1892: 'Petition by ten fishermen, Lower Brora, for land ad- 'joining Lower Brora and Brora village.'—I understood you were referring to the County Council application.

26,947. Yes, that is what I am referring to?—There was no application from them through the County Council that I am aware of.

26,948. 'Petition by the inhabitants of the village 'of Embo, parish of Dornoch,' is that the one?—That is the one I referred to. I may be wrong, but I don't think there was one from Brora.

26,949. You remember the Embo one?—Certainly.

26,950. Is it likely that the others would reach you through the same channel as the Embo one?—The Embo one so far as I know is the only specific one for allotments, because I referred to it particularly, and if there had been another I think it would have been referred to in my correspondence with the Council; but the correspondence is here and will speak for itself. I write 'The only land available just now for allotments 'is a large field on the Embo farm, near the fishing 'village of Embo, and extending to 48½ acres.'

26,951. That excludes all consideration of the others except Embo: is that not so?—There may have been another; I refer to the correspondence.

26,952. Have you the letters of 31st January and 3rd February?—I have the letter of 3rd February, but that of 31st January has gone amissing. On 3rd February, in regard to allotments, the letter from the County Clerk states as follows:—'As mentioned in my 'letter already referred to the petitioners for allotments 'under the above Act state that there is available land 'in the immediate neighbourhood of the villages of 'Brora and Embo suitable for allotments.' Now, there was no land in the immediate vicinity of Brora suitable for allotments at the time so far as I know.

26,953. It was a difference of opinion between you as to what was available or suitable land?—The land that was let under lease we considered was not available for allotments at the time.

26,954. So that all these applications then, in your opinion, do not show a desire to have land; is that it?—There is a desire for allotments.

26,955. You do not deny that there is a desire for small holdings, do you?—I have not received specific applications for small holdings through the County Council.

26,956. Is not there a letter from yourself, dated 23rd March 1893, in which you offered land in Embo?—For allotments.

26,957. Did that application for Embo come to you along with other applications under the Small Holdings Act?—It is under the Allotments Act from the County Council.

26,958. Yes, it is: I beg your pardon. Can you tax your memory whether those other ones came along with that?—It came to me through the County Council, and the letter I have here is dated 3rd February. There was also one of 31st January, copy of which I have not got just now, but I will read my reply, dated 2nd February, in which I said 'I am in receipt of your 'letter of the 31st ult., which is very indefinite. It 'gives no information whatever as to whether the 'council propose to acquire by purchase or lease land 'for small holdings and allotments in the several 'parishes named; nor is any indication given as to the 'extent and situation of the land which the Council 'after inquiry through their committee under Sect. 5 'of the Act considers it desirable to acquire for small 'holdings, or of the extent and situation of land 'required for allotments. Full particulars must be 'furnished with a formal application before the matter 'can be dealt with.'

26,959. Had not you a reply to that?—This is the reply I received:—'3rd February. I am favoured 'with your letter of yesterday's date. Before the 'committee appointed by the council under Sect. 5 'of the Small Holdings Act, 1892, is in a position to 'report to the council, as to whether part 1 of the Act 'should be put into operation, it is necessary to know 'whether his Grace the Duke of Sutherland is prepared 'to give lands in all or any of the parishes mentioned 'in my letter of 31st ult., for the purpose of provid-'ing small holdings, and in the event of his Grace 'agreeing to do so, please state alternatively the terms 'on which the land may be obtained, either by purchase 'or on lease, and also the extent of same. On receipt 'of the above information, the committee will be able 'to report to the council in terms of the Act, and also 'to recommend the best mode of acquiring the land. 'From the number of applications already lodged, the 'committee is quite satisfied that there is a demand for 'small holdings in the county,' and then the letter proceeds, as I have already said, to refer to the Allotments Act. My reply to that was dated 4th February, and was as follows: 'I have your letter of yesterday, 'which is vague and indefinite, and with the information 'you give it is quite impossible for me to represent in-'telligibly to the Duke what the council wants. How-'ever, the matter will be laid before him.'

26,960. Did it end there?—No, the next letter was on the 23rd of March to Mr Argo, 'Referring to 'your letter of 31st January and 3rd February last, 'which have been submitted to the Duke of Sutherland, 'I have now to say with regard to (1) small holdings, 'that the farms in the parishes named are let on 'lease, and the land is not, therefore, available for 'breaking up into small holdings: but as leases fall 'out his Grace will consider the question of divid-'ing farms. (2) Allotments. The only land available 'just now for allotments is a large field on the Embo 'farm, near the fishing village of Embo, and extending 'to 48½ acres. It has just been arranged that the 'executor to the late William Gordon shall be relieved 'of the tenancy of Embo farm at Whitsunday next, 'and the field named can be let to the council for 'village allotments on the following terms, viz:—

Lairg. — Donald Maclean.

1. 'Lease for nineteen years from Whitsunday 1893.

2. 'Rent £48, payable half yearly at Whitsunday and 'Martinmas, the first half year's rent being payable at 'Martinmas next.

3. 'The council to take over from the outgoing tenant 'at valuation the waygoing crop of corn on about 24 or '25 acres of the land, and also pay for the young grass 'on the remainder of the land. I am not sure of the 'exact areas under separate crops in this field, but this 'can be ascertained from the tenant.

4. 'The land to be properly cultivated, and at all 'times kept in good heart, and thoroughly free of 'weeds, and clean in every respect, and the system of 'cultivation to be such as not to exhaust the land in 'any way.

5. 'Fences to be maintained in good order and 'condition.

6. 'No buildings of any kind to be erected on the 'land. I shall be glad to hear, with as little delay as 'possible, whether the council agree to take the land 'on these conditions.'

26,961. Had you any reply to that?—The reply was that the council could not agree to take the land on these conditions, and asking whether the applicants for the holdings had been dealt with by the proprietor. As a matter of fact, no applications were made to the proprietor by these applicants for allotments.

26,962. So the obstacle, according to the County Council, is the conditions upon which the land was to be given?—No; the obstacle which the County Council raised was that the proprietor must first himself deal with the applicants. As a matter of fact, no applicants came forward to the Duke. The applications were made to the County Council, but not to the Duke.

26,963. The committee instructed the clerk to state in reply to the above letter that they regretted there was no land available for allotments, except the park at Embo of 48 acres, for which you wanted a rent of £48?—And for which the farm tenant had been paying £1, 0s. 6d.

26,964. And apart from that they were to fulfil all these other onerous conditions?—Usual conditions, not onerous at all: usual and ordinary conditions.

26,965. And that seeing that was the case, and that they could not see their way, they recommended the landlord to deal with these people?—Yes, and I have no doubt we shall be able to deal with them on perhaps a little more favourable terms.

26,966. But that was practically the outcome of the whole of their applications for small holdings?—It is.

26,967. Do you think that is very encouraging for the County Council to take any action in future?—I think I said in the last letter which I read just now, that as leases fall out his Grace will consider the question of dividing farms.

26,968. And are we to consider that statement in the light of the transactions between the County Council and yourself?—It will be then, when the land falls out of lease, for the County Council to renew their applications.

26,969. The statement implies that under such contingencies you will consider the question?—Certainly.

26,970. It will be as open as before?—Certainly; a little more open.

26,971. But you see no reasonable hope of changing the conditions which you laid down to the County Council in this case?—For allotments?

26,972. Yes, with regard to allotments?—I don't know what condition you refer to particularly.

26,973. Will you impose the like conditions at any future time when the matter again comes up?—I have no doubt we shall ask a fair rent.

26,974. Of £1 an acre?—And we shall condition that the land be kept in good order.

26,975. Was it proposed by the County Council at all to buy?—No, I asked them that particular question, whether they proposed to buy or to lease.

26,976. Might the same statement you made already, with regard to leasing, be taken to apply to purchase, as well if they saw their way to do it?—I have no doubt, in certain situations.

26,977. But the Duke of Sutherland himself would have to select these situations?—Certainly.

26,978. I don't hold you to deny generally, Mr Maclean, but that there is land on the Sutherland estate suitable for the making of small holdings such as are included in our remit?—There is.

26,979. And you think that under certain conditions and limitations which you have endeavoured to put before us, it would be safe to do so?—Certainly.

26,980. And you only differ from the witnesses who have been before us hitherto as to the extent perhaps?—The extent and the situation.

26,981. The extent to which they could be made to advantage?—That implies a good deal.

26,982. Yes, no doubt: but the general difference between you is that, is it not? It is not one of principle, but of degree?—One of degree mainly: but a degree which affects situation and climate, and capital and several other things.

26,983. Doubtless; but it is a great advance to get a man in your position to admit the principle?—I think most people in my position will admit the desirability of a proper gradation of holdings.

26,984. No doubt, and it is no reflection at all upon you that you are actuated in this matter by a desire to conserve the landlord's interests?—And I think I am also actuated by a desire to benefit the tenants.

26,985. I have no doubt that you feel you are doing a good turn to both landlord and tenant, but naturally you are more in the position of serving the best interests of the proprietor?—Of course, I have that position, but I wish also to benefit the tenants.

26,986. So far as that does not conflict with the interests of the landlord?—Yes.

26,987. But you state generally that you are of opinion that such a condition of things as we contemplate in our inquiry could to a certain extent be carried out in this neighbourhood?—To a certain extent.

26,988. In fact, the management of the Sutherland estate has already shown it?—Yes.

26,989. Mr Forsyth.—I would like to get some further information with reference to this field which Mr Sutherland has just been mentioning. Did the Small Holdings Committee of the County Council propose that the estate should deal with the tenants in the matter?—They did.

26,990. Then, it was simply to be a bargain between the estate and the tenants with the County Council intervening?—No, the County Council seem to have washed their hands of the affair.

26,991. That is the point I want to get at.—The County Council said apparently,—You have not dealt with these tenants who are applying and these people who are applying for allotments: we cannot do anything with them till you are done with them.—But, as a matter of fact, we had no applications from the tenants themselves.

26,992. Had you not rather supposed that the intention of the Small Holdings and Allotments Acts was that the County Council Small Holdings Committee was to make application for specific pieces of land to the proprietor, and then having obtained them by agreement with the proprietor to make the arrangement with the tenants?—Certainly, that is what I understood by the Act; that is what I understood the Council should have done.

26,993. Then, in this case the Small Holdings Committee of the County Council made no application regarding themselves as possible tenants, but were merely intervening between the estate and some tenants who might be selected?—Yes.

26,994. Do you know if that has been the case elsewhere in this county? Have there been any other applications made by the Small Holdings Committee of the County Council for land?—Not that I am aware of, except an application to the Duke from the west coast: none for allotments.

26,995. Was that application made in the same form, do you happen to know, although it is not, I think, in your province?—Exactly, in the same form: there is no specific land named.

26,996. Does it not appear to you that that is likely to bring to an end and terminate any negotations for land that might otherwise be successfully carried out?—Yes the tendency is to bring that about.

26,997. And you cannot suggest any reason for that?—No.

26,998. Mr Gordon.—This matter of small holdings is hardly within our province to deal with; however, we are very anxious to do some good if we can. Now, I would like your idea in regard to a larger subject, i.e., the sub-division of some of the bigger farms. Into what size of holdings would you suggest that they should be divided if they were to be divided at all?—If you have a subject that is worth dividing, I should certainly not divide it into areas of less than 30 to 40 acres of arable, with corresponding extent of hill ground.

26,999. Possibly, a hirsel of sheep?—Well, even less than a hirsel, unless you have the grazing in common.

27,000. Have you many tenants paying rents of from £30 to £70?—We have a good number: there are over twenty at any rate.

27,001. Do you find that that class of rents is as regularly paid as the larger rents?—In good situations they are as well paid.

27,002. And in some cases holdings of that size if they could be found would, you think, be as sure rent-payers as holdings of a larger size?—I think so; that is supposing the tenants entered on the holdings without borrowed capital. If there is borrowed capital that alters the circumstances altogether.

27,003. No doubt it does. There are doubtless certain situations in this country where such holdings could be entered on more cheaply than others, but in most cases they would require new buildings; that is the greatest difficulty?—This is a very great obstacle.

27,004. Another thing is this: in making suggestions as to these sub-divisions (which do not strictly come within our province I may tell you) it would be a great matter if the division could be done in such a way as to necessitate the least possible amount of fencing,—employing natural boundaries, watersheds, or burns as the case might be, because in sub-divisions of that kind fencing often becomes as serious a subject to cope with as buildings?—Yes.

27,005. But it is your idea that the larger farms might be sub-divided without loss to the proprietor?—Some of them might.

27,006. Mr Macaulay, Solicitor, Law Agent for the Sutherland estates.—With regard to this Elderable farm, what was the proprietor's reason for not giving this further extension that was asked? The reason alleged for refusing the extension is that the ground was not sufficient, and I want to get at the reason for not complying with the request of these crofters for further extension?—One of the main reasons was that a very short time before that we had had the experience of grazing on Suisgill where 6000 acres of land had been let to small tenants and had proved a failure; they had to ask the proprietor to relieve them of it.

27,007. Had they the Suisgill place on favourable terms as regards rent?—They had it at exactly half of the rent paid by the neighbouring sheep farmers.

27,008. What was the result of that?—The result was that the whole thing was a failure, and in less than five years they asked the proprietor to relieve them of it, which he did, and remitted the last half year's rent.

27,009. Did they appear satisfied with their bargain to begin with?—They did.

27,010. And did they appear pleased with having got it?—They were pleased to begin with, but very anxious in the end to get rid of it.

27,011. You have copy of the correspondence that took place?—I have copy of the minutes of proceedings of the association after it was established: extracted minutes.

27,012. You might read these. [Mr Gordon.—It would not prove anything. It does not follow that other cases would fail because that failed. The Chairman.—We have still a great deal of ground to go over: would it not suffice if you put in the document?]—I will put it in.

27,013. As to the matter of education and people not being so much inclined to take land, what is your experience as regards the tenantry for the last eight years?—My experience is that all the young men are moving from the county. I have had almost daily experience of that.

27,014. And who are taking up their holdings now principally?—Unfortunately, nearly half of our crofting tenants are now females: out of a little over 900 tenants we have over 400 female tenants. [Mr Sutherland.—You are able to tell me the number of crofting tenants now?—I quote from memory: it is something like 900. You were asking a number to enable you to make a calculation, which is a different thing altogether. I do not pretend to state the number with any accuracy.]

27,015. Then, as regards these holdings which you offered in Rogart, the farm of Grumby for instance, what was the result of offering that place to the crofters in the parish?—I had one application from a crofter and three applications from arable farmers: another man applied for a small portion, but only one crofter applied for the whole.

27,016. And was it well known that this place was in the market?—The ground officer got explicit instructions to make it well known in the parish of Rogart that this place was to let to any enterprising crofter who was prepared to relinquish his holding in order to take a larger one. [The Chairman.—What was the rent of it to be?—The rent was not fixed, but I daresay it would have been somewhere between £30 and £40.]

27,017. And what stock does it carry?—It will carry up to 300 sheep.

27,018. Another place was mentioned as being in the market—Achnaluachrach—and you will probably remember the reason alleged was that no man would go into lands from which another man had been evicted, and take advantage of his improvements?—Yes.

27,019. What was the state of matters as to this man that had just left his place?—He was over seven years in arrear of rent: his rent was £22.

27,020. The fact being that there was nothing due to him in any way as regards improvements, but rather the reverse?—Nothing.

27,021. Mr Sutherland.—You mentioned the Suisgill farm?—Yes.

27,022. Do you know of personal knowledge the circumstances connected with that farm?—I know from the later correspondence, because I was here when it was given up.

27,023. Are you aware of the circumstances under which that association was started and the circumstances that led up to its formation?—I know by the lease, yes, and by the minutes.

27,024. You don't know the concurrent events immediately previous to it, do you, of personal knowledge?—Not from personal knowledge.

27,025. Would you be astonished to learn, if you did not know it before, that the committee of management was made for and not elected by the people?—In answer to that question I may just refer to the correspondence and the minutes, and that will perhaps lead me to read the whole minutes, which may take some time.

27,026. Were you aware of this from your personal knowledge: was the committee of management elected at a public meeting of the members of the association?—I understood it was: I refer to the minutes, for I was not here at the time the association was formed.

27,027. How many crofters were on the committee of management?—Allow me to refer to the correspondence or to the minutes. I see a minute of meeting, dated 12th Oct 1882, which says:—"At a public 'meeting of the cottars of Kildonan and Loth held on '10th inst., your offer to let Suisgill to them as a 'grazing farm at a rental of £100 a year was duly 'considered and accepted: and we, the committee 'appointed to intimate the result to you, desire on 'behalf of the meeting, to express our thanks for the 'interest you have shown in the matter; and we also 'beg of you to make known to his Grace the Duke of 'Sutherland that his tenants much appreciate the 'benefit he has thus conferred upon them.' This is a letter addressed to Mr Greig, and entered in the minutes of the association.

Lairg. Donald Maclean.

27,028. Who signs that letter?—Alexander Ross, Alexander Macleod, William Macdonald, who gave evidence at Helmsdale the other day, and others.

27,029. Is that the minute?—It is the letter which appears in the minutes.

27,030. Does it give us any information regarding the formation of the committee?—The first minute, which I have got an extract from, is dated 5th Oct. 1882, and is in the following terms:—'Mr Greig 'concisely stated to the meeting that the Duke of 'Sutherland desired that his tenants should have ample 'summer grazing for their cattle, horses, and sheep 'apart from the grazing near to their present holdings, 'and he invited those present to consult with him on 'the subject. He stated that the grazing at Suisgill 'was to let and that he had several good offers for it, 'but that he would lease the farm for a much less sum 'to the small tenants than he had been offered for it, 'viz., at a rental of £100 a year. Great satisfaction 'was felt at Mr Greig's statement, and those present 'were much gratified at the manner in which Mr 'Greig explained the matter.'

27,031. That was Mr Greig, the Duke's manager of the reclamations?—Yes. Then, again on 7th November 1882, Mr J. Hill, banker, in the chair, 'The meeting 'was a large one, the schoolroom being crowded, and 'all were much interested in the proceedings, all or 'mostly all of the principal crofters, cottars, &c. of both 'parishes, and a large representation of the feuars of 'Helmsdale were present.'

27,032. What about the formation of the committee?—I don't know that I have anything here about the formation of the committee; that will be given in the Articles of Association which I have put in.

27,033. You are not aware, as a matter of fact, that the committee was not elected by any public meeting, but was presented to them by Mr Greig?—No, I am not aware of that.

27,034. What is the rent at which Suisgill was let to them?—£100 a year.

27,035. And what is it now let for?—£100 a year.

27,036. The same amount?—The same. It could have been let for very much more, but I may say that it was let to Mr Bruce who had been very kind to the tenants when they got into difficulties with the grazing. It was let to him on the special condition which the correspondence shows, that he should at any rate for the first two years of his tenancy provide grazing for the tenants, and by that time it was hoped that some other arrangement would be made by which the tenants would have additional grazing.

27,037. You understand, and I have no doubt you know, that it was the outcome of an application that was made to the proprietor to furnish summer grazings instead of the summer grazings of which they had been deprived at Griamacharry?—Possibly it was.

27,038. And that they were deprived of that grazing, because it was said to be required for the work of reclamation, and it is now practically a deer forest?—I believe it was.

27,039. And the circumstances cannot be judged properly unless all these conditions that led up to it are known?—The circumstances as to the success or the non-success of this grazing can be judged of by the results.

27,040. That is your opinion?—Yes.

27,041. It is not mine. Having a full knowledge of the circumstances personally and locally I may say that of the committee of management that was brought forward and given to them, and which the people naturally understood was one of the conditions upon which the grazing was to be given to them, there was only a small representation of crofters; the others were merchants, hotelkeepers, bankers, and other people who were not crofters at all?—Well, the minutes there state most distinctly that the feeling was most unanimous.

27,042. Furthermore, are you aware that they bought stock?—I am.

27,043. And that they were charged five per cent. interest, which was a very high rate at that time, and that stock was bought at a time when prices were high?—I am not aware what they were charged.

27,044. And they did everything under the most disadvantageous conditions, and the people always complained that they had not a direct voice in the management?—I never heard that; I think they had a very direct voice in the management.

27,045. Then, with regard to the question of education and the result of it, I do not want to open up the subject of education in all its bearing at present, but do you think it is a sign of education that people should leave their native country?—Certainly, if they cannot get suitable occupations in it.

27,046. Don't you think that education may be the means of enabling them to get occupation in their native country?—I think education is not tending just now towards the improvement of the agricultural industry; it does not tend towards keeping the people on the land, but just the contrary.

27,047. That reminds me of an expression in your statement to the effect that legislate as you will, you cannot prevent the people from going from the rural districts to the towns. Am I quoting you aright?—Yes, I think so.

27,048. You say here that education tends that way and that legislation cannot prevent it?—Yes.

27,049. Is that your opinion?—That is my opinion. Education tends to take people away from the land rather than otherwise. [The Chairman.—You mean it gives them other ambitions?—Certainly.]

27,050. Higher ambitions than to cultivate land?—Certainly.

27,051. Better ambitions?—I don't know that they are better altogether; I am very sorry to see so many people leaving the land.

27,052. Do you admit that it is legislation that has driven the people to the towns?—Yes.

27,053. And cannot legislation take them back?—I don't think so.

27,054. It can do the one but not the other?—You would require to have a very different kind of education.

27,055. And a very different line of legislation?—Probably.

27,056. Then, regarding Achnaluachrach, you stated that as crofts became vacant the consolidation process was carried on with regard to them?—Yes.

27,057. That is one way of enlarging holdings, is it not?—Yes.

27,058. But is it the most desirable way, do you think?—The tenants themselves are very anxious that it should be carried out as far as possible.

27,059. That is because they know the holdings cannot be enlarged in any other way?—Not always.

27,060. You enlarge the crofter at the expense of the crofter. You have heard of the operation of feeding a dog on his own tail, have you not?—Where a croft becomes vacant, I can assure you that the neighbouring crofters are in very many cases ill-pleased, because it is not divided among them, but is let to the successor of the previous tenant.

27,061. That is the operation of what is known as the land hunger I suppose?—I suppose so,—the hunger for their neighbour's land.

27,062. But it is a natural hunger, is it not?—No doubt.

27,063. It does not indicate a larger hunger than that of the man who has got a million and a half acres, and who is not satisfied with that very often?—That does not apply in the present case.

27,064. With regard to this croft of Achnaluachrach, was that principle carried out?—It was not.

27,065. Where is Mackay's holding now?—It is let along with the Blarich sheep farm; and why? Simply, because the crofters would not take it. And it is let with the special condition that when it could be let as a separate holding, or along with the neighbouring holding to which it was proposed to be added, the sheep farmer should give it up at once.

27,066. But it is now incorporated in the large sheep farm of Blarich?—It is. Lairg. Donald Maclean.

WILLIAM BLACK, Crofter, Gruids, Lairg (45)—examined. William Black.

27,067. The Chairman.—You hold under lease I think?—No, I was before the Crofters Commission; I was a yearly tenant then. I hold under the Commission.

27,068. Have you a written statement?—Yes.

27,069. Read it, please.—On the estate of Achany, now the property of Lady Matheson of Lewis, there were four townships out of which the crofters were cruelly evicted without any compensation for their improvements, their crofts being put under sheep and remaining so up to the present date, for which the landlord has been receiving large rents on account of their improvements. The evictions took place about seventy years ago. The quality of the land is good and must have been productive, as shown by the quality of grass which it still produces. The townships and the old arable land suitable for cultivation are as follows:—Balfuir—old arable, 178 acres; wood and heath pasture, 123 acres; land suitable for cultivation, 70 acres. Braemore—old arable, 100 acres; suitable for cultivation, 100. Cluanail—old arable, 65 acres; wood and heath pasture, 32. Sallachy—old arable, 25 acres; suitable for cultivation, 40. Glenhead—old arable, 25 acres. Total 393 acres, old arable; and 210 acres, suitable for cultivation. I leave out the wood because it is enclosed. Balfuir and Braemore are leased by Messrs. Dobie & Martin, Thornhill, Dumfries-shire, whose lease expires in May 1896. Clunal and Sallachy are leased by Messrs. Bethune & Nicoll, whose lease expires in May 1895. Achany Glen, including Glenhead, is in the possession of Mr Alexander Mackay, Inveran Hotel, as a yearly tenant. The whole of the sheep farm of Messrs. Dobie & Martin was in possession of the tenants evicted from the said townships, also the crofters still residing in Gruids. They had it all in common and used it for shielings for their stock.

I have been a ploughman in Ross-shire and Nairnshire for a number of years, and I have been a crofter in this parish for the last twenty-one years. This is one of the highest lying parishes in the county, and I am in a position to know a good deal of what a croft ought to be, and the amount of acres and stock each crofter should have. In most cases a croft should not be under 15 acres nor exceed 25 acres arable, with hill pasture capable of carrying from 50 to 100 sheep. In my opinion a variation of crofts would be necessary to suit different parties and the situation of the ground. The number of stock each croft should carry may be stated as follows:—a 15-acre croft—2 horses, 4 cows, 6 followers, 100 sheep. 20 acre croft—2 horses, 5 cows, 8 followers, 100 sheep. 25 acre croft—2 horses, 6 cows, 10 followers, 100 sheep. In some districts the sheep stock could not be so large for want of pasture. The following is a list of crofters evicted from Cluanail:—George Ross, Kinloch; Paul Mackay, Skeog; Thomas Ross, do.; John Murray, Knockandunan; Murdo Murray, Torantoul; John Macleod, do.; Robert Munro, Badeneckan; John Grant, do.; David Campbell, Senabhal; Hugh Matheson, do.; Hugh Mackay, Lurganach; John Ross, do. District of Pitfour—Thomas Mackay, Auchnonaig; John Grant, do.; John Murray, Droman; John Murray (Buie), do.; John Graham, Coul; Widow Calder, do.; Alexander Ross (Bain), Pitfour; Widow John Machuistan, do.; Finlay Macleod, do.; Widow Macleod, do.; Donald Ross (Bain), do.; Widow William Logan, do.; Murdo Macleod, Tighnacoil; James Campbell, do.; Donald Macleod (Oag), do.; Donald Sutherland, Plaid; James Grant, Runachrosh; John Macleod, Eudan; Widow Macleod, Torabea; John Mackay, do.; Murdo Murray, do.; Donald Murray, Schoolmaster, Dreamdevan; Neil Mackay; William Macleod, Runadeig. From Glenhead, 3; Braemore, 2; Sallachy, 1.

Lairg.

William Black.

The above facts were got from Donald Macleod and John Murray, Free Church elders, both well up in age.

(Signed) WILLIAM BLACK.

27,070. Is that statement all in your own handwriting?—All in my own handwriting, and I have signed my name to it.

27,071. Are you a member of the County Council?—Yes.

27,072. And are you a member of any other public body?—I am a member of the School Board of Lairg, and I am also one of the committee on small holdings, on the Council.

27,073. I understand, taking the matter generally, that all these places to which you have specially called our attention are suitable for our consideration under the remit?—Oh, yes.

27,074. The whole of them?—The whole of them.

27,075. Mr Forsyth.—You say you are a member of the Small Holdings Committee of the County Council. Can you tell me why your Small Holdings Committee did not ask for some definite pieces of land specifically?—Well, for the reason that they thought the applicants were the best judges of where they wanted the land.

27,076. But did not they think it was their duty to go to the applicants and find out what land the applicants wanted first?—I may say that I have stated the land that the applicants in my constituency wanted.

27,077. To the Small Holdings Committee?—Yes.

27,078. Then, did you try and get your Small Holdings Committee to mention these lands to the proprietor as a committee and ask specifically for them? Did you endeavour to get them to do that?—There were two or three letters on the head of that correspondence which we as a committee considered unsatisfactory, and we thought we would be wasting time for no purpose if we were to continue the correspondence. It says there was no land to be given.

27,079. Did you endeavour to get your Small Holdings Committee to ask specifically for the land which certain people had mentioned to you as a member as likely to be available or to be useful to them if obtained?—I think that has been done.

27,080. You say that they have asked specifically for this special land?—Yes.

27,081. Is that the piece of land referred to before in our evidence?—That is one of them.

27,082. Did they make any specific application for any particular places?—Yes, it is my opinion they have.

27,083. Whom did they ask?—The channel through which they tried to conduct their correspondence was, of course, the factor or officials of the Duke of Sutherland; there was no other way, and all the correspondence came through them.

27,084. Do you know if your Small Holdings Committee made any attempt to find out the specific pieces of land that people might want? Did they go over any ground or look at any?—No, they did not do that individually.

27,085. Or collectively?—Or collectively.

27,086. They did not go about the county at all?—No.

27,087. They did not make any inspections or make any inquiries from individuals as to where they might like a piece of land if they could get it?—Oh, yes, certainly it is well known, and they pointed out where they wished to have land if they could get it. There are applications from this parish pointing out the land they want.

27,088. But the Small Holdings Committee took no steps to satisfy themselves whether these lands were suitable and fit?—Oh, they had no doubt but what the land was suitable if it could be got on fair conditions.

27,089. But they did not go and look at it?—Well, they understood from the correspondence and the price put on the Embo land that it was too much either to buy or to lease; they did not want to give the ratepayers' money away.

27,090. That is not the point. I am asking if they took any trouble to look at the land the people were speaking about?—No.

27,091. Mr Sutherland.—Have you seen this letter from the Duke of Sutherland's agent that was read here to-day? Mr Maclean has just read a letter to us in which it is stated under the heading of small holdings. 'Referring to your letters of 31st January and '3rd February last which have been submitted to the 'Duke of Sutherland, I have now to say with regard 'to (1) small holdings, that the farms in the parishes 'named are let on lease and that the land is not there-'fore available for breaking up into small holdings?'—That is it.

27,092. Did your committee think that it was unnecessary to go farther in the face of that declaration?—They went farther.

27,093. Even in the face of that declaration; and with regard to allotments it was stated in the same letter that the only land 'available just now for allot-'ments is a large field on the Embo farm near the fish-'ing village of Embo and extending to 48½ acres?'—That is so.

27,094. You were distinctly told, with regard to small holdings, that there was no land available?—Yes.

27,095. And with regard to allotments that there was only 48½ acres?—Yes.

27,096. That you considered to be the answer of the Duke of Sutherland?—Yes.

27,097. Now, with regard to the lands, you have stated that you have no hesitation in saying that these are all suitable places for making new holdings or giving additions to present grazing?—Oh, I think they are well adapted for new holdings.

27,098. What place in your estimation is best adapted of all the places for forming new holdings?—Where the tenants cultivated before the old arable land, it would be there; and then, according to the ground, if they were placed there, the land that I have mentioned would take thirty tenants with 20 acres apiece.

27,099. Of arable?—Of arable, and they would require the whole grazing farm of Messrs. Dobie and Martin, even at less than 100 sheep each.

27,100. How does the farm of Dobie & Martin extend—where does it begin?—At Achany.

27,101. Does it border with Mr Mackay of Inveran?—Yes.

27,102. It goes down to meet his march. Then where does it go,—does it follow the parish boundary along the top of the hill?—Yes.

27,103. How far does it go in that direction?—To the upper end of Loch Shin.

27,104. And does it there march with the forest of Corrykinloch?—Yes.

27,105. Do you know how many sheep are on it?—I could not say.

27,106. How many shepherds have they got?—They have got four or five shepherds.

27,107. And if there were new tenants planted in these places, do you think they could, with advantage, take over the whole of that grazing?—I think they would require it, and they would not have the stock of 100 sheep to each crofter.

27,108. Supposing there were holdings of the size you have indicated with 100 sheep each, would you recommend that it should be managed as a club farm or as individual farms?—Well, certainly, I would approve of it being let as a club farm, with a committee of management elected from the crofters. That would make it most likely to pay, because having that extent of land they would require a shepherd, so that each interest would be looked after equally.

27,109. And is the arable land that you have in your mind in one place, or is it scattered up and down through the grazing?—It is not scattered up and down.

27,110. It is in one place?—No, it is in three places; Braemore and Balfuir and Claonail.

27,111. Is that Balfuir lying between Gruids and Achany?—Yes, between Braemore and Gruids.

27,112. Mr Gordon.—How is Claonal occupied just now?—It is occupied as a sheep farm.

27,113. Is it part of Dobie and Martin's land?—No, it is Messrs. Bethune & Maccoll.

27,114. How far up do they go?—To a burn on this side of Arscaig.

27,115. Is that Allt-a'-Bhuin Mor?—Yes.

27,116. How is Arscaig occupied?—By one of Dobie & Martin's shepherds.

27,117. Is not there a little farm at Sallachadh?—That is Bethune and Maccoll's.

27,118. Then Dobie & Martin's goes up to the north west of that; they come down to the loch when you pass that farm?—Yes.

27,119. There is a hill there called Cnoc Imireach right above Glencassley. Is that upon Dobie and Martin's land? Do the two farms march on that hill?—Yes, as the run of the water goes.

27,120. Does the burn there that lies between Braemore and Balfuir, form the march between Sallachadh and Dobie & Martin, up towards these lochs? Do you know Loch-na-Caillich?—Yes.

27,121. Is that upon Dobie & Martin's place?—I think it is just about the march.

JOHN SUTHERLAND, Doirecha, Rosehall (61)—examined.

27,122. The Chairman.—You are on the Rosehall estate?—Yes.

27,123. Was your holding dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—No.

27,124. What is your rent?—£11, 10s. for my croft, and I have grazing in partnership with other eleven crofters, for which I pay £1, 2s., and I hold hill pasture as a sub-tenant along with other two crofters, for which I pay £4, 13s. 4d.

27,125. Your total rent is £17, 5s. 4d.?—Yes.

27,126. Have you a written statement?—No, I have not.

27,127. Do you ask us to consider any lands under the remit, on the Rosehall estate?—Not much on the Rosehall estate as it is now, because in 1870 Rosehall estate was divided into three estates, viz., Glencassley, Glenrossal, and Rosehall.

27,128. Is there any available land on the Glencassley portion of the original estate?—There is land on the Glencassley estate where crofters were situated about the latter end of the last century: they were removed by the proprietor, General Baillie.

27,129. Do you know what were the names of the townships?—Dalteamhar, Dulfhad, Langwell, Bad-an-t-sagairt.

27,130. Do you remember how many tenants altogether occupied these townships?—No, I don't remember.

27,131. But you ask us to consider the lands where these tenants lived?—Yes.

27,132. How is that land used now?—As a sheep farm.

27,133. It is in the form of a permanent grazing?—Yes, in the proprietor's hands.

27,134. But is it more suitable for new settlements or for additional grazing?—For new settlements.

27,135. What number of new settlers might be accommodated there?—Perhaps about half a dozen, but I believe they would require principally to depend upon the hill pasture, because there is very good ground there along the river Cassley, but sometimes the river Cassley overflows that ground and causes loss.

27,136. Of course, you would not put them on land subject to frequent flooding?—Well, we find crofters upon land that is frequently flooded doing pretty well, but sometimes they have losses with floods.

27,137. How many tenants would you put upon that land on Glencassley?—I would think half a dozen tenants could be put there.

27,138. Suppose you had half a dozen new tenants, what extent of arable would be available for each, taking it roughly?—There would be 40 acres, I believe, of green pasture, of green meadows.

27,139. How many would you give to each?—Forty to each: I believe there are over 240 acres there, and I am sure I am far below the mark in saying that. Lairg. John Sutherland.

27,140. And do you think holdings could be formed there which might be cultivated to profit with fair chances?—Well, I understand that the tenants that were there were doing pretty well, and I know the crops raised there are pretty good. Oats can be seen that were grown there and came to maturity.

27,141. Is there a demand for new holdings in your quarter?—There is in our quarter, and all over Sutherlandshire.

27,142. But confining your answer mainly to the district of which you know most, you say there is a demand for new holdings in your quarter?—Yes.

27,143. Are the crofters in your district congested?—They are.

27,144. And their holdings too small?—Too small by far.

27,145. Is the land exhausted?—No, they are good crofters and keep the land in very good order.

27,146. Do they cultivate it in rotation?—They keep it under a five-course rotation.

27,147. The whole of them?—The whole of them.

27,148. And the desire there, as I understand you to indicate, is for new holdings, rather than extension of grazing?—Extension of grazing is required,—there is only one crofter township on the Rosehall estate, and there is great necessity for extension of grazings for that township.

27,149. What township is that?—The township of Altas.

27,150. So that you are suggesting additional grazing for the township of Altas, and new settlements upon these lands that you have mentioned?—Certainly, because I am told that the township of Altas, about twenty years ago, was shorn of all their pasture: there was a great deal of pasture taken off them. The estate was sold in 1870, and it was bought up by a company of land speculators, and they cut off all the hill pasture, and settled crofters there, and raised their rent double after doing that.

27,151. What was done with the pasture taken from the crofters?—The hill pasture was formed into new crofter holdings; there were about 17 crofter holdings formed there.

27,152. And are these men now under the Act or under lease?—They are under lease.

27,153. Have these lease-hold rents not been reduced since they got them in 1870, or about that time?—When they got this land these land speculators that bought the land would not give leases, or would not allow the people to remain as tenants at will; but there was one, Mr George Grant Mackay, who was the acting partner of this firm, and he insisted upon giving feus.

27,154. And were these feus accepted?—The old crofters were compelled to accept them, because if they did not they would be removed, as was the case with some of those who rejected them.

27,155. Are a good number of the tenants on the Rosehall estate under feu charter?—Not now, because the feus were charged so high that the people could not possibly pay.

27,156. And what became of the feus?—They had to renounce their feus and give up their holdings to the proprietors or to the bond holders, and they got leases instead. Their holdings were valued by one of your honourable Commission, Mr Gordon.

27,157. And did he put the rents up?—No, he reduced them. Upon the new holdings he reduced them to the one-third, and upon the old holdings to about the one-half, and still these people were all rented upon their own improvements, because Mr Gordon's instructions were, although some of these people that improved the new holdings improved from 5 to 35 acres of barren moor and built houses and everything, they had to forfeit all that when they gave up their feus without any recompense for it except a year's feu-duty, or I believe there might be a place that might be more than a year's feu-duty in arrears, and this was cancelled. But all the rest were valued upon their own improvements. Certainly, we require to admit that Mr Gordon, as far as he was concerned, had done justly, but the people thought it hard, of course, to have improved new ground and only got fourteen years of it, and paying 5s. to 6s. an acre all that time, and at the end of that time to be rented on their own improvements. But they did not blame Mr Gordon, because he was authorised by the proprietors to look upon all the improvements as theirs, and the buildings.

27,158. He gave very substantial relief?—He just reduced to about one-third, I think, the new holdings, and the old holdings to about one-half.

27,159. Then, passing from Glencassley to Glenrossall, is there land there that you think we should consider?—There was a township in Glenrossall where there was one tenant at least, perhaps two. I suppose they were evicted out of that at the same time they were evicted out of Glencassley; that was about the latter end of last century. These places were about the first places in Sutherlandshire to be made into sheep farms.

27,160. What extent of land will there be in Glenrossall?—I suppose, there will be under the plough perhaps ten acres of old arable land, but I am not certain.

27,161. Scarcely large enough for a single holding?—Well, there is a great deal that could be improved advantageously along with that. The estate of Glenrossall is about 2600 acres in extent.

27,162. What would you say is the total area at Glenrossall of old arable, of the kind you have been describing, which might safely be assigned to crofters for new settlements?—There could be 80 acres improved I would say.

27,163. Improvable land?—Yes, lying quite low.

27,164. Not at a high elevation?—Not more than 150 or 200 feet above sea level.

27,165. You also mentioned Rosehall; is there land there?—Most of the land there is possessed by the crofters, and there are two large arable farms upon it, one paying about £70 and the other £100 of rent.

27,166. What are the names of these farms?—One is Achuirigill and the other is Little Altas.

27,167. Is there any grazing land on these, or are they all arable together?—Achuirigill farm was once under crofters, but they were removed, and it is now all under rotation.

27,168. Does the same remark apply to Little Altas?—On Little Altas there is a good number of acres of land on the meadows close to the Kyle of Sutherland that were once improved and are now lying as pasture.

27,169. Is it suitable?—It belonged to the crofters in Altas, but this is a part of which they were deprived in 1870 and added to the Little Altas farm.

27,170. And how is it being dealt with now?—This is occupied for grazing, but the Little Altas farm itself is improved and kept in proper rotation.

27,171. Were you appointed at a public meeting?—I was appointed at a public meeting to give a general statement for the Rosehall district.

27,172. As a delegate?—As a delegate.

27,173. And have you mentioned all the lands that you ask us to consider, or are there other lands?—Well, on the Rosehall estate there is no land except about 900 acres that is enclosed for deer, in a deer park, and part of that was at one time arable land held by crofters. I am not sure if crofters were situated there, but the land extended to that, because crofters might have been situated in the farm of Achness quite close to it.

27,174. The deer park is fenced round, I suppose?—Yes.

27,175. Is it kept exclusively for deer, or for deer and sheep?—Exclusively for deer; the half of it especially is under fir wood, perhaps more.

27,176. And the other half is grazing, is it?—Part of the rest is old arable land and part old birch wood and oak.

27,177. May we say then that the whole of it has wood upon it, or is there a part of it clear of wood?—Where the bits of arable land are is clear of wood, the patches of arable land.

Lairg. John Sutherland.

27,178. Mr Sutherland.—I understand you referred to Glencassley as a suitable place?—Yes.

27,179. Do you know it personally?—Yes.

27,180. You have been over the land?—I have been over the land.

27,181. And I think you have stated in reply to his lordship that, in your opinion, it is suitable for putting people there?—Yes.

27,182. There are shepherds along the banks of the Cassley, are there not?—There are, on both sides.

27,183. How many houses?—There are only two shepherds on that place, but on the other side there is the estate of Balnagown.

27,184. Take the valley, both sides of the river?—Duchally, there is no shepherd there; Dail-nan-cliabh, which was a crofter township at one time; Dalfhad, Glenmuick, Bad-an-t-sagairt, Croich.

27,185. These are all distributed up and down the glen?—All up and down the glen.

27,186. Have the shepherds who live in these places crops, do you know?—They have, the highest of them.

27,187. Do they raise all kinds of crops?—I understand they do; I have not seen them, but I have been told that the shepherd at Dail-nan-cliabh has over 150 stooks of very good corn.

27,188. That is one indication that justifies what you have stated, is it not?—Certainly. I am aware that the shepherd at Dail-nan-cliabh has raised as heavy corn there as was raised on Invercassley. [Mr Gordon.—He might do that this year]. Not this year only, but former years.

27,189. What height is that above the level of the sea?—Where I live is 450 feet, and I would take these to be about the same level.

27,190. You are above the mark I may say?—I am only giving an idea.

27,191. Here you have got a long glen like this with arable land and grazing adjoining?—Yes.

27,192. What is your opinion of the nature of the grazing that is round about there?—The grazing on the Glencassley farm is good grazing. There is a splendid stock of black-faced sheep kept there.

27,193. And you have no doubt in your own mind that if holdings were made there under favourable conditions and reasonable conditions they would thrive there?—I do expect they would.

27,194. Is it a more favourable subject to work upon do you think than the land the feuars got in Rosehall?—They would think themselves lucky if they got the one half of that, because that was quite a different subject altogether. Some of them had not a square yard that there was a blade of grass growing on.

27,195. It was all black heather?—All black heather, and peat bogs; and, in reference to that, I may state it as an example of what energy will do for crofters, I have seen crofters there work very hard. There are about seventeen crofters there who took new holdings, and they have improved, I suppose, close upon 300 acres there.

27,196. In Rosehall?—Yes. In about twenty years or less. I have seen them work so hard, that I have seen them working in winter with lamp light, trenching and draining. They worked under great disadvantages, because for this ground they were paying 5s. an acre.

27,197. In a state of nature?—In a state of nature. Some of them took 100 acres and were paying £25. Now, that was not worth above fourpence an acre; there is not a sheep farmer in the country would give that for it.

27,198. They had to build?—To build everything, they got nothing from the proprietor.

27,199. They had to reclaim the land?—Everything.

27,200. Without any assistance?—Without any assistance.

27,201. And do you remember the time these lands, such as you describe, were thrown open, was there a general rush to take them?—No man could think of the rush that was there, because I mind of this that there was a great number that were punished by the proprietors by forfeiting their improvements, and some had lost twice over what was improved, I don't say in this country, but Aberdeenshire and other places, and they thought there was fixity of tenure there, and that has been the cause of the improvements.

27,202. You think then that it was the confiscation, or the improvement by tenants in previous times, that made these men rush in and give so much?—Certainly, and even there are some who have so little faith in the law or in landlords, that although they are paying 5s. an acre, they are afraid that at the end of the lease the landlords will turn them out of it. [Mr Gordon.—How many are there?—Four.]

27,203. And you think that if men who overcame the difficulties in this situation in Rosehall got an opportunity on the better land you are describing there would be plenty people who would be very glad to take it?—If these people who came and took this land at 5s. an acre, had got the land at prairie value, they would have succeeded pretty well, but as it was they had great difficulties and great losses. I have no doubt that if land was thrown open to the public under favourable circumstances, the crofters would get on.

27,204. You have heard, I have no doubt, what was stated with regard to the Duke of Sutherland's improvements and reclamations?—I have.

27,205. Shinness is not very far from Rosehall?—No.

27,206. They can easily be compared?—I believe the lands at Rosehall—I am not sure, but perhaps they are as high from sea level as Shinness, and I have seen the ground at Shinness before it was improved. I have seen it during the time it was improved, and I have seen it after being improved, and the land that has been improved at Rosehall was quite as difficult and perhaps more so than the land at Shinness. The whole has been done by the people themselves, and I don't think the reclamation cost above £15 an acre on the average.

27,207. And they are not half a dozen miles apart from each other, are they?—Oh, yes.

27,208. About that?—Well, taking it right across as the bird flies, I don't know if it is more than that.

27,209. Here, then, you have got an instance of small holders reclaiming their own land at, you say, £15 an acre, when in the other case where it was done by the landlord on a large scale, it cost £65 an acre?—Yes, but the improvements at Rosehall are made quite as good as the improvements at Shinness are. I don't say that the buildings in every respect are so good, but the land is improved quite as well.

27,209*a*. And it is kept in cultivation?—Kept in cultivation and proper rotation.

27,210. We heard a good deal about flooding of lands. You mentioned a piece of land that is subject to flooding?—Yes.

27,210*a*. Really, there is no doubt about this?—No doubt at all.

27,211. Do you know any other place that is subject to flooding as much as the Kyle of Sutherland?—I know the best lands in Sutherland all flood, because all west from Bonar Bridge it covers and does harm to them there, as well as at the top of the glen.

27,212. But you never heard of them wishing to put the land out of cultivation on that account, have you?—Oh, no, I have not; and another thing, at one time the lands of Inveran held by Mr Macarthur and Mr Mackay, hotel-keeper, and there were orders from the estate office at Dunrobin, I believe in 1854. That land was occupied by a Captain Clark, and it was divided between Messrs. Macarthur & Mackay, hotel-keeper, and at that time they would not be allowed to cultivate that land, because the estate authorities were afraid it would be flooded and carry away the soil. But, however, as Mr Mackay told me, at one time, he met Mr Gunn, who was factor at Dunrobin at the time, and reasoned with him, and they consented to allow the thing to be improved and cultivated, and it is now cultivated to advantage.

27,213. And now it bears good crops, doesn't it?—The best crops.

27,214. The Kyle of Sutherland is subject to flood, because the tide comes up?—The tide comes up and meets with the rivers, but not at Glencassley; it does not come up past Rosehall.

27,215. The tide does not come up Glencassley?—Certainly not.

27,216. So that it is not nearly so subject to flooding as the lands lower down?—I would expect not, but I have not been there during a flood to know how rapidly it rises.

27,217. About the farm of Little Altas, who occupies that?—Mr Mackay, hotel-keeper.

27,218. Did you say it was small holdings that had been made into a large holding?—Yes, about fifty years ago, but not for Mr Mackay.

27,219. Then, the deer park that you referred to of 900 acres, what is that attached to?—It is attached to the mansion house of Rosehall.

27,220. Is it to the right hand side of the road when you go down?—It is to the right hand of the road as you go up to Glencassley. It commences almost immediately after turning the road to Glencassley, at the Cassley Bridge down from Rosehall.

27,221. And you think that a part of that would be very suitable for enlargement of holdings or grazings?—I certainly think it might do.

27,222. Well adapted for that purpose?—I think so. Certainly, the water going over it is not so favourable.

27,223. In view of what you know, and what you have seen yourself of what people can do in the improvement of land, it is unnecessary for me to ask you any questions in regard to it?—Oh, no.

27,224. You are not in the region of doubts or theories at all?—No, because I have tried it myself. I have taken a new holding myself where the tenants were evicted in 1837, and which was then made into a sheep farm, and it was opened up in 1870, and I have taken a new holding there because I got 10 acres, perhaps, of old arable land, without which I could not have carried through, but it is a great advantage for any crofter to have part of old arable land.

27,225. In fact, you look upon all these objections that have been urged against the formation of new holdings as absurd?—Certainly, they are absurd.

27,226. Mr Gordon.—We saw this land yesterday, and while I don't quite agree with you as to the extent that could be cultivated, I believe there are 240 acres of green ground. But there is a very considerable part of those 240 acres that is so low that it would be very difficult to drain, is that so?—Well, probably there may be that.

27,227. Are you well acquainted with that country?—Not very well acquainted.

27,228. You have seen some of the shepherd's places under crop?—No, but I have heard of it.

27,229. Because you spoke of the weight of the oats?—I was told of it.

27,230. Would not you be a little afraid of frost for your corn and potatoes up the waterside?—Perhaps for potatoes, but not for corn. It might injure the potatoes, because always beside water it is apt to do that.

27,231. The whole of the green land is practically on the water bank?—Yes, but on the other hand between Bonar-Bridge and Rosehall all the land there is on the water bank, on the Kyle of Sutherland, and I find there that it is not very much injured by frost.

27,232. But the frost is not so hard when you are within the influence of the sea-water?—That may be.

27,233. You speak about holdings of 40 acres?—Yes, but I could not be confident regarding that.

27,234. Less then 40 acres would do, or else you could not put many people there. Suppose your suggestions were to be carried out, if you took 40 acres of the green ground for each man, I am afraid you would fill the glen with many tenants. There is no doubt there is a considerable extent up in that glen of very good hay ground, if they were fortunate enough to get it taken out of the way before a flood came, but there is no doubt the water was all over that haugh within this last week?—I am aware of that.

27,235. And if it had been under crop the pro-

Lairg.

John Sutherland.

bability is that a good part of the crop would have been in the German Ocean by this time?—Oh, certainly, and there is a good deal between that and Bonar Bridge was carried away.

27,236. Between this and Glenrossal there is no green land except 10 acres that I saw?—Well, the rest is mixed with heather and some green to the east of it.

27,237. I did not see anything that ever had been in cultivation except that spot?—Not in cultivation. I think you would have seen on your right hand a park there that was improved about eight years ago.

27,238. Is that near the keepers?—West a good bit from the keepers, half a mile, and fenced.

27,239. Is there any old arable except the park?—Not old arable except the park.

27,240. Do you know anything about Strath-Oykell, is there anything there?—Yes, I know that place.

27,241. You have not mentioned any place there?—No, we came on the length of Croich.

27,242. Perhaps some other delegate may speak about that?—That is all the length we came on with that glen, that is the Invercassley farm.

27,243. Below that there is no green ground till you come to Invercassley?—Not of any consequence.

27,244. Perhaps a small patch?—Yes, I think so. Merely a few acres, but I think it was once cultivated.

27,245. And the ground upon both sides of the water there is rather hard. The hill pasture is harder and drier than it was farther up?—Well, I am not sure of that. I think the lower down the better the pasture is.

27,246. I would differ in my opinion as to that?—Well, I am not sure.

27,247. Mr Forsyth, representing Rosehall Estate.—I think you mentioned that some of the crofters had trenched land to the extent of 35 acres. Who did that? [Mr Gordon.—I will tell you one that did, the old man Strachan.]

27,248. He is a feuar? [Mr Gordon.—Well, he is a small holder.] Witness.—The other is James Brown.

27,249. He was a feuar?—Not now.

27,250. Would you mention how much land you hold yourself?—The extent of my holding is 50 acres and 169 acres of hill pasture. Twenty acres arable, and 30 acres in one section, that is the part that I first took, and 169 acres and 50 acres, and 20 acres of that is arable. And then, as I said before, I join with other eleven in holding pasture for which I pay £1, 2s. as my share, and I hold hill pasture as a sub-tenant along with other two, for which I pay £4, 13s. 4d. [The Chairman.—You brought that out quite clearly. For one part of your holding you pay £11, 10s., for another £1, 2s., and for a third £4, 13s. 4d. Your total rent is £17, 5s. 4d., but you described this quite clearly in the first part of your statement.]

27,251. Mr Anderson, Factor for Balnagown.—Unfortunately, I did not hear the very commencement of this witness's evidence, and I am a little at sea as to what he is advocating, but I gather from what I have heard that he advocates the removal of the Rosehall crofters to Glencassley?—No. [The Chairman.—You can hardly put it in that way, but if you have any questions to put I will be delighted to hear what they are.]

27,252. I would ask Mr Sutherland what he knows of his own personal knowledge of Glencassley. (To witness). I think you said already that you did not know very much about the effect that the floods had upon the arable land?—I was never present there during a flood.

27,253. I think you also said that at some remote period there had been crofters there?—Yes.

27,254. How much arable land would you imagine would be at the various places you mentioned?—I cannot answer the question, how much arable land was there, because I have not gone over the ground to look to the arable land, but looking at it green, I would say that there is over 240 acres on the Glencassley or north side.

27,255. If there were crofters at one period in this particular glen, what was the reason, do you imagine, why they are not there now?—Well, I will tell you that. [The Chairman.—We can imagine the reason.]

Lairg.

John Sutherland.

27,256. No, my lord, I am afraid I can't?—They were removed as I said, about the latter end of last century by a General Baillie. The estate was bought early in this century by Lord Ashburton, and he meant to remove some of the tenants from Rosehall and replace them in Glencassley, had he outlived the lease of Glencassley, but he did not see that.

27,257. What I want to be at is this, that if crofters could live there at one time, I don't care how very remote or how near it is, how many do you honestly imagine could live there now and thrive?—Upon which part do you refer to?

27,258. Well, Dail-nan-cliabh?—I would say that one would live at Dail-nan-cliabh.

27,259. You don't know, as a matter of fact, what the effect of the floods are. Do you know what sort of condition they cut their corn in for the most part?—I know that sometimes it is flooded.

27,260. But when there are no floods?—I do.

27,261. Do they not cut it in a very green condition?—If they cut it in a very green condition I don't think the weight of the corn grown there could be 44 lbs.

27,262. The Chairman.—I must say I think the material portions of that have been brought out already. The witness has been asked a great deal by the Commissioners about flood, and we have seen the ground, remember that. [Mr Sutherland.—And we have seen the crop, remember that.]

27,263. Mr Anderson.—I simply wanted to bring out if he knew of his own knowledge how many people could live there. I know something about the history of the glen, and I have no history as to any people having lived there beyond a shepherd?—There is no doubt at all, but there were people there at one time.

27,264. Mr Sutherland.—Are the marks of the old cultivation and the marks of the old houses there to this day?—Certainly, they are.

MALCOLM MUNRO, Achintoul, Rosehall (42)—examined.

Malcolm Munro.

27,265. The Chairman.—You are a crofter?—Yes.

27,266. Are you under lease?—No, we got the benefit of the Crofters Act.

27,267. Was your rent fixed by the Crofters Commission?—Yes.

27,268. What was the rent previously?—£12.

27,269. And when the rent was dealt with by the Commission what did it become?—It was reduced to £6.

27,270. You have no written statement?—I have not. I have been elected by the crofters on the townships of Achintoul and Toppachy to represent them and to state their grievance.

27,271. Are you on a croft that was occupied by Widow Donald Ross?—I am.

27,271*a*. And are you her son-in-law?—I am her son-in-law.

27,272. You heard the evidence given by Sutherland?—I did.

27,273. And do you agree with that evidence?—I quite agree with it, but I would like to make it a little more conspicuous as regards the east side of the estate, —that is, the two townships that I represent here to-day. The late G. G. Mackay took over the estate of Rosehall, and up to that time the crofters on the estate enjoyed conditions that are strange to them now. Up to that date I may say that they had the run of considerably over 1200 acres of hill pasture. Each individual crofter had also attached to his croft meadow pasture and brushwood pasture I should say to the amount of from 12 to 18 acres each. The first thing that was done when the late G. G. Mackay got the estate was to cut off that 1200 to 1300 acres of hill pasture, and also to cut off the meadow and brushwood pasture. The meadow and brushwood pasture was part of their crofts as will be seen to this day; the marches stand there until now. Before the reduction of pasture took place they paid on the average £7 to £8 for the whole, crofts and pasture, and G. G. Mackay after depriving them or fleecing them of the pasture almost doubled their rents. He raised their rents, so that instead of £8 the feu-duty they had to pay him was £12, that is minus the meadow pasture and the hill pasture. Now, the grievance of the districts that I represent is the loss of the meadow pasture. They cannot very well get to the hill pasture under the circumstances, but as to the meadow pasture I think it is quite easy for them to get it again, because it was added to the farm of Little Altas, tenanted by Mr Mackay, Inveran, and it is very evident that the meadows were not necessary to the forming of that farm, because they take in graziers. In fact, I, myself, have paid as high as 10s. a month for grazing a colt there on the meadows that originally belonged to the crofters.

27,274. Can you give us the extent of the land put into the farm of Inveran which you say would be useful for the extension of crofters' holdings? [Mr Gordon.—The farm of Altas Beg].—There would be about 42 acres between meadows and brushwood pasture.

27,275. And what you convey to us now is that that land would be very useful as an extension of holdings to the neighbouring crofters?—Very useful. It belonged to them at one time; it was part of their crofts and they took a rotation of crops out of it. And more than that, as to those crofts that were immediately connected with the farm of Little Altas, one crofter there, immediately after building a new dwelling house, was removed from that, and his croft added to the farm without one fraction of compensation. The next crofter to that, unfortunately for him, had the great bulk of his cultivated land adjoining that next to the farm, and in order to secure all this cultivated land the late G. G. Mackay drew a line, a march, cutting this off till it actually took the corner stones of the crofter's house, and I remember the crofter pleading for enough way for anybody to pass the end of his house, but he would not grant him even that. So the crofter in question had land that was from seven to eight acres taken from him in that way, and the fruit of his own and the family's labours in reclaiming that was added to the farm of Little Altas without one fraction of compensation. Then, of course, the crofter had to set to again and reclaim land, and I know for a fact that on the land that he was reclaiming they cleared away 2000 cart loads of stones from every acre that he reclaimed after that.

27,276. In other words, what you urge is this, that there were arbitrary proceedings in the past by which crofters were deprived of certain lands, and you wish us now in considering these lands to have that in view in dealing with the question of available land?—Quite so.

27,277. Mr Sutherland.—I wish to know exactly where this meadow land is. Is it beneath the road, between the road and the river?—Yes, the meadow grass, the half.

27,278. Where is the brushwood grass?—Between the crofts and the road.

27,279. And has Mr Mackay that pasture just now?—He has.

27,280. In connection with the farm of Altas Beg?—Yes.

27,281. And has he the farm of Inveran as well?—Yes.

27,282. That is not on the Sutherland estate?—On the Duke of Sutherland's estate.

27,283. But Altas Beg is not?—It is on the Rosehall estate.

27,284. And you say it would do no injury whatever to the farm of Altas Beg to take this away from it, because there was a time when it had not it?—There was, and as a proof that it is of no use to them, they took in graziers from the Duke's tenant. If I might be allowed to tell, the farm of Little Altas was about fifty years ago altogether occupied by small tenants, and there are plenty tenants and cottars on the estate of Rosehall to-day that would be very glad to get it back again.

27,285. As grazing?—Yes. Their forefathers have been on the farm of Altas fifty years ago. Lairg, 27,286. Your observations apply to the whole of the ground?—The whole of the ground. Malcolm Munro.

WILLIAM MUNRO, Altas, Rosehall (50)—examined. William Munro.

27,287. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

27,288. Was your rent dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—No.

27,289. Are you under lease?—Yes.

27,290. For nineteen years?—Fourteen years.

27,291. On whose estate is your croft situated?—On the Rosehall estate.

27,292. What rent do you pay under the lease?—£6, 15s.

27,293. Has your rent been reduced at all?—Yes, when we gave over the feu.

27,294. What had the rent been before that?—£16, 15s.

27,295. And when you gave over the feu and were put under lease it was reduced to £6, 15s.?—Yes.

27,296. Was that for the same extent of ground?—The same extent of ground.

27,297. What is the extent of your arable?—About 12 acres.

27,298. And have you an outrun?—An outrun of about 13 acres.

27,299. And have you hill grazing besides?—None whatever.

27,300. Then, is your complaint similar to that made by the preceding witness, Malcolm Munro?—Yes.

27,301. You take the same view he does and make the same claim?—The same claim with regard to the meadow and the hill pasture. In Sir James Matheson's time the crofters were obliged to uproot all the wood and clear these meadows, and a rotation of crops off them regularly; and the marches are there to this day.

27,302. Mr Sutherland.—I think you said you concurred generally in the evidence given by Munro?—Yes.

WILLIAM MACKINTOSH, Cottar, Tullich, Rosehall (56) —examined. William Mackintosh.

27,303. The Chairman.—Are you on the Rosehall estate?—Yes.

27,304. Which part of it?—Tullich.

27,305. You are described as a cottar; do you pay any rent?—Yes.

27,306. What is your rent?—50s.

27,307. To whom do you pay rent?—To Mr Irvine. [Mr Forsyth, factor.—He pays no rent to Rosehall.]

27,308. Are you a sub-tenant to Mr Irvine?—I don't know whether he is a feuar, but he occupies a farm there. [Mr Forsyth, factor.—I understand the witness is a servant, I may be misinformed.]

27,309. Are you a servant of Mr Irvine?—No.

27,310. But you pay him as landlord £2, 10s. of rent?—Yes.

27,311. What is the extent of your holding, how much arable?—Of Mr Irvine's holding?

27,312. No, of your own holding.—I have got no holding.

27,313. You have the site of a house?—Yes, I pay rent for a house.

27,314. Have you any land at all?—Not any.

27,315. Have you not a potato patch?—Nothing.

27,316. Are you anxious to get a holding?—Yes.

27,317. With arable and outrun?—Exactly.

27,318. And do you suggest that there is land in the district available for such a holding?—Yes, I think there is.

27,319. And you would be glad to leave this place where you have no land, in order to get a place where there is land?—Yes, I would.

27,320. You maintain yourself by labouring?—Just by labouring.

Lairg.

William Mackintosh.

27,321. Have you a regular employment?—No, I have not.

27,322. It is precarious?—Exactly.

27,323. From whom do you generally get labour?—Different parties here and there.

27,324. Round the district?—Yes, round the district.

27,325. You heard the previous evidence given by William Mackintosh and William Munro, with regard to land in that quarter?—Yes.

27,226. And do you agree with that evidence?—Yes, I do.

27,227. Were you appointed to appear as a delegate?—No.

27,228. You are just appearing in your own individual interest?—Yes.

27,229. Had you any croft at one time, or have you always been a cottar?—I have been a farm servant, and I came to this man, Mr Irvine, as a farm servant, but he does not work the place now altogether, so I have taken the house from him. I have been five years engaged with him.

27,330. How long have you been living in this house?—Ten years.

27,331. And have you always paid that rent of £2, 10s.?—Yes, I paid no rent the first five years, because I was engaged with him.

27,332. You were labouring with him?—Yes.

27,333. But since you ceased to work for him, you pay him a rent of £2, 10s. for the house?—Yes.

27,334. What is the size of the house?—It is just a small house in the steading, it is not much.

27,335. Two rooms?—There is just one.

27,336. Who built the house?—It was Mr Irvine, I suppose.

27,337. You did not build it yourself?—No.

27,338. Does he help you to maintain it?—No, he maintains it.

27,339. Mr Sutherland.—You have been here ten years?—I have been here twenty years.

27,340. Then, you know of your own personal knowledge, some of the lands we heard about to-day?—Well, I am not very well acquainted with the lands away up the glen.

27,341. Do you know Shinness?—No, I do not.

27,342. Do you know any land round about here that would be suitable for the making of such holdings?—Oh, plenty.

27,343. And you have heard what was said in regard to that by the previous witness?—Yes.

27,344. And you would be very willing to take a holding yourself?—Yes, I would.

27,345. And you would take it to-morrow, would you, if you got the opportunity?—Yes, I would take it to-morrow.

27,346. So you believe there is a demand for land in this quarter?—Oh, there is a demand.

27,347. And you are a testimony to it yourself?—Yes.

27,348. Mr Gordon.—Are you the only tenant that Mr Irvine has?—Yes.

27,349. Is there not another crofter on his estate?—Not one.

27,350. What has become of the man that was there?—John Horne was a tenant of his, but he has got under the Crofters Commission now.

27,351. He pays rent to whom?—To the Scottish Provident Institution; I suppose to Mr Forsyth, the factor.

27,352. Because I have heard him quoted as an act of cruelty on the part of the Crofters Commission to take away the land from Mr Irvine and give it to this man for nothing.

27,353. Mr Forsyth, factor.—Where did you come from?—I came from Grantown, Speyside.

27,354. You are a native of Grantown?—Yes.

David Munro.

DAVID MUNRO, Altas, Rosehall (42)—examined.

27,355. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—No, I am a cottar.

27,356. Have you any land?—Nothing.

Lairg.

David M

27,357. Just a house?—Just a house.

27,358. Do you pay a rent for it?—No rent.

27,359. Do you follow a trade?—No, I am a labourer.

27,360. Whose land is your house upon?—On my good-father's.

27,361. Your father-in-law?—Yes.

27,362. What is his name?—Nathaniel Munro.

27,363. Was his rent dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—No, it was not under the Commission.

27,364. Is he under lease?—Yes.

27,365. Do you agree with the evidence given by the several witnesses with regard to the question of available land?—Yes, I quite agree with it, but there is plenty more land that could be taken in that they did not touch upon between Invercassley and Oykell.

27,366. Is that land at present grazing land?—Yes, it is under sheep. The postmaster at Ardgay has it under sheep, and there are plenty good bits on this Sutherland side too that would be very good for crofters.

27,367. But you ask us to consider land between Invercassley and Oykell, on both sides of the Kyle?—Yes.

27,368. And you say that land is available within the meaning of the remit?—Yes.

27,369. What is the total extent of it, would you say?—It would keep maybe seven or eight crofters very happy.

27,370. And would you be very glad if you had the opportunity to leave the house where you are and take a new settlement there?—I would be very glad to get good ground to work upon.

27,371. And would you undertake such a holding without assistance?—Yes, I have a good family grown up who would help me; I have five sons.

27,372. So that you would look forward with confidence to carrying on such a holding to profit and paying a fair rent?—Yes.

27,373. Mr Sutherland.—Of what place are you a native?—Altas, Rosehall.

William Macleod.

WILLIAM MACLEOD, Cottar, Rosehall (40)—examined.

27,374. The Chairman.—Are you a cottar?—Yes.

27,375. Do you pay any rent?—Yes, £2, 12s.

27,376. Have you any land?—No, but a bit of garden.

27,377. And to whom do you pay the rent?—To Rosehall.

27,378. May I ask, are you anxious to leave the place you are in and get another settlement if one can be got?—Yes.

27,379. How long have you been living in your present house?—Seven years.

27,380. And you have paid a rent all that time?—Yes, for five years, and I was for two years a servant.

27,381. And while you were a servant you had the house as part of your arrangement?—Yes.

27,382. Who was your employer?—Mr Maclay in Achuess.

27,383. Mr Sutherland.—How many cottars are there in Rosehall, do you know?—There are six of them. They have cows, and they will not get a single bite on the estate; it is just from the crofters they are getting it.

27,384. Have the estate management got land that cows could be grazed upon?—Plenty of it: there is any amount of land on the Rosehall meadows, and the deer park is not 20 yards from the back of our houses.

27,385. And you get then the cow's grazing from the crofters round about?—From the crofters at Rosehall and Altas.

27,386. And you say that if you got a holding in a place such as was spoken of to-day you would be very glad to take it?—Yes.

27,387. And you would have no fear but that you would succeed if it was good land?—Yes.

27,388. The Chairman.—What stock have you got, have you just a cow?—A cow and a heifer and a stirk.

27,389. Any sheep?—No. [Mr Gordon.—You get keeping for these from the crofters?—Yes.]

27,390. Do you pay them a grazing rent?—Yes.

27,391. How much?—Fifteen shillings for the cow, and when there is a spate on the meadows they will put their own cattle on the parks, and we have to put ours to the side of the road.

27,392. Do you pay any other grazing rent besides the 15s.?—We buy the wintering out of the sales.

27,393. The grazing rent includes the cow and the stirk, I suppose?—No, I pay for the stirk to another farmer.

27,394. What do you pay for it?—One pound.

27,394*a*. And that is your whole stock?—Yes.

27,395. Mr Gordon.—This deer park you say is at your door?—Yes, 20 yards.

27,396. What kind of grass is on the nearest side of the park to you?—Good grass.

27,397. Is it old wood or young wood?—Old wood; there is no young wood, and there is a lot of arable land.

27,398. And is it near?—The farthest off is not far away.

27,399. The farthest off is beyond Achness.—Yes.

27,400. Is there any arable in the deer park except that at Achness?—No.

27,401. But there is grazing on the side of the park next you?—Yes.

27,402. And are there more people in your immediate neighbourhood?—Six cottars.

27,403. Are they in the village of Altas or near you?—Just close to us.

27,404. The Chairman.—What is the total number of cottars on the Rosehall estate? [Mr Forsyth, factor.—Nineteen yearly tenants holding houses and gardens; these are cottars.]

27,405. And how many crofters? [Mr Forsyth, factor.—Thirty-eight small tenants under lease, holding pasture and arable land, and ten under the Crofters Commission, and ten feuars.]

27,406. That is the whole, is it?—That is the whole.

JOHN FORSYTH, Factor for Rosehall (71)—examined.

27,407. The Chairman.—You are factor on the Rosehall estate?—Yes.

27,408. How long have you been factor?—Since 1880.

27,409. You have a statement to submit?—Yes, a few notes.

27,410. Just read it.—Rosehall estate extends to 6500 acres, of which there are 900 in the deer park, about 1000 in wood, and 2782, in fact almost 3000, let to tenants under lease, pasture and arable, and 1600 moor ground. The balance is accounted for as pasture and meadow land by the Kyle side liable to be flooded by high tide and spates in the river. The deer park is a small one, enclosed, and adds much to the amenity of the place, and is largely or solely the policy ground; and if crofters were set down on it this amenity would be done away with. It consists of land wholly unsuited for crofters in my opinion; only a few acres of it are green land, being patches on the roadside. The whole of it I may say is hard barren rocky ground and never intended by nature for cultivation. It is only fit for a few deer or sheep, and I am perfectly satisfied you will confirm my view when you go over the ground. To give you an idea of how liberally and generously my constituents, the Scottish Provident Institution, who are merely bondholders in possession, have dealt with the tenants and feuars on Rosehall, I will give you a few instances. The witness, Malcolm Munro, succeeded a feuar who held 22 acres at £20, 10s. Of this he had let a portion, and the balance he now holds at Mr Gordon's valuation, £6. William Munro, mason, along with his father, held a feu of 12 acres arable and 16 pasture, with feu-duty of £7. This is now £6, 10s.

27,411. That was when the feu was turned into a lease?—Yes. They were relieved of the feus. Then, Mr Sutherland, who was before you, holds three lots, Nos. 51, 57 and 58; 51 has 18 acres arable and 32 acres pasture, in all 50 acres, for which he paid £20, 10s.; it is now £7, 10s. Nos. 57 and 50, with 169 acres pasture were £6, now £4. Thus he pays now £11, 10s. instead of £26, 10s. as formerly. These are a few instances of how liberally and generously the Scottish Provident Institution has dealt with the tenants and feuars. Several of the feuars have been relieved of their feus and have become tenants at reduced rents; a few of them hold feus still which they would not give up. In 1887 it was arranged that Mr Gordon of Elgin, now one of yourselves, should go over the whole place. The rental then paid by feuars and tenants was £820, 15s. Mr Gordon's valuation of these subjects was £346, 13s. 6d., and this is practically the rent that they now pay. It is not quite exactly the rent, because a few of the feuars held on and their places were valued with the expectation of giving them up.

27,412. Did Mr Gordon reduce the rent from £820, 15s. to £346, 13s. 6d.?—Yes

27,413. By between 50 and 60 per cent.?—Yes. There are 38 tenants holding under lease arable and pasture ground: 19 yearly tenants of houses, a few of them with a little pasture, and 10 under the Crofters Commission all holding land; and 10 feuars. Thus there are 77 tenants on this small estate. The leaseholders' rents vary from 25s. to £75 and £100. That is the rent of a farm that was alluded to: it is a farm on Invernauld estate. It was part of the Rosehall property at one time, and the Institution bought it back from Principal Geddes a year ago. The rents of the yearly tenants vary from £1 to £10, and those under the Crofters Commission from £1 to £8, 8s., and the feuars from £2 to £12, 10s. I am clearly of opinion, gentlemen, that when you inspect Rosehall you will experience considerable difficulty in finding ground on which it would be judicious to set down crofters.

27,414. But what about extension of grazings, is there a need for extension of grazings?—They all want additional ground if they can get it.

27,415. But do you think the desire is reasonable?—It is unreasonable, because it cannot be got on Rosehall. The moorland is very bad stuff, and the deer park is very bad stuff.

27,416. Mr Sutherland.—You say that you think the deer park is not very suitable for extension of grazings?—No, it is very poor stuff.

27,417. Haven't you heard otherwise to-day?—Oh, yes, but I have a different opinion; and I may also say that if the deer park was done away with I have no doubt putting the crofters on it would interfere with the amenity of the place very much.

27,418. No doubt, if you take land from one man and give it to another it is against the man from whom it is taken, but you heard that when the pasture was taken away the rents were put up?—That is a long long story; and as to those meadows that have been alluded to I found them let to the tenants who still hold them and they could not be altered, the meadows that are let to Mr Mackay and to Mr David Munro, Altas.

27,419. Are they held under lease?—Yes.

27,420. And they are part of the lease?—Yes.

27,421. We all know how generously the Scottish Provident Institution dealt with them, but you think there is no plan by which under any re-arrangement grazings could be given?—The moor ground is very poor ground.

27,422. What, may I ask, have you done with Invernauld, Principal Geddes' estate?—The Scottish Provident bought it.

27,423. What did they do with it?—They will be glad to sell it to you along with Rosehall.

27,424. But what have they done with it with regard to occupation?—The two tenants are in it, who were in it, and there is a lady living in the house for the summer months.

Lairg.

John Forsyth.

27,425. Was there a farm attached to it?—No.

27,426. So the tenancies remain as they were?—The tenancies remain as they were.

James Sutherland.

JAMES SUTHERLAND, Spinningdale, Bonar Bridge (73) —examined.

27,427. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—I was a crofter, but they did not leave my croft with me. I was evicted twice, and I may say I was evicted thrice. I was evicted before I was born, and twice since I was born.

27,428. Have you a written statement?—I have just: a great deal of statement. I come here to give evidence to the truth, and am bound by the author of truth to give evidence to the truth. I was born and lived thirty-two years at Claisnaprountanaich, north east of Achabadcaldie, beyond the estate of Pulrossie. I am well acquainted with the districts from Strath Carnaig Road to the east end of Achvaich, 5 miles long, and from the south of Clashnaprountanaich to the north boundary of the estate, four miles broad, that is 20 square miles. I have seen 32 crofters and 2 shepherds living on these 20 square miles. The best land and the best pasture is Achormlarie and Prontaich. That is the sheeprun, the crofters have not but the outskirts,—land that they themselves reclaimed out of moors and mosses and built their possessions and never received a shilling of help for reclamation, or a single caber of timber, without buying it to build their possessions. And when they were evicted they never received a sixpence as compensation for all their improvements, and none of them were in arrears, they lived in honesty, and without blemish. There are only 4 crofters and 1 shepherd now on these 20 square miles. Now, if these 20 square miles are to be given to crofters, as I hope they will, and if they have enough of land and pasture, 24 crofters will be plenty settlers on it. Twenty-four ought to make an independent living, and pay their rent and their local taxes annually; that is 12 crofters on each side of the river Evelix. There are four and twenty names of the crofters: on the north side there were Alexander Murray, John Murray, Donald Murray (brothers), Achvaich, Strath above; Donald Murray, William Murray, Hugh Munro. These are the Murrays whose ancestors were in Achormlarie and Achvaich since three hundred years ago, but they were evicted by Sutherland Walker. The next crofters are Hugh Gunn, Laggan; Alexander Murray, George Mackay, William Mackay, Philip Macculloch, Gordon, and two old maids—I don't remember their names—Donald Fraser, John Ross, Sleasdarie. These are 15 crofters that were on the north side of the river, with the sheep run Achormlarie, the very best land and pasture. The crofters on the south side of the 20 square miles:—Widow Macdonald, Corbinsunevan; Duncan Ross, Hugh Graham, Hugh Murray, George Leith, Cannabad; Ross, Craganskorie; James Sutherland, Corrienagauch; David Sutherland, Clachnaprountarich; Angus Barclay, Clachnaharraich; William Murray, Craignach; Donald Mackay, Charles Keith, Widow Mackay, Abigail Murray, Alexander Dingwall, William Ross, George Murray, 7 crofters of Mossnagarr; George Ross, Balcha; 18 crofters and the sheeprun of Prountnach now add 10 crofters there. There are 2 already in Cannabad. If these 20 square miles are to be given to crofters, as I hope it will, let them live independently. Before I read anything more—I made a forgetfulness before Lord Napier's Commission, and I was determined I would not do that again, because I took up the stock and the crop of my father at Prountnach, and the stock I saw on my father's place, on the 9th August 1883, when I stood before Lord Napier's Commission, the stock was:—three cows, two ponies, 50 sheep, about one and half dozen of hens; 18 bolls of oatmeal; 24 to 26 bolls of potatoes; and one half-acre under turnip, and the stock that Mr Walker had on the crop of my father's place, that day when I was measuring the improvements that myself and my father made, was one white hare and one grouse. That was the stock of the landlord. That was all for crop, stock, and all. (2) District of Achabadcalie and Clashenglass. I have seen 18 crofters, and now there are only seven. There could be 2 more added. Some have three crofts and some two crofts and some one croft; but each of the nine can have two crofts. That will be more like justice than some having three and others only one and others none at all, but that is estate management. (3) The deer forest district from Colog to Whiteface is four miles long and, upon the average, one mile broad, that is four square miles. I have seen 24 crofters living on it, all evicted without compensation for their improvements. It is two keepers who are now the inhabitants of these four square miles. Names of the crofters that once were the inhabitants of this great forest:—Donald Munro, Loch Migdale; John Ross, Cannamoine; William Murray, William Fraser, James Matheson, Donald Ross, George Murray, Robert Mackenzie, Coulag; Janet Munro, Balnacuil—that is up in the woods there; George Leith, Thomas Ross, William Ross, Colin Ross, Spinningdale; James Barclay, William Murray, William Calder, Donald Chisholm, William Gunn, Donald Gunn, John Macdonald, Widow Gordon, Tachran; James Matheson, Alexander Chisholm, Balnacrag; Donald Gunn, Larichan; Robert Gordon, Lochfhad. I have seen these 24 crofters and a few dwellers and a meal mill in the glen near Loch Migdale, now in ruins, the last mill in the north highlands that should be put to ruins, for the dry summer or frosty winter never came in the north of Scotland but this mill had a supply of water to keep it shelling and grinding. The winter of 1837 was one of the severest winters that I have seen; all the mills in the Highlands were frozen up, but this little mill was working all that winter. Were it not, a famine would be in this vicinity, and now if the land is to be restored to its former state of cultivation this mill must be restored to its former order. I have seen it shelling and grinding 18 bolls of dry corn in a winter day, and all of us home by daylight. The deer in this imitation of a forest are making a destruction on the crofters to the north and south, on their corn and potatoes and their turnips, and those that are taking on themselves to be their owners never paid compensation for the damage done by them. I am in doubt whether the crofters cannot compel them to pay as these owners never milked one of them; they have no mark on their ears, or on their horns, never had them by a bridle on or a tether; they may name them, but they will not answer their name. I am in doubt that those owners had no more right to them than the crofters. Some of the crofts were planted, some not, and there could ten of these crofts be given to crofters, but the few deer must be evicted. (4) Spinningdale, West. In my former years I have seen 12 crofters from Lorvy to Balnolton. Their names are:—Hugh Murray, William Macrae, John Ross, George Murray, George Murray, weaver; Donald Duff, James Chisholm, Alexander Murray, Robert Ross, John Munro, Balnacoil; Alexander Grant, George Ross, Balnolton; now only had four single crofts, which had not but one croft there is one that had two crofts, and one had five crofts. This is estate management. In East Spinningdale I have seen 14 crofters, where now there are 7. The names of the former are:—Roderick Munro, William Calder, James Barclay, Donald Calder, Alexander Calder, Widow Chisholm, Donald Gunn, Joseph Fraser, William Gunn, Donald Gunn, John Graham, John Macdonald, William Murray, Janet Gunn. On the bleaching ground of the old cotton mill I have seen 10 crofters, and I have seen a number of feuars and dwellers. A miller paid £14 of rent for the mill that is now converted into a stable and byre; a threshing mill for threshing nine or ten rigs of stooks; the meal mill of Spinningdale was from time immemorial, and what was done put the crofters and dwellers in this vicinity to a great deal of trouble, by going 10 or 12, I may say 15 miles to Evelix or Skelbo mills, while their fathers had a mill and kiln beside them. This is estate management, to put down the two mills of Spinningdale and Glanen. And as for the Migdale mill, if a fortnight of dry weather, or a fortnight of frosty weather comes, it will not have a drop of water to turn it. With your permission, gentlemen, I submit a copy of the lease my father had, and you will see the rent after the land had been under cultivation for nineteen years. 'Skibo Castle, June '14th, 1814, To John Ross. I grant you a lease 'of 8 acres of land at Clashnaprountnach, lying north 'east of Achuebadcaldie, on the estate of Pulrossie, 'in the parish of Creich, for nineteen years, and your 'lifetime afterwards. The first nineteen years begin 'at Whitsunday 1814, the first three years 1s. per 'annum, the remainder of the nineteen years 2s. 6d. 'per acre per annum, and during your lifetime 5s. per 'acre per annum, but you are not allowed to assign or 'sublet any part or parts of it until the whole of it is 'sufficiently enclosed and the one half cultivated 'without binding on my respect. Signed William 'S. Dempster. Donald Murray, witness, William 'Forsyth, witness.' 'Skibo Castle, May 15th, 1819. 'I transfer and assign all rights and titles of this lease 'to John Ross, Sayar, who hath relinquished his lease in 'the favour of the said David Sutherland from Abers- 'cross, in the parish of Golspie, who is now bound to 'perform all rights and titles of this lease to John 'Ross, who has relinquished his lease in his favour, who 'is bound to pay all arrears that may be due by John 'Ross. Signed William S. Dempster.' I would not agree to that. The names of the crofters who once lived on the bleaching ground:—Kirsty Sutherland, William Morrison, Hugh Munro, Kirsty Ross, Donald Bethune, John Munro, Hugh Main, Hugh Fraser, miller and crofter; John Gunn, William Ross, 10 in all. It has now 4 crofters; 3 single crofts, but 4 dwellers. All the rest of the land is with one man; that is estate management. I hope the government will do justice in dividing the estate soon. (5) District of Muir of Acharry. I have seen 17 crofters here, and now there are 9; 4 single crofts, 3 double crofts, and 2 occupying 3 crofts. If justice would divide, he would give 2 crofts to 8, and 1 single. Oh, for justice and righteousness to divide the land. (6) District east of Ospisdale. I have seen 26 crofters here; their names are:—Peter Macdonald, Rhian; Donald Murray, Crocan; Simon Macdonald, Confluch; Hugh Macdonald and Hugh Mackay, Restakih; James Mackay and Donald Mackay, Londine; John Fraser, Lonastle; Angus Mackay, Andrew Macdonald, Laid; Roderick Gray, Craiglea; Murdo Macleod and Hugh Macleod, Navag; Donald Ross, William Grant, Brook, David Mackay, Muir; George Mackay, Alexander Macdonald, Coplan; Archie Cameron, Donald Macintosh, William Ross, Colin Campbell, Bardnalean; Andrew Campbell, Back of the Wood; and now it is 12 crofts that are on this estate.

Lairg.

James Sutherland.

My loss or the house of Dunrobin's profit on my ancestral home is £3 per annum. Since seventy-three years ago, my grandfather, James Sutherland, Cnoc-na-foor was paying £2, but a very heavy statute labour, which consisted in my three grand-uncles fighting with noble Earl of Sutherland, until the Highland Chiefs and their clansmen were slain, and Prince Charlie routed at Culloden, while at the same time, my grandfather, Nicolas Sutherland, fought at the Little Ferry, until they were destroyed or drowned, all in the year 1745. My loss or the house of Skibo's profit on my father and our family, during thirty-two years from 1819 to 1852, is £4 per annum, and forty-one years since, if not, it was not the fault of the improvement done at Clashnaprountnach. My loss and the house of Ospisdale's profit on my improvement at Balnacrag, Spinningdale, from 23rd February 1852 to 1864, £1 per annum, since twenty-nine years ago, and here I am, a pauper, living on 3d. a day for six days in the week, and nothing to eat or drink on the Sabbath.

27,429. Is that the whole?—I have been all Monday last measuring the breadth and length of the colony that I have my lot in. I found it to be the south side of Pulrossie, and the length that I found it to be 1700 yards long, and I measured the breadth of it. At 300 yards I found it to be 135 yards broad.

Then at 600 yards I found it to give					133
„	900	„	„	„	40
„	1200	„	„	„	47
„	1500	„	„	„	33
„	1700	„	„	„	110

That is the size whatever it may come to, three acres and a cow maybe.

27,430. Was that written out by yourself?—Yes.

27,431. Do you pay any rent at present?—No, because I am a pauper, and the Parochial Board is paying rent for me, but I was paying a rent for twenty-seven and twenty-eight years, £1 for a house. I had no land since I was evicted in 1864 out of the croft.

27,432. Where was the croft?—At Spinningdale.

27,433. And who was your landlord?—Mr Gilchrist Ross, and when he died I was evicted.

27,434. But who was your landlord at the time you lost your holding?—It was under trustees.

27,435. And how long have you been getting assistance from the Parochial Board?—Two years, 3d. a day, or 1s. 6d. a week.

27,436. That information you have given us in that paper, is most of it from your own knowledge?—My own knowledge, because I knew everything so well, I was thirty-two years there, and since the year 1852, when I was evicted, I was as well acquainted with all these districts. I could show you the ruins of that house that we lived in.

27,437. Were you born at Spinningdale?—I was born at Clashnaprountanaich.

27,438. That is where your father had his holding?—Yes. He lived there from 1819; he died in 1849, and I was evicted in 1852, myself and my wife.

27,439. Was that the first time you were evicted?—Yes, except when I was evicted before I was born.

27,440. And were you evicted a second time in 1864?—Yes, I was twelve years there and paying £4 a year, and I was evicted in the year 1864. The estate was put under trustees when Mr Gilchrist died.

27,441. Mr Sutherland.—What became of the holding you had at Balchraggan?—That Dunnet man has it, with all the men outside of the road, this Dunnet man that got money and converted it into a byre and stable.

27,442. You were evicted for the purpose of adding your holding to his?—To the holding of the Dunnet man. Of the whole 10 acres there is not one of them who has 3 acres.

27,443. And they never asked whether you were to get a place or not. Never troubled themselves about it?—Never.

27,444. Now, you spoke about a tract of land that included 20 square miles?—Yes.

27,445. And the whole of that is without inhabitants, is it?—Yes.

27,446. And what was the deer forest you referred to?—It is between Spinningdale and Achvaich, just half a mile broad at some part, but it goes west and east and there is 4 miles in length, and all the crofters were evicted and put out of it.

27,447. And are there no sheep at all grazed on that land?—Not one, but in Achormlarie; it is under sheep now, but I think the trustees on the estate of Skibo have it since Sutherland Walker was evicted or put over Bonar Bridge.

27,448. Has Mr Ross got it?—He has had it for two or three years.

27,449. But this land that you said was used as a sort of deer forest, is it used for the purpose of rearing game only?—Oh, to be sure, there is game where there are plantations, and some of the crofts were in the plantations.

27,450. Are there no cattle or sheep grazed at all on these 4 square miles?—Not a mortal thing.

27,451. And would it be suitable, in your opinion, for making new holdings?—Yes, what is not planted, but where the holdings were planted I don't think you can help.

27,452. Are there clear spaces in it?—Yes, there are clear spaces, that they have never planted in.

Lairg.

James Sutherland.

27,453. Could that be made into arable land?—It was arable before to be sure, but it is mostly now going back to its natural state. But a man getting it at the rent we had here, three years for 1s. and 2s. 6d. per acre for nineteen years, surely he might improve it, and I would get nine hundred and ninety-nine years instead of nineteen.

27,454. But you know the Crofters Act gives you nine hundred and ninety nine years, so you would have that and a fair rent. You think holdings could be made there?—Yes, and men lived in honesty and made their living there. If I was a young man I would rather take it than take the land in the reclamations from the Duke of Sutherland this year, because that land was never reclaimed, it was only scraped If it had been reclaimed by the men of Sutherland it would have been different, but it was men from England and gaffers from the railroad. I was working at it myself, but such a thing I never saw, it was not reclamation at all. It was 20 to 18 inches deep, but not a thing was proper there.

27,455. It was jobbed, was it?—It was not trying to make the work good they were, but how many acres they would go over in the day.

27,456. And you were working on it and saw it?—I was working on it for six weeks, I have worked in Novar and other places, I was trenching there, but I never saw a trench made but the man continually was after us with a gauge, and the measurement was 18 inches; but there is not 5 inches there.

27,457. Are you of opinion that the reclamations were not properly made?—I am certain of it.

Alexander Mackay.

ALEXANDER MACKAY, Merchant, Bonar Bridge, (50) —examined.

27,458. The Chairman.—You are not a crofter?—Not a crofter.

27,459. Do you wish to make a statement to us?—Yes, I wish to make a reference to plantations on the estates of Balblair and Skibo. I was not satisfied—it was not clear in my mind whether these lands would come under the scope of your inquiry. Were we sure of that my name would have been sent to the Secretary of the Commission long before now. What I have to say, with regard to the plantations on the estate of Skibo, is that there is a tract of land from the march between the Duke's estate and Skibo, about four miles north east of Bonar-Bridge from Loch Migdale to the shore. There is an acreage in that plantation of about 1500, or thereabout, and that plantation is very suitable and well adapted for the pasture land of cattle and sheep. I don't know of any other plantation in Sutherlandshire which is better adapted for the pasture of sheep and cattle than that. Near Bonar Bridge there was a township where 7 or 8 crofters resided in very comfortable circumstances. When Mr Sutherland of Skibo, as proprietor, came to the district he evicted 5 of these crofters in this township of Swordale near Bonar Bridge. They had a pasture right of all this plantation, and by having this pasture land they were in comfortable circumstances, and after their removal the plantations were partly enclosed. They are not at present altogether enclosed, but they are partly enclosed, and these plantations are held as a game preserve or for sporting purposes. It has been only for a period of fifteen or twenty years till last winter. I understand that it has been let last winter to a farmer in Little Creich, but I know quite well, for a fact, that the parties I am representing here to-day have made repeated applications to the estate management of Skibo, with the view of taking these woods as pasture and giving a fair rent therefor. I am also led to understand by a party that the estate management refused to let it but to one man. That is all I have to say with regard to the plantations on the Skibo estate except that a portion of that plantation is a complete deer forest, that deer always reside in it and these deer for the last five or six years or especially since the last two or three have been making ravages upon the crofters' holdings in the township of Migdale, whereby they suffered considerable loss. I am also well aware that the estate management have enclosed one lot and another crofter has been enclosing his own lot, but I know it is a great complaint and a great loss to those people how their crops are destroyed by the deer. That is all that I have to say. I am quite confident that the crofters are able and willing to give a rent for these woodlands if they get them for pasture land. With regard to another estate in the parish of Creich, the estate of Balblair, there is a tract of woodland from the station of Invershin, extending north-east for about three miles and one and a half miles in the average in breadth. The acreage in the Valuation roll, I understand, is 850 acres, or thereby, but I understand it might be more. In the year 1824, I was told by old crofters on that estate, the estate was in the hands of Mr Dempster at that time, and this tract of land was held as a sheiling by the crofters on the estate of Balblair, seven or eight in number (it is one farm now), and there were several crofters in these woodlands which is a plantation now. These were all evicted, the plantations were enclosed and have been held since then—with the exception of some years—as a game preserve. These parties were evicted from the low lands for the sake of making one farm, the consolidated farm is in the hands of Mr Mackenzie, Portna-lic, and I understand from one of the farmers themselves that the present farmer in Balblair has offered one of his fields and the proprietrix would not consent to that arrangement. The farmer himself has informed me that he would be quite willing to give a part of his farm to the crofters for extending their holdings if the proprietrix would consent to it. With regard to this plantation the whole of this land was a common on the estate of Balblair. There are a number of crofters beyond this plantation who have some pasture land, but they will be very willing to get this plantation for pasture, because it would be so suitable for wintering their sheep. I have nothing further to add as to the parish of Creich, further than that with the exception of another farm which is called Achinduich near the boundaries of Lairg, I don't know from my own experience the nature of that hill ground so well. I know the arable farm, and I know that several crofters could be very comfortably settled there, and so far as the pasture of that ground is concerned I am not sure as to the value of it, but I am quite confident that if that farm was made into, or granted for crofter settlements, it would be very well adapted; and there is another portion of that farm which has recently been let to a farmer named Mr Young, and that is low lying lands, near the station of Invershin, where there were seven or eight crofters in very comfortable circumstances, and I don't know where a crofters' settlement could be made in a better situation; it is lying near the shore, it has facilities of pasture, and the arable is very good.

Lairg.

Alexander Mackay.

27,460. I gather from your statement that you are appearing as representing the crofters of the district?—I am representing the crofters of the district of Migdale, Tullich, and Swordale, where there were seven or eight crofters, and there is now only one.

27,461. And were you appointed at a public meeting?—Yes, on the 5th of this month.

27,462. So that the statement you have now made is a statement representing their views with regard to the lands you have mentioned?—Yes.

27,463. Mr Gordon.—Supposing you gave these woods to the crofters, what arrangement would you propose to make in the case of the woods being replanted?—So far as I am able to tell you I don't think but it will be a long time before it will be necessary to replant these woods.

27,464. Not very long in places I know of: some of it is ready for cutting just now?—Oh, yes, a great part has been cut, but a great part has not come of age.

27,465. But assuming it was full grown within the next twenty years, what arrangements would you make in connection with the proprietor's right to sirg.

lexander
ackay.

replant?—In the next twenty years probably the greater part of that land where the wood I refer to is may be cultivated.

27,466. Then you would prevent the proprietor from replanting it; do I understand that?—I leave that in the hands of Her Majesty's Government.

27,467. Well, but I am not satisfied with that answer; I would like to know what proposal you would make?—There is one proposal: those parts of it which would pay better for planting might be replanted.

27,468. Yes, but you are aware that if the land is once handed over to the crofters it is assigned permanently from the proprietor. Now, if you take away these woods you prevent him from replanting. I don't suppose you would wish to prevent him cutting the woods, but you prevent him from replanting them?—Oh, that is possible, that is possible, I don't see what would be the best way to do that.

27,469. I am afraid the matter of your proposal goes beyond the scope of our Commission.

27,470. Mr Sutherland.—You say that these woods, as a matter of fact, have been let as pasture?—They have.

27,471. You did not hear of any difficulty arising about replanting, did you?—I never heard the question discussed.

27,472. But you think that it is a contingency that might arise?—Oh, it is a probable contingency no doubt.

27,473. Do you think it could easily be met when it did arise?—I should think so.

27,474. And if the proprietors, or the trustees, or whoever is responsible for it, have let that woodland for pasture now they must have taken some precautions such as have been referred to if they thought it necessary?—I would think so. [Mr Gordon.—From year to year.]

27,475. But would the crofters take it from year to year if they got it?—Possibly, they would, but I would think they would be better pleased to have it for all time.

27,476. But it is a fact that they offered for it and did not get it?—Yes.

27,477. And that another man offered for it and he got it?—Yes, that is a fact.

27,478. The Chairman.—You began by expressing considerable doubt whether plantations came under the remit?—I did so.

27,479. I did not wish to interrupt your statement, but I confess I don't think plantations do come under the remit?—Well, my lord, I am not certain whether they would or not, and with that reservation I made the statement.

27,480. Yes, I observed you were very careful to mack that reservation.

27,481. Mr Sutherland.—But the question was put to you about the difficulty of replanting, and it is a difficulty that would arise in any circumstances in dealing with the plantation?—It is always the case with regard to plantations that they must, some time or other, be replanted.

27,482. And even although there were a difficulty, don't you see a way of overcoming it?—There are various ways of overcoming it. A great tract of that plantation on the Skibo estate where several crofters were before is a fit subject to be reclaimed in comparison with the land the crofters of Sutherland are reclaiming.

27,483. And even if the timber were left upon it, don't you see a way of obviating the difficulty if any difficulty arose? The difficulty arises at present, I understand, from the fact that the timber is the property of one man, and the grazings the property of another, but if they both became the property of the one person there would be no difficulty?—No difficulty whatsoever.

William Anderson.

WILLIAM ANDERSON, Factor for Balnagown (35) —examined.

27,484. The Chairman.—You desire to say something to us I understand?—I hardly anticipated that anything would be said about the Balnagown ground, but as it has been referred to I will read a general statement which I have written out for the most part since I came. I may premise that it refers altogether to the Balnagown property, in the parish of Creich, and county of Sutherland, and consists of the Benmore and Loubcroy shootings, otherwise Invercassley sheep farm. This ground lies between the river Oykel (which is the march between Ross and Sutherlandshires) and the river Cassley, and extends as far as the watershed on the Benmore Assynt ridge. The acreage is about 50,000 Ordnance Survey, and comprises about 500 acres of wood, in small patches, and perhaps 170 to 200 acres or so of arable land, the bulk of this being at Invercassley sheep farm house, close to Cassleybridge, and the remainder being distributed at distant intervals at the shepherds' and gamekeepers' houses: the balance being uncultivable moorland, unquestionably suitable for sheep and game alone. The altitude of the entire ground is high: at its lowest and most accessible point it is not less than 500 feet, or so, and it rapidly increases till near Benmore Assynt, where it is over 3000 feet high. I should think about nineteen-twentieths are from 700 to 800 feet above sea level. There never have been crofters or small tenants of any kind on the land in any part of it: at any rate I can find no trace in the Balnagown estate office books or records of such, with the solitary exception of the merchant and carpenter and small householder at Rosehall, and these had been paying rent for but a comparatively short number of years. For a very long period back the ground has been let as a sheep farm to one farmer, the present tenant, being a member of the family of Kennedys, who have held the farm during the past half century. Prior to 1875 the entire rent derived from the ground as a sheep farm was £800, and it is only within a period of about forty years that the ground was let for sporting purposes, the income derived from this source beginning at £150. In 1875 the rent of the sheep farm became £1400, but on several occasions in recent years the tenants received an abatement of rent, the largest amount given in one year being £500. At Whitsunday 1893, when the lease terminated, the tenants positively refused to renew their tenancy at a higher rent than £700, producing figures to prove that during the greater part of the lease the most careful working of the farm had not yielded them a percentage of profit after paying rent and expenses. As the landlord knew the tenants to be men of great experience in sheep farming and as he did not believe the farm could be let to greater advantage in such depressed times, he relet the farm to the old tenants at this large reduction of 50 per cent.

Lairg.
William Anderson.

The shooting rental on the other hand has been increasing, and there is no reason to believe that if circumstances continue as they are the assessable income derived from this source will diminish. On the contrary it may be expected by judicious management to increase to a considerable extent. I may mention that both landlord and tenants have expended a considerable sum of money (about £800) upon the sheep farm houses within the past twenty years; and a large outlay has to be made very soon upon the shepherds' houses. This year a sum of about £700 has been spent in repairing and improving Benmore Lodge, the work being done by local tradesmen.

If I am asked what I have deduced from the past history of this ground and from my experience of estate management as it applies to such a district, I should say without hesitation that nothing can be gained by the proprietor, or by the people of Creich parish by interfering with the existing condition of things as they apply to such a district as I am particularly referring to. If it was suggested to me for instance that crofters could be located with advantage upon any part of the Balnagown property in Sutherlandshire, I should think at once that the suggestion was made at random, or was a purely fanciful one. My reasons for this may be stated as follows:—(1) the great lack of cultivated or cultivable land without which crofters or small farmers could not exist. The proof of this can be seen by any one travelling the ground,—north, south, east or west: and additional proof of the comparative uselessness of the land already cultivated, lying as it does near the rivers Oykel and Cassley may be found in the fact that every other year the crops, such as they are, are completely destroyed by floods. Moreover, the corn is frequently cut in a green state, and is for the most part worth very little. (2) The inaccessibility of the ground. At its nearest point it is ten miles from a railway station, and there is but one road, traversing only about one half of the ground. The greenest and best grazing parts of the farm indeed occupy the most outlying districts. (3) The utter hopelessness of expecting that if men of capital and great experience like the present tenants, with skilled managers and shepherds at their back, find the farm such an unprofitable concern, crofters or small farmers could exist for any time, however reasonable their rents might be. (4) The present depressed state of sheep farming, the very small prices received for stock, coupled with the expense of management, wintering, &c. Imagine a number of small tenants without an acre of arable land, meeting the requirements of wintering, and the many other expenses attending a sheep farm. (5) The great loss to the parish at large which a diminished rental would entail. The sheep farms of Creich are certainly of importance for rate-paying purposes, and it would be most unwise to risk a large diminution of their valuation; but it is in connection with the shootings in the parish, that one is struck with the immense importance of conserving such a satisfactory state of things. It can be readily seen how very materially the burden of rates is relieved. When it is recollected that the rental of the shootings in Creich is almost one fourth of the entire valuation. It is surely of the utmost consequence that nothing should be done to lessen this valuation, or to interfere with its possible increase in future years. When land bears a double valuation in this way, I think it is hardly necessary to say that it would be excessively unwise to take any measures whereby the valuation may be hazarded, or may disappear altogether. The existing system, moreover, provides remunerative employment for as many people as any other system. I imagine no one thinking carefully of this particular case can believe that a larger number of people can be benefited under any change than the shepherds presently on the ground, and the persons employed by the shooting tenants in so many different ways.

Lairg.

William Anderson.

27,485–7. Mr Sutherland.—You stated that the Balnagown property in Sutherlandshire (to which I understand you limit your remarks) never had crofters on it?—That is my belief from what I can find.

27,488. Founded upon what?—Upon evidence. I have been able to go back nearly a hundred years. We have a very old book of plans in the estate office, almost a hundred years old, and I don't see the remotest trace of such tenancies.

27,489. Who occupied the land in Glencassley, and cultivated it?—The sheep farmer of the time.

27,490. Who lived in the houses, the ruins of which are visible?—Their shepherds I presume.

27,491. How many shepherds would there have been?—Probably nine or ten shepherds and their families.

27,492. How many are on it now?—About the same number.

27,493. And there are no remains of houses except where the shepherds lived?—Of course, I don't pretend to have travelled over the whole, but I have seen no other.

27,494. Did you see any signs of old cultivation?—None apart from the shepherds.

27,495. You have seen no plough ridges along the margin of the river, have you?—I have seen a considerable tract of very green attractive-looking land.

27,496. How was that made green, have you any idea?—Naturally. I think sometimes the naturally green land is mistaken for land cultivated anciently.

27,497. What are the ridges we see there and the old enclosures?—I have no recollection of that. I do not pretend, of course, to have gone over it all, and I do not say that such may not exist, but I have not seen them. For at least ninety years no person has paid rent to Balnagown for that entire tract of country except one man.

Lairg.

William Anderson.

27,498. Did you say—I may have mistaken you—that there was a general concurrence among the people of the parish of Creich that the present arrangement is the best one?—Certainly not.

27,499. You merely said you thought it was?—I expressed my own opinion to the effect.

27,500. But you did mention the people of the parish of Creich?—I said it would be to their disadvantage that any change should take place; that refers more particularly to the Balnagown part of the parish, as the rule may not apply all over.

27,501. And you think it is to their greatest advantage that matters should remain as they are?—I do most assuredly.

27,502. Is it to the advantage of a man, do you think, when he wishes land not to get it?—Very often it is.

27,503. But you would allow, would you not, that he is a pretty good judge of that himself?—No, I would not allow anything of the sort. Of course, there may be exceptions, but the exception does not prove the rule.

27,504. By no means, that is just my point—you are the exception, and they are the rule.—No, excuse me, you rather evade my answer.

27,505. I am not under examination, if you please. But you stated that a fourth of the assessable rental of the parish would be done away with if the land were opened up?—There is a very strong presumption that that would be the case.

27,506. But you understand surely that it is the subjects that are assessable and not the people who are there?—I don't quite follow the distinction.

27,507. The assessment might remain whoever was there, and would, as a matter of fact, remain?—Not the double assessment. If you substitute crofters for a sheep farmer, the presumption is that the shooting tenant will disappear.

27,508. Oh, dear, no; crofters' common grazings have a sporting value as well as a deer forest; is that not so?—That is not my experience.

27,509. But, as a matter of fact, the holdings are let to a shooting tenant—I don't say they get the same return, but they get a considerable return. But whoever holds it, the value remains there, and would be assessed?—Assuredly, a certain value would remain.

27,510. It might be a little higher in certain circumstances than in others?—I am not prepared to allow that; but some value would remain.

27,511. Am I right in assuming that the greater part of the Balnagown property is in Ross-shire?—Yes.

27,512. So we may have another opportunity of meeting you when we deal with that county?—No doubt.

[Adjourned.]

TWENTY-SEVENTH SITTING.

MELVICH, SUTHERLANDSHIRE,

October 4, 1893.

Present:—

DAVID BRAND, Esq., Advocate, Sheriff of Ayr, and Chairman of the Crofters Commission, Chairman.
ANGUS SUTHERLAND, Esq., M.P.
JAMES NOEL MULLER FORSYTH, Esq.
GEORGE GORDON, Esq.
WILLIAM MACKENZIE, Esq., Secretary.

WILLIAM MACKENZIE, Trantlemore, Strath-Halladale (48) —examined.

27,513. The Chairman.—You are a crofter, I presume?—Yes.

27,514. What rent do you pay?—£5, 10s.

27,515. Was your rent dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—It was left the same as it was.

27,516. I see the holding is in name of Widow Janet Macdonald or Mackenzie, its area being 5 acres arable, 2 acres 1 rood outrun, and a share in the common pasture of 8000 acres common to the townships of Bighouse, Allt-a'-mhuillin, Kealsary, and Trantlemore?—Yes.

27,517. Is the share of the hill according to the rent?—It is supposed to be.

27,518. Have you a written statement?—Yes, a few words.

27,519. We shall be glad if you will read it.—I may say that as I have taken down the areas myself I cannot say that they are precisely correct, as I had no means of making an exact estimate of the extent of the grounds, and consequently you will excuse me if there be little mistakes regarding areas; I only give approximate figures here:—'The area drained by the Halladale, including the district occupied by the townships of Portskerra and Melvich, extends to 68,000 acres. The Bighouse sheep farm takes 45,000 acres. The tenants on both sides of the Halladale have 18,800 acres, and the remainder goes to the Portskerra and Melvich tenants, making to each of the latter a farm of 27½ acres; to each of the Halladale tenants one of 360 acres, and to the tenant of the sheep farm one of 45,000 acres, including 8000 acres now let as a deer forest.

'The grounds now occupied by the Bighouse sheep-farm, and the part now let as a deer forest, at one time maintained a population of 60 families, distributed as follows:—East Side—Golval to Culfearn, 24. West Side—Kirkton to Upper Bighouse, 10. Total for lower end of farm, 34 families. Evicted in 1807 on upper end of farm—Brachru and Dalshuag, 3 families; Forsinain, 5; Forsinard, 10; Craggie, 3; Dyke (evicted 1828), 5; total 26 families. I do not maintain that it would be wise to cut up that farm again into 60 crofts, though, if that were done, you would give each a farm of 750 acres, and the standard of comfort would be infinitely superior to that of the average crofter anywhere else in this neighbourhood, even the much-envied Halladale crofters, whose average farm is 360 acres, not to speak of Portskerra and Melvich, where the average is 27½ acres of land of the most wretched description.

'If this Royal Commission is anxious to find out land for small farms, there is here a subject which will make at least thirty nice farms of 1500 acres each. But some, though they confess to the suitableness of the lower parts of the Strath for small farms, may object that it is nonsense to try farming in the highest reaches of the Halladale—in Forsinain, Forsinard, Dyke, &c.; that the altitude of these places, with exposure to frosts and storms renders cultivation out of the question there.

'I may state here that six and twenty families lived there in comfort and plenty in former times—in times when there were no roads, no railway, no communication with the markets of the world, and no improved agricultural implements such as there are now. I have been conversant all my life with the men and women born there, the descendants of the old tenants, and it was one life-long grief to them that they had to leave their comfortable homes and be sent to live in places already fully occupied and stocked. One instance of many is that of Donald Sinclair, who was evicted from Forsinain and sent to a farm in Trantlemore. He drove down his sheep—a flock of 100—at Whitsunday 1807, and at Whitsunday 1808 only 12 of the entire flock remained alive—the result of taking stock from good ground to inferior ground already more than fully stocked. I am informed by those who intimately knew the circumstances of the tenants in the upper part of Halladale that there were no more comfortable tenants in the north of Scotland—a fact which I do not doubt, knowing as I do the quality of the arable lands there, and the extent and excellence of the hill pasture.

'I know there is an attempt—a deliberate attempt—made in this country to show that there is little or no land in the Highlands fit for small or medium-sized farms of the mixed agricultural and pastoral sort. Such statements are generally made by factors and deer-foresters, and supported by certain favourites and flunkeys, if I be allowed the expression; but to us who, with a life-long experience of hill-farming, have an intimate knowledge of the country in the Highlands, and whose policy is to preserve our race, all these statements are a delusion and a snare, made to strengthen the hands of those whose policy is to preserve the game.

'Now, sir, we hope, sincerely hope, that this Royal Commission, to whose labours we look forward with eager expectation, will help to do something to mitigate the state of matters in the Highlands, and to weaken the hands of those who are fast turning our country into a huge sporting ground.

(Signed) 'WILLIAM MACKENZIE.'

27,520. Were you appointed at a public meeting?—Yes.

27,521. And you appear here as a delegate?—Yes.

27,522. Representing certain townships?—In Strath-Halladale.

27,523. And I think these are the townships you mentioned?—Yes; I made a passing mention of other townships which I have no power to speak for, but which were connected with the district, such as Melvich and Port-Skerra.

27,524. Just tell us again the townships for which you specially appear. Is Bighouse one?—Upper Bighouse is one; Allt-a-mhuilinn, Trantlemore, Bun-na-h-amhuinn, Trantlebeg, Croick, Dalhalvag, Craigton, Earr, Achamore, Culfearn.

27,525. Is there a general desire on the part of the crofters in these townships to get new holdings?—That is how I always understood it.

27,526. Is it a desire in that direction rather than a desire for additional grazing, or is it for both?—It is for both.

27,527. And does it consist with your knowledge that those who have very small holdings would be willing to leave these and take new and larger holdings in the district?—Certainly it does.

27,528. You refer us to Strath Halladale generally as ground that we ought to consider in the light of these desires?—I do, as a very suitable subject.

27,529. Do you say a subject suitable for new settlements or for grazing?—For both combined.

27,530. And you point to these former occupancies as evidence that this place could be repeopled again?—I do, and I may add that I can point to the tenants now resident on Halladale Strath.

27,531. You described these, I think, as the 'much-envied' tenants of Strath Halladale?—Yes.

27,532. Are they better off than their neighbours?—As a rule they are: the extent of their hill ground in connection with the arable land is greater, and that leaves them more liberty and more comfort.

Melvich, Sutherlandshire.

William Mackenzie.

27,533. They have a larger and better stock, have they, than their poorer and smaller neighbours?—Yes, that is so.

27,534. And are they in the general case more contented on that account than other crofters in the district?—I would understand that to be the case.

27,535. Mr Gordon.—Was the land which these crofters in your neighbourhood possess arable land when they came there, or did they reclaim it?—Those who were sent there at the time of the evictions do you mean?

27,536. Yes.—It was partly arable land when they came, and they have partly reclaimed it.

27,537. They reclaimed part of it?—The old crofts, after the evictions, in many cases were divided up into two or three divisions, and given to those who were evicted.

27,538. They were subdivided?—Yes; and, as a rule, there were improvements going on from time to time over all the crofts among the small tenants in the strath, as you would have seen yourself, sir.

27,539. You told us about a certain number of tenants occupying crofts in the neighbourhood of Forsinard?—Yes.

27,540. How many were there there?—Ten.

27,541. Where were they located?—On both sides of the river.

27,542. How far down from the station did the crofts come?—About a mile and a half or two miles from the railway station is the boundary line between Forsinain and Forsinard.

27,543. We came down that way, and it appeared to me that there was very little green ground, or any appearance of former cultivation in the neighbourhood of Forsinard?—But the fact is that there was a considerable amount of cultivation there.

27,544. In giving the area of the farm, you have done so, I have no doubt correctly, but it must be kept in view that a large extent of these 68,000 acres is beyond the railway, and practically valueless for crofting purposes, being away to the north-east Caithness side?—No, sir, I deny that statement; there is no part of that district that is valueless to the crofters.

27,545. How would you propose to occupy the land beyond the railway for instance?—By the sheep and cattle stock of the tenants who would occupy the arable lands in the adjacent parts; and without these high lying grounds I maintain that the arable land would not be of very much use in these high places.

27,546. But I am afraid that if you were to confine people up to that part of the country for their whole holding it would not be a safe place to keep stock in during the winter?—They have been there for hundreds of years, and I never heard any complaint.

27,547. That may be the general idea; it is before our day. But the climate now must have changed, because I do not think it would be possible now to winter your sheep up there wholly?—I don't say it would be possible to winter very much stock there, but they have means of communication for importing winter stuffs that were quite beyond their reach before. We practise that ourselves on a small scale.

27,548. If you have to import much keep for your stock up there, I am afraid it would run away with your capital?—We never found that.

27,549. But you were never farming at Forsinard?—No; but I am intimately acquainted with the descendants of those who were there.

27,550. How long is it since Forsinard was cleared?—In the year 1807.

27,551. There will not be many immediate descendants of such tenants alive now?—Oh, there are some of the immediate descendants alive still. I have one yet in my nearest neighbour, whose father was born in Forsinard.

27,552. I would have grave doubts about the advisability of repeopling that part of the country.—I would have none.

27,553. Would you be inclined to go up there yourself if you had the opportunity?—Certainly I would.

27,554. Up next the station?—Yes, even there there is plenty arable land, and plenty room for improvement. I have seen crops grown at the railway station as fine as I saw anywhere.

27,555. You have told us about the extent of croft, arable and pasture, which there would be to divide among the thirty tenants, i.e., 1500 acres. Now, what stock would you suppose that would keep?—The division would have to be made according to the nature of the soils. You know yourself, sir, from your knowledge of lands that in the lower lying parts a smaller area would hold a larger stock, because the quality of the soil there may be better.

27,556. That is no doubt so, but take an average croft, with an average stock?—The average croft is what I mentioned. An area of 1500 acres would keep a stock, counting it all in sheep, of something between 200 and 300 animals.

27,557. Three hundred sheep?—I don't say that, but perhaps 250.

27,558. How many cattle would you have?—I would have about 30 head of cattle between old and young.

27,559. And how many sheep would you allow to each beast?—Three.

27,560. Would not that be rather small?—No, counting it overhead, calves and all.

27,561. Well, that would be equal to 90, which would leave you 160 sheep?—Yes.

27,562. And a horse?—Yes; equal to 5 sheep.

27,563. Well, I suppose one horse would do. Your stock, then, would be 135 sheep, 1 horse, and 30 cattle. Now, what value would you put upon these animals? How much would you put on the sheep to start with?—That varies in my experience.

27,564. Just give me your own idea?—I could not without some calculation.

27,565. Would you say 20s. or 15s.?—The average for ewes I should say 20s.

27,566. That makes £135; and what would be an average price for your 30 cattle?—They would average £5 or £6; the older cattle, of course, are much more valuable than the younger, but that is overhead.

27,567. That makes it £285; and the horse £15?—Yes.

27,568. Making £300 in all?—Yes.

27,569. Now, do you think you could manage to get 30 men, with £300 each, to stock these places?—I think there would not be very much difficulty about it.

27,570. And if you did not get them in your own glen would you object to other people coming in from elsewhere?—Certainly not.

27,571. Then, you would have your holdings to erect, so that you would have a pretty heavy bill in front of you?—I can see that the expense of building is one thing that would prevent cutting down the farms to a very small size.

27,572. The expense of building is practically the same for a £10 croft as for a £30 croft?—Not exactly, as the latter requires a larger steading.

27,573. Much about it. Put the cost in at the moderate sum of £120, and you arrive at £420; that is a pretty big sum?—It is a pretty big sum.

27,574. What I want to point out to you is this, that while it is very advisable to have crofts of a certain size, you may be putting it beyond the power and beyond the means of the great bulk of the people to take these places?—Well, I don't see that very many could take these places without assistance in some way; but there are various ways.

27,575. Have you any idea in your own mind where the money could be got?—I think there would not be much difficulty about money. I observe that there seems to be no difficulty in raising money to emigrate the crofters; and why should there be difficulty in migrating them?

27,576. But there would be difficulty, and it must be patent to yourself that it could not be done without getting a loan?—Money is very cheap.

27,577. But if you put on a moderate rent, plus the interest on even £200, it comes to be a very heavy burden on a crofter?—The interest would only be £6 a year at 3 per cent.

27,578. You might get money at 3 per cent., but you would have to pay it back?—Certainly.

27,579. The rate then of repayment, including principal and interest, would be at least 4½ per cent., or £9 per annum?—I could get a bond at 3 per cent. to stand any length of time.

27,580. I merely make these remarks to show you that there is a difficulty there?—I do not doubt that there is some difficulty in that matter, but still it is not insurmountable as far as we can see.

27,581. Mr Forsyth.—Have you considered the advisability of having different sizes of crofts?—The state of the subject would render that absolutely necessary I fancy, as in some cases you could not get a large croft at all, and in other places you could; and in some cases, again, a tenant might not be able to take a large-sized place, but he might be able to take a smaller one.

27,582. Assuming that it were possible to find a certain number of these crofts such as you have described, with stock as you have described, and after considering the difficulties that have been brought out by Mr Gordon's questions, would you as an alternative think it advisable to institute a smaller size of croft—not a self-sustaining one, but a small croft in the new ground, or do you not like that class of holding?—I would not advise the cutting up of a place into very small pieces. The expense of building will prevent that for one thing, and it would not be very advisable to do so. There would be a sufficiency of small holdings in the old place after the new places are divided up.

27,583. Before I go further, may I ask you, do you represent this place of Melvich and Portskerra?—No, I simply referred to that as it was connected with the subjects I spoke of.

27,584. Because, while we are considering Strath Halladale, we are bound to look at the very large number of people that there are down here?—Oh, yes.

27,585. And it appears to me that the land for such crofts as you have described, the larger and self-sustaining crofts, would very speedily become exhausted. Now, can you give us any idea as to the possibility of the smaller croft, aided by outside work,—how would that do?—It would do very well if you have public works in the immediate neighbourhood.

27,586. And how does work stand in the immediate neighbourhood?—There is no such thing to be got, unless the happening of a day's work occasionally.

27,587. Then we are rather forced back to what you originally stated,—the large self-sustaining croft, or to put it more plainly, the small farm?—Certainly.

27,588. And of these you say a certain number could be got?—Very well.

27,588*a*. That croft, you think, could be worked with profit, but it would require a considerable amount of capital to start with?—It would, no doubt.

27,589. In most cases, at all events. You might find an occasional man who has got the capital, but that would not be the rule, but rather the exception?—It would not be the rule, I believe; but I don't see very much difficulty in starting on subjects like that in these times when money is cheap.

27,590. Then, finally, as to the small croft, there should not be many of them, so far as your experience goes?—No, I entirely disapprove of the crofts being too small: it compels a man to run about the country seeking labour elsewhere, and it is one of the most pitiable things I know to see these aged men going from place to place seeking work, and perhaps returning home after finding none. I have often felt very sorry for these people.

27,591. As to the sheep on the hill pasture of these small farms, do you think the tenants should have them in common, or that they should each have his own sheep, but running in common?—I think it would be a better arrangement that each tenant should have his own separate; it is quite possible to have them in that way, and still have the ground in common for yeld cattle and other cattle and horses, and even for the sheep; but they could have them in separate runs, as is actually the case there. Two or three of the crofters, and sometimes more, have their sheep on the same run; in other parts each crofter has a separate run.

27,592. As a matter of fact, we know that sheep do take to a certain part of the hill and keep to it; they happen to get run together, and thus they naturally form into small hirsels?—That is exactly the case.

27,593. Do you find any trouble in your district from overstocking on the part of any individual tenant?—No; there is the best understanding possible, so far as I can see, among the tenants in the Strath. There is very little grumbling that ever I heard on the subject.

27,594. It is done by mutual arrangement, is it?—Mutual arrangement. There are a few who perhaps may have a few animals more than they ought to have, but by the sufferance of the rest they are allowed to keep them, and there is no word about it. The other neighbours are content to allow the matter, and they are all happy.

27,595. Then, in the event of a certain individual holder's sheep stock becoming smaller—that is to say, he may be unlucky and lose them by death, or otherwise—is he allowed to make up his number?—At any time he pleases; there is no restriction in that way.

27,596. Then, generally, you are against the club farm system, about which we have heard so much elsewhere?—The fact is, that we never had any experience of the club farm system, and we do not know exactly how it would work. I don't know but it might work exceedingly well, but we have not had experience of it, and I think the best way would be for each to have his own sheep, and still the ground be in common, as it is in the meantime.

27,597. Do you not perceive the advantages in selling sheep from a club farm—that they become more uniform—the sheep that you would sell run together better in lots?—I see a slight advantage there, but there are disadvantages connected with it that I do not see very well how you could get over in places such as we occupy.

27,598. On the whole you prefer the individual holding as you have described?—There is one thing; in the wintering of the stock every man has it in his own hands, and can give his hoggs what he pleases, whereas if it were a club farm it would be rather a difficult matter to make arrangements to winter the stock at home.

27,599. You mean that if you have a club farm the difficulty would be that the hoggs would have to run in common over all the holding for their wintering?—It would not be a satisfactory arrangement I think.

27,600. The Chairman.—In connection with our inquiry in this quarter my attention has been called by Mr Mackenzie, the Secretary, and I think it right to refer to a rather important report which was made to the Board of Agriculture by Captain John Henderson in 1815. It was an official report, and he says that the upper part of the strath was cleared before the date when he wrote. He says:—'Eighteen families were removed 'to make a sheep farm; they paid £185 sterling yearly 'of rent, and the sheep farmer now pays £400 sterling 'per annum for the same ground;' and then he goes on to mention the names of the townships. —In all, 92. That was in 1815 according to this official report.

27,601. Mr Sutherland.—With regard to the way in which the people are distributed in Strath Halladale, you state the area of the district drained by the Halladale as 68,000 acres?—Yes.

27,602. And I think you said the farm of Bighouse occupies 45,000 of these acres?—It is an approximate calculation.

27,603. That farm is in the occupation of one man, of course?—Yes.

27,604. And is he a resident farmer?—No; he is an absentee farmer.

27,605. Then you said the balance that was left to the crofters of Strath Halladale and of Melvich and Portskerra was, how much?—About 20,000 or 21,000 acres.

27,606. How many families have got to live upon that balance of 21,000 acres?—I cannot be exactly sure, but I should say about 140 families, speaking roughly; there is a population of about 600 or 700 in Melvich and Portskerra.

27,607. And how much in Strath Halladale?—Three hundred.

27,608. But could you give me the families?—There are 60 families in Strath Halladale, not calculating shepherds.

27,609. How many in Melvich?—About 140 or 150; say 150.

27,610. And how many in Portskerra?—That includes Portskerra.

27,611. Two hundred and ten families then have got an acreage of only 21,000?—Yes.

27,612. And one man who does not live there has 45,000 acres?—Yes.

27,613. And you think that that is a state of matters, I suppose, that ought to be remedied if possible?—I think so.

27,614. Then you referred to the difference between the state of the people in Strath Halladale and those down here as to comfort?—Well, as to liberty and other things, I may say that there is a great difference.

27,615. Speaking generally, is there any other particular in which the importance of this strikes you,—the condition of the population of Strath Halladale I mean, except that they are better off than the others?—There is one thing noticeable in those who have been left in anything like their original position,—there is an air of comfort and prosperity about them that you will not get about tenants anywhere else that I see. I speak of the few envied farmers among us who were left as they were before the evictions. These, indeed, have not got very great encouragement; I must say, with all due deference to Sheriff Brand, that the last Commission who visited us dealt very harshly with some of the best tenants there.

27,616. At any rate, they did not find it necessary to increase or to keep at the same figure the rents of those tenants who had been removed to carry out the Sutherland improvements?—I don't take in the drift of that question entirely.

27,617. You said yourself that the most striking particular of Strath Halladale, historically speaking, is that the people were left where they were?—Yes.

27,618. The Crofters Commission did not find it necessary to reduce their rents?—On the contrary, they have raised them in many cases from 5 to 15 per cent.

27,619. Now, did you ever hear that the Commission increased the rents of evicted tenants anywhere—the rents of the people who were evicted to the seashore?—I believe they have been increased in certain cases along the shore, but I am not so well informed there as in our own case.

27,620. But you had not heard that they increased the rents to the same extent as in Strath Halladale?—Nowhere, as I understand, throughout the Highlands.

27,621. So far then as the landlord's interest is concerned, what do you think that proves?—That proves that it would be in his interest to have a number of substantial small farmers, such as we have up among us. I think that is proved clearly, because in the face of a downcome of rents everywhere else we find here a rise in rents.

27,622. So, then, do you think you would be justified in stating that the tenantry, in the original position in which they were placed, have proved a success, while the large farmers have been a failure?—Certainly; I have no hesitation in saying that. No man can say that tenants who were left as they were of old ever applied to a destitution fund. Perhaps some of the older men may have better information than I have, but I made inquiries, and I could never find that any tenant whose rent was £8 or £10 or £12 among us has ever applied to a destitution fund. They have got reductions from time to time from the estate.

27,623. So, in your opinion, it proves conclusively that when people were sent down to the coast to improve their condition, the improvements were the wrong way?—Certainly.

27,624. And you think the case of Strath Halladale proves that up to the hilt?—I have not the slightest doubt about that.

27,625. Are the crofters of Strath Halladale, in your opinion, in as good a position to improve and progress as they were before these clearances were carried out?—Oh, they are not so well placed for progress now.

27,626. Does the condition of things with regard to the distribution of the land exist in Strath Halladale now that existed before the clearances?—Oh, by no means. Quite a number of tenants have been sent from the evicted parts to dwell among others in places already fully occupied.

27,627. That is what you referred to when you spoke of sub-division?—Yes; and that has made a congested state of things in certain districts among us.

27,628. So that your sub-division was not one by the people?—No, it was forced upon them, dead against their will.

27,629. And you think that if these subdivisions had not been carried out the people would have been still more comfortable to-day?—They would have been doubly so in many cases. In my own case, for instance, my grandfather had a holding three times the size of the one I now occupy; owing to the evictions the place was split up into three divisions.

27,630. But from the economical point of view, and looked at from the point of view of the landlord, the settlement of Strath Halladale is one of the best paying he has got in the estate of Sutherland?—I fancy so.

27,631. Because, while rents had been reduced 30, 50, and 60 per cent. on the large farms, yours have been increased?—Yes, that is so.

27,632. You stated that with the old distribution of land each of the families you mentioned in the valley of Halladale had 750 acres?—Yes, that is the calculation.

27,633. But you have not to-day got 750 each, have you?—A little less than the half of that.

27,634. Then, you were asked some questions with regard to difficulties as to wintering stock in the upper reaches of the glen, and I think you mentioned that one of the advantages you would have nowadays is that you have a railway?—Yes, that is one of them.

27,635. And you think that is a very great advantage?—I think it would be the means of procuring various things in times of need at these places, and there would be times of need, I have no doubt, when more feeding matter would be required in the winter, and all that sort of thing.

27,636. So that you would have perhaps sometimes to import hay?—It is always done by us.

27,637. At present?—Yes.

27,638. But you do not, I suppose, complain that you have to import certain things?—No, for the reason that we have a good extent of hill ground, and can keep on a big stock in summer, and we find it pays us well to buy a little wintering stuff.

27,639. You use a great many things in Strath Halladale that you do not grow in the strath?—A great many.

27,640. If I might put it to you—you do not grow tea, but you use tea, don't you?—Yes.

27,641. I state that, then, as applying, though not to the same extent, in some degree to other things as well. Do you think the presence of the railway there changes the condition of things very greatly?—I believe it does. They would exist very well without it, but it makes a very great difference.

27,642. Does it consist with your knowledge that in the upper part of the glen, above the railway, there is practically what is called one hirsel,—I am not speaking with exactitude, but with a degree of approximation?—It is one hirsel and part of another.

27,643. And are hirsels kept and fed separately?—Yes, kept separately; they run separately.

27,644. And do you think that what is one hirsel or one man's herding would make the basis of a very good small farm?—Oh, most excellent; there is no doubt about that: it would rather be too much in many cases.

27,645. But, generally speaking, you would have no fear but with the same expedients as you have to resort to yourself, you could winter the stock even at the upper end of Strath Halladale?—I have not the slightest fear.

27,646. You were also asked some questions about the proportion of arable to pasture land. Is there much green land in your hill grazing?—Very little: I would say that 2 or 3 acres on the sides of these small burns would take in the whole of what there is in the 8000 acres on the west side of the river.

27,647. Who has the greater proportion of green land in his holding do you think,—you, or the farmer of Bighouse?—Of course, the sheep farmer has the greater proportion of green; but they do not preserve the green for cultivation as we do.

27,648. They use the green for pasture?—Yes.

27,649. You cannot use it to the same extent?—We do not use it to the same extent.

27,650. So that if that would be an argument against anything it would be against your holding rather than the large farmers?—Oh, no, I find that in our holdings we can pasture about as many sheep on the system we work as they can do on a sheep farm, independently of the cattle altogether. We have as many sheep in the township of Trantlemore as would be enough to stock the place without any cattle; Mr Telfer, manager at Forsinain, has said as much to me, and I believe it myself.

27,651. So you maintain upon your land a stock of sheep the same as the larger farmers, and you have the cattle over and above?—Yes.

27,652. Do you then believe that the large farmer throws away the grazing of the cattle altogether?—I believe that to a great extent he does: I don't say altogether, but to a great extent, for the grasses suitable for cattle that I see on the sheep farms are allowed to grow wild and are not touched from year to year.

27,653. Then, with regard to the getting of stock for holdings, are you of opinion that it would be necessary to the extent that is commonly believed to get monetary advances for that purpose?—That would be absolutely necessary in some cases.

27,654. To meet what?—To meet the expense of stocking and building.

27,655. Do you think it could be got over in the same way as was done before?—I think it could if the people were dealt with and allowed to build as they liked; I mean if they were allowed to build temporary houses as they liked.

27,656. Whom do you think was going to hinder them?—By the present law it could be hindered; by the estate laws and by the sanitary laws. Melvich, Sutherland-shire.

27,657. Don't you see you are dealing with an entirely different state of matters from what we contemplate?—I am thinking of the sanitary regulations which require a certain standard of building. William Mackenzie.

27,658. You don't object to that?—I don't object to that, but there is one objection I have: if tenants in these new places were allowed to build as they liked they could put up a house in two or three days, such as served them in the olden times, and would serve the purpose till better houses were erected.

27,659. But is there any desire on the part of the people to do that?—I cannot say, I would do it.

27,660. Do you see any evidence of the desire to build inferior houses in Strath Halladale at the present time?—No, but in a case of necessity like this I believe it would be a sort of alternative. I don't mean that it should be done if there was a better way.

27,661. But you do not expect, evidently, in the case of buildings, the same progress as has been made in other cases?—I cannot think of that at the very outset: it might by degrees come to that, I have no doubt.

27,662. Do you believe now that there would be any desire on the part of the people to build inferior houses?—No, there is no desire on the part of the people to do it if they could possibly get a better.

27,663. As to all these new houses which we see being built at the present time in Strath Halladale, it is not against the will of the people that they are put up?—Certainly not, it is by their own will.

27,664. And by their own effort?—By their own effort.

27,665. And don't you think if they had larger holdings they would do the same in that case too?—I know very well they would. And I can give you an instance in illustration of that. In my own township, a few years ago, there were two tenants who jointly occupied a croft of about 8 acres. It so happened that another croft of 5 or 6 acres became vacant. One of the tenants on the 8 acre croft was shifted to the vacant croft, and at the present day I find two of perhaps the best crofter's houses that you will come across in the county of Sutherland on these two holdings, simply as the result of the judicious increase of holdings.

27,666. You think that with larger holdings there would be a tendency to erect better houses?—I see practical proof of it every day.

27,667. And have you noticed any advance on the part of the people in building houses since the passing of the Crofters Act?—There is: they build every day, I see a new house rise now and again.

27,668. There has been a general advance in the improvement of houses?—Certainly, and some of the very best houses among us have been built since the passing of the Crofters Act.

27,669. Is that due, in your opinion, to the fixity of tenure that the Act confers?—I think in a great measure it is: they see they have a right to improvements that they had not before.

27,670. Do you notice any difference in the number of houses that were started immediately after the passing of the Act compared with the time before it?—Well, they were building both before and after.

27,671. But do you think there is a greater proportion of new houses being built now than there was before the passing of the Act?—I think it is much about the same thing. There were advances given by the estate before the passing of the Act.

27,672. How many new houses were built in Strath Halladale within the last six years?—I am not exactly sure; there were two or three.

27,673. How many last year?—This year, do you mean?

27,674. Since this time last year?—One, I think.

27,675. And how many in the year previous?—There might be one, or so.

27,676. And was there one each year before the passing of the Act?—I believe that would be the case, because during the last few years, before the passing of the Act, there were better advances made by the estate to the tenants than ever before that. I don't know the reason, but such is the case: they got all the timber they required a few years before the passing of the Act: formerly they only got a little.

Melvich, Sutherlandshire.

William Mackenzie.

27,677. In the case in which we had to contemplate advances to the tenants, you referred to the conditions upon which advances were proposed to be made to the people for emigration?—Yes.

27,678. Do you know what these conditions were?—I have seen them and read them in the public papers.

27,679. I want just to make that point clear; are you aware what the precise conditions were?—Not as to details.

27,680. You are probably aware that an Act of Parliament was passed empowering the advances to be made?—I have an impression that such is the case.

27,681. This is from the Act—'In order to assist the 'Government of the province of British Columbia to 'transfer to and settle upon the sea coast and islands 'of the province families from the crofter parishes of 'Scotland, the Treasury may before the first day of 'January 1898 advance to the said Government on 'the security herein after mentioned, any sum or sums 'not exceeding in the whole £150,000, which shall be 'applied by the said Government for the purpose of 'effecting the said transfer and settlement on proper 'conditions. (2). The said Government shall repay 'every sum advanced by equal half-yearly instalments 'within thirty years from the date of its advance, and 'the first of such instalments shall be paid within five 'years from the date of the advance. (3) The said 'Government shall pay interest half-yearly at the rate 'of three per cent. per annum on the amounts advanced 'for the time being and not repaid.' Now, I wish to ask you, with regard to that legislation which is now on the statute-book, are these conditions such that if advances were found necessary you would think favourable for the settlement of crofters in the Highlands?—I should think that is the wisest policy.

27,682. You have noticed the salient points of that clause:—(1) a sum of £150,000 shall be advanced by the Government; (2) that within thirty years the same shall be repaid; (3) that no instalment need be repaid until five years after the advance is made; and (4) the low rate of interest, three per cent.?—These are very considerate terms, but I say it is a blindfold policy from two points of view.

27,683. In what way?—First, our country sends away its wealth in the shape of money; and then it sends away its greatest wealth in the shape of its people to enrich other countries.

27,684. Yes, but excuse me, that is hardly the point of my question. I say if it is necessary, or were found necessary to make advances for the purpose of making new holdings in the Highlands would you consider terms like these favourable?—I think these terms are exceedingly favourable.

27,685. And do you not think that if the Government of this country gives money to the Government of British Columbia for such a purpose, it might very well do the same for its own subjects at home?—I think they might extend that assistance to Parish Councils or similar bodies in the Highlands.

27,686. We are, of course, assuming that it is found necessary to make advances?—In certain cases perhaps it would; in others it would not; but if it were necessary these would be very advantageous terms.

27,687. Then, I just wish to ask you one question in conclusion with regard to club farms. As I understand, in reply to a question asked you by Mr Forsyth, you did not object to club farms?—I could not, because I had no knowledge of the working of club farms.

27,688. It was all a question of your not having had experience of them in Strath Halladale?—Exactly.

27,689. But you do not say for a moment that if it were found necessary to establish club farms that would not be a good system?—I believe it might work.

27,690. And the desire to continue the present system in the Strath is due to two causes, first, that you found it so and continued it?—Yes.

27,691. And the other that you found it necessary deal individually with the matter of stock?—Yes. [Mr Forsyth.—I should just like to say that the witness's account of the system or method of keeping their sheep stock in the Strath appears to me to be an admirable one, according to my own experience.]

Melvich, Sutherlandshire.

William Mackenzie.

27,692. I quite understand that. It would depend, would it not, in some degree, upon the amount of pasture you would give them? You can see that if people were planted rather thickly it would not be so convenient to manage?—We do it just now, but we don't find it very convenient, owing to the small boundaries we have.

27,693. But if the boundaries were larger you think it would be more convenient to carry out the individual system?—It would be quite convenient I think.

27,694. With regard to the objects of our inquiry generally, you could show us those places that the Chairman read a list of from Captain Henderson's report?—Yes, I have a knowledge of all these grounds. [The Chairman.—These names are all familiar to you?—Quite familiar.]

27,695. And, generally, you are of opinion that the land which you have mentioned is fit for the making of new holdings, for the enlargement of holdings which already exist?—I have no doubt of it whatever.

27,696. And do you think it would be for the benefit of the country as well as for the benefit of the individual?—It certainly would.

27,697. The Chairman.—I think it important to notice that the arable holding of a number of those whom you represent is very small?—Very small.

27,698. I see from the Crofters Commission Report for 1890-91 that a common size of arable holding is 4 acres, 3 acres, 5 acres, 2½ acres, 3½ acres, 6½ acres, 4 acres, 2 acres, 2 acres, 2 acres, 2½ acres, and so on?—Yes.

27,699. Of course, a number are a good deal larger than that, but are you able to say that in a number of the holdings the arable acreage is exceedingly small?—Yes, very small.

27,700. And I suppose the chief value of these crofts lies in the hill grazing?—Yes, and besides that there is a number of cottars who have small patches or gardens who pay rent and have stock upon the ground as well.

27,701. Can you tell me how many cottars there are?—I cannot say exactly; but there are five or six at least.

27,702. And they have stock on the hill as well as the crofters?—Some of them have.

27,703. Do they pay any rent?—They may pay from 5s. to 10s., I am not conversant with their affairs, but I think they pay from 2s. 6d. to 10s. of rent.

27,704. The class of sheep, I understand from Mr Forsyth, is cheviot?—Cheviot.

27,705. And I learn from him also that you manage these sheep with unusual skill and care?—We take great care of our sheep stock.

27,706. They are the mainstay of your holdings?—Not the mainstay, but one of the chief supports. The cattle stock I may say is the sheet anchor.

27,707. The value of the holdings so far as they have a value is mainly due to the cattle and sheep stock?—Certainly, and to the agriculture as well; without that you could not maintain the cattle stock.

27,708. Mr Macaulay, Solicitor, Golspie.—I shall not detain you with many questions; I think you made a very intelligent and clear statement, but I wish to ask you about this Forsinard land you spoke of. How many acres of old arable land do you estimate there are in this ground that you described?—I never measured the land.

27,709. Give me a rough estimate?—I should say there would be about 100 acres in all of old arable; or perhaps 200 if the land which is quite capable of being cultivated is reckoned along with what was tilled in olden times. I might even say 1000 acres could be found quite as good as any that has been improved at Forsinain.

27,710. But old arable land there,—what do you estimate it at?—I cannot exactly say; there is not the appearance of a great extent of arable land there, but a great deal of the land has gone back to heather and looks so wild now that you would not actually take it for arable land: I refer to land that had been cultivated in former times by these small tenants.

27,711. Would that land not be required for hay crop for the feeding of the horses and cattle?—Certainly.

27,712. So that any feeding of sheep that would be required to protect the whole stock would have to be brought in in the case of a hard winter?—Even in places like Forsinard the tenant would have a great number of sheep and cattle in summer, and it would be a great benefit then to low-lying farmers, say in Caithness, if these were sent down to winter during the winter season. That has been done in former times, and I believe it could be done still with profit to both parties.

27,713. But, generally speaking, if it was a sheep stock any feeding would need to be brought in?—Not any feeding.

27,714. In the case of a hard winter?—In the case of a hard winter there would be a great deal required I have no doubt.

27,715. Then, as to the crops: there are some people up there who have crops now, such as shepherds and keepers?—Yes.

27,716. Have you any experience as to what sort of crops these people grow?—Yes.

27,717. How do the crops do there?—They are exceedingly good crops.

27,718. They are very good crops this year?—Yes, and every year that I remember.

27,719. But is it not the fact that the potato crop, for instance, gets blighted very much?—That is the case in various places. I have had experience for the last nine years, and we were never without frost, but it never totally destroyed the crop except perhaps one year. But we do not depend upon the potato crop; we know the pieces of ground that are subject to frost, and we don't go in for potatoes in these spots.

27,720. Turnips appear to grow very well there?—Yes, Mr Forsyth and the other gentlemen can say that they saw very good turnips there.

27,721. You referred a little ago to the result of the Crofters Commission proceedings?—Yes.

27,722. When the Commissioners raised your rents I presume they must have thought you were too cheaply rented?—That is the impression they are apt to leave on the mind.

27,723. That you must have had the holdings very cheap?—The fact is that the rents were raised, but not all over.

27,724. Then, as to the advances that were made to tenants, you spoke of advances made by the proprietor before the passing of the Crofters Act; were these considerable?—In some cases I am not very familiar with the figures, but they might be from £5 to £50.

27,725. So that the tenants in Strath Halladale generally are very comfortable?—So I am told, and I know it is the case with those who have fair sized places.

27,726. It was brought out a little ago that the tenants of Strath Halladale and Melvich here, numbering about 200, hold about 21,000 acres?—Yes.

27,727. But the fact is that the Strath Halladale tenants themselves hold very nearly 400 acres each on an average?—Three hundred and sixty acres.

27,728. Is it within your knowledge that the gamekeepers up at Forsinard had to give up growing potatoes owing to the frost?—I never heard of it.

27,729. The Chairman.—Do you wish to add anything further?—Not in the meantime.

HUGH MACDONALD, Ashall, Strath-Halladale (77) —examined.

Hugh Macdonald.

27,730. The Chairman.—I see you have a paper to submit, and as you are an old man, and I understand very deaf, I will read your paper for you if you will allow me.—I am seventy-seven years of age. I remember with perfect ease the time when the whole lower half of Strath-Halladale, on the east side from Caragarrybeg to Alt Hacron, was occupied by crofters. I was seventeen years old when my father was evicted from Dusphey to the croft that I at present occupy.

The whole of the district above mentioned, with the exception of Havaig, was cleared after it became the property of the Sutherland family. Evag, as far as I can draw on my memory, was cleared in 1827 by Major Mackay of Bighouse, who retained the land in his own hands, and kept a ploughman to work it. From this district three crofters were cleared, namely, John Sutherland, William Gunn, and Charles Macleod.

Golval, as far as I can make out, was cleared in 1829 or 1830, as also was the township of Corkal. Bad-a'-Chridhe, and Dusphey were cleared out in 1833, and Corrigal and Caragarry in 1834. The names of the different crofters who were turned out and the townships they occupied were as follows:—Golval—John Fraser, Angus Sutherland, James Campbell, Mrs Hugh Gordon, Roderick Macdonald, John Cameron, Malcolm Fraser, Angus Mackay (M'Iau), James Mackay (Couper). Corkal—Angus Mackay (Couper), George Mackay, John Mackay. Bad-a'-Chridhe—Grace Mackay, Widow Angus Mackay. Properly speaking they were not cleared out, as the land was taken from them, but were allowed to remain in their houses. The same applies to James Campbell, blacksmith, Golval. Dusphey—William Macleod, Hugh Campbell, Malcolm Fraser, Mrs Gordon, Hugh Macdonald, William Macdonald (M'Rory). Connigill—Donald Mackay, Donald Gunn. Caragarry—Roderick Sutherland.

Of the above mentioned twenty-seven who were shifted or their land taken away, some were shifted twice within three years. Twelve were set down on the portion of Halladale which is still peopled, two went to America, two to Caithness, two to Melvich, and one to Portskerra. It must be borne in mind that I set down the numbers as twenty-seven who were cleared. Taking them collectively they only amounted to twenty-two, but some, such as those sent from Golval to Dusphey, and thence cleared out of there, leaves the number of crofts at twenty-seven.

Golval, Corkal, Evag, and Dusphey contained at that time more land than they do now. It was about that time that the river was embanked, so that land that then belonged to the east side belongs now to the west side. So far as Dusphey is concerned, a great part of it has been washed away by the river.

My father paid £15 for Dusphey. He kept ten milch cows and their followers, two horses and between fifty and sixty sheep. The people were all in comfortable circumstances. They had plenty of good nourishing food. Their crofts were self-supporting. I can remember of little or no meal having to be imported from Caithness or the south—a marked contrast with the present time. I know that some parties made a cry about the periodical famines the Highlands were subject to. Such a state of things never existed in my day or anything approaching it.

(Signed) HUGH MACDONALD.

27,731. That is your statement?—Yes.

27,732. Are you a crofter?—Yes.

27,733. I see your holding is 2 acres arable and 4 acres outrun, with a share in 10,872 acres common to 27 crofters. Your old rent was £2, 10s. and your new rent I see has been made £2, 15s.?—Yes. In my father's time it was only £1; and when he died there was 10s. put on to my mother. My mother was spared thirteen years after my father, and when my mother was taken away my name was put in the book, and there was £1, 1s. 3d. added to my rent by Mr Robert Horsburgh.

27,734. Mr Gordon.—How many sheep have you?—I have 18 ewes and 10 lambs.

27,735. Has any of your neighbours more than yourself?—Oh, far, far more; a great deal above that.

27,736. They have more than they ought to have, perhaps?—Oh, I daresay they have indeed; I don't know. It is themselves that can put that right and not me; I am no judge of that.

Melvich, Sutherlandshire.

Hugh Macdonald.

27,737. The Chairman.—Was this paper written out for you?—Yes, by my son.

27,738. And is it your son's signature that is appended?—It is my own signature.

Robert Campbell.

ROBERT CAMPBELL, Crofter, Portskerra (67) —examined.

27,739. Are you a crofter?—Yes.

27,740. I see your holding extends to 3 acres arable and 1½ outrun. Your old rent was £1, 14s. 6d., and the rent fixed by the Crofters Commission was also £1, 14s. 6d.?—Yes.

27,741. Would you just tell me what stock you have got?—As a rule I keep two cows and sometimes a calf.

27,742. What sheep have you?—I have nine sheep just now, or ten; but I have not had sheep at all since I occupied the place, until four years ago.

27,743. Nine or ten ewes?—No, altogether.

27,744. You have no horse?—No.

27,745. You heard the evidence given by the two preceding witnesses?—Yes.

27,746. And do you concur in that evidence?—Yes, though I was concerned with the low end of the sheep farm.

27,747. And what about the other end, do you not know about it?—No, I don't know anything about the upper end.

27,748. You mean the Forsinard end?—Yes, Forsinard and Craggie and Dyke and these places.

27,749. You don't know about these places?—No.

27,750. Have you anything to add to what the previous witnesses said with regard to this end?—With regard to the Golval section of the farm of Bighouse from the Hachran burn to Caragarry, the tenants were evicted since the estate was sold; but the rest of the sheep farm existed before the estate was sold, with the exception of the Hachran portion of Caragarry-beg.

27,751. To the Sutherland family?—Yes. About 24 tenants were evicted since the estate fell to the Sutherland family in the year 1832. I remember all these crofts although I was young; I was only six years of age when the first evictions took place.

27,752. You confirm the evidence given by Hugh Macdonald with regard to that matter so far as your information goes?—Yes, he has stated more crofters than I have got. In Golval township there were John Fraser, Widow Hugh Gordon, Roderick Macdonald, Angus Sutherland, John Cameron, James Campbell (my father), Malcolm Fraser. In Corkal township the tenants were James Mackay, cooper; an Irish family whose name I do not know; Angus Mackay, cooper; John Sutherland, Charles Mackay (Roy), William Mackay, weaver; Widow Mackay, Widow Bain, Angus Mackay. In the township of Evag, William Gunn. Total, 17 crofters.

27,753. You are giving all these names of your own knowledge?—Well, I have seen most of them, and I have seen their immediate descendants. I was resident on the place till I was 27 years of age.

27,754. Mr Sutherland.—Were you born at Golval and resided there till you were 27 years of age?—Yes.

27,755. That is to the north side of the river Halladale, across the bridge?—The east side of the river.

27,756. And when the people were located there, did they come down past the line of the present bridge?—Not past Hachran bridge in my time. What was north of Hachran burn was made a sheep farm by the former proprietor.

27,757. How far up did the sheep farm go at the time you refer to when the people were there?—It came to this burn from Bighouse.

27,758. And when were its boundaries extended farther up?—In the year 1832.

27,759. Up to Caragarry-beg?—Yes. I think it was two years in the hands of the Sutherland family before they were evicted.

27,760. Did they evict them immediately after they came into possession?—They came into possession in 1829 and the evictions took place in 1832.

Melvich, Sutherlandshire.

27,761. And when was Kirkton cleared?—That had been cleared before.

Robert Campbell.

27,762. And when was the upper part cleared? Was it at that time?—Oh, no, it was cleared before.

27,763. Before that date?—Yes.

27,764. It was cleared before the Earl of Sutherland became possessed of it?—Yes, long before. This is all that was cleared since the Duke of Sutherland became the possessor.

27,765. Those whose names you gave us?—No, I have only given the names for three townships: I left the other portion.

27,766. Is it your opinion that the people could be very well off there if they were put there now?—Yes, it is.

27,767. And do you think they would be better off there than some people are in Portskerra?—Oh, yes.

27,768. You have no doubt of that?—No.

27,769. How many families are in Portskerra?—Between 50 and 60, and some cottars.

27,770. You heard what was said about building houses. Let us assume for a moment that you are going to put the people back there. Take the people of Portskerra, as many of them as would wish to go or could be accommodated at Golval, and supposing they had houses to build, do you think there would be any very great difficulty with regard to that?—I cannot say; but there would be no great difficulty in building the house if a man got the offices built for him,—the byre, the stable, and the barn: he could then easily provide a house for himself.

27,771. And is it your opinion that if he got time to provide these offices he would ultimately do so, after he settled there, without any help?—Oh, yes, the place itself would soon help him; a good place like Golval.

27,772. What is the distance of Golval from Portskerra?—About two miles.

27,773. It is that by the road?—Yes.

27,774. But suppose a man were going away there to build a house and work at it in the morning, could he not go there and come back to his present house at night?—The fishermen would not be inclined.

27,775 But supposing there were men who wished to go?—Oh, yes.

27,776. So that they could actually have houses there that would suit them until they got the offices, working from their present places?—Oh, yes.

27,777. And are you of opinion that there are people in Melvich and Portskerra who would be glad to get the offer of making new places, either in Golval or in Kirkton?—I could not say; I think the fishermen are disposed to be near the sea.

27,778. But take the case of a crofter; do you think any there would be so disposed?—There might be; I have not questioned any of them on the subject.

27,779. But you will know the general feeling pretty well among the people from your residence among them?—As a rule they are not fishermen in Melvich, but they are disposed to take crofts.

27,780. You think they would be more disposed to take crofts if they could get them?—Yes.

27,781. But do you think they would be in better circumstances there?—To be sure they would; they would have better pasture and more of it.

27,782. With regard to pasture, the Portskerra and Melvich crofters hold their pasture in common, don't they?—Yes.

27,783. It goes back now I understand to the top of Beinn-Ruadh?—Yes, or thereabout.

27,784. How far did it go before it was extended?—It would be within half-a-mile I daresay, or perhaps less.

27,785. From there?—Yes, from this side. It was the people on the Strathy side who benefited most by the extension.

27,786. They get more than you?—Yes.

27,787. When was that extension given?—It would be about six or seven years ago. [Mr Box, factor.—In 1884.]

27,788. And was it the Crofters Commission that fixed the rent for it?—I don't think there was any rent put upon it.

27,789. It was just given as an extension of the holdings at the rent they then paid?—Yes, it was stated by the estate, it was not requested to be given by the Commission.

27,790. The rent was not fixed as the other extensions round about were by the Crofters Commission?—No, I did not hear anything about that.

27,791. Has it done them any appreciable good, the extension?—Oh, yes, there is no doubt of that, for it is tolerably good.

27,792. Do you know the extent of it?—No.

27,793. Have you any idea?—No, I have made no inquiries, or concerned myself about that. It was considered a great boon to get it.

27,794. And you think it has done some good?—Oh, yes, and the late Duke has fenced it too.

27,795. Do you think a still greater extension would be a still greater good?—Well, I could not say: perhaps they may have enough in proportion to their arable lands: they cannot all winter what they have in summer.

27,796. Mr Forsyth.—There are a large number of small crofts at Portskerra. How do the people mostly get their living?—By fish: they prosecute the fishing.

27,797. Are there many holders at Portskerra who do not fish?—No, there are not many.

27,798. Do you fish yourself?—No.

27,799. How do you get your living, because your croft is a very small one?—I have been occupied as a blacksmith.

27,800. Now, how many people could be comfortably accommodated at Portskerra, so far as the present land goes?—It is fully occupied at present.

27,801. But I think you would admit that the crofts in Portskerra are far too small to maintain a family?—Yes, if they had to depend entirely on them; but it is on the sea they are dependent, not on the crofts.

27,802. Could you give me any idea how many men there are in Portskerra who are not regular fishermen?—No, there are very few.

27,803. They are nearly all fishermen?—Yes, all fishermen.

27,804. Would you recommend that these fishermen should have larger crofts?—I could not say, but they cannot be enlarged here at all events.

27,805. If they were removed, or if they moved to new places, they would have to give up the sea?—Yes, probably.

27,806. Do you not think that if the crofts at Portskerra were rather larger,—smaller in number, but bigger in size, the fishermen would be able to make a good living?—Certainly.

27,807. Especially if the harbour were improved?—If a harbour was to be made perhaps it might reduce the crofts.

27,808. Reduce the number of fishing holdings, and increase their size, is that your idea, so as to keep the fishermen near the sea, with a larger holding, and with an improved harbour?—An improved harbour would perhaps lead to the place being laid out in feus if the fishing would prosper, and they had accommodation for boats. There might perhaps be hundreds of boats fishing here if there was a harbour to afford them shelter.

27,809. And that would add to the prosperity of the place you think?—Yes.

27,810. Are there in Portskerra, do you think, people who wish to take the large holdings we have heard of to-day already, that is to say to leave the sea and go to the land entirely?—I don't think so.

27,811. According to your idea then it is a question of improving the fishermen's position here so far as Portskerra is concerned (I am not talking of Melvich at present); the question is how best to improve the condition of the fishermen?—A good harbour is the only way of improving their condition.

27,812. Could that be at all easily done here?—Yes.

27,813. Have you any idea of the expenditure required?—For a very good harbour perhaps £20,000. Melvich, Sutherlandshire.

27,814. Would not less do?—The half of that might make a good harbour too; and less might do. Robert Campbell.

27,815. Do you speak as regards Melvich too? Do you represent Melvich?—No.

27,816. There are other people coming forward to speak as regards Melvich, are there?—I am not sure; there may be.

27,817. But you are representing Portskerra?—No, I came here to give information about Golval.

27,818. You do not represent Portskerra generally?—No.

27,819. The Chairman.—Were you appointed as a delegate?—Yes, to give information regarding Golval and the neighbouring townships.

27,820. In any of the evidence given here to-day, are you representing the fishermen of Portskerra?—No.

27,821. You have just been answering Mr Forsyth's questions as a resident in Portskerra, who knows a good deal about the place?—Just so.

27,822. And have given your own individual impressions?—Yes.

WILLIAM MACLEOD, Crofter, Achina, Farr (44)—examined William Macleod.

27,823. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

27,824. Was your rent dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—Yes.

27,825. What was your old rent?—17s. 3d.

27,826. And what is the new rent?—With the extension of hill pasture £2, 9s.

27,827. I see you have a holding of 1½ acres arable, and 2½ acres outrun, with a share of 2953 acres of hill common to the townships of Achina, Achneiskich, Ardneiskich, Clerkhill, Crask, Dalcharn, Farr, Newlands, Rhian-chaitel, and Swordly West.

27,828. Have you a written statement?—Yes.

27,829. Just read it.—To the Royal Commission, (Highlands and Islands, 1892).—Having seen from the public prints and advertisements issued in the name of your honourable Commission that you had been appointed by Royal Warrant to inquire what land in the county of Sutherland, among other counties, now used as deer forests, grouse moor, or other sporting purposes, or as grazing not occupied by crofters or other small tenants, was, in your opinion, capable of being cultivated to profit or otherwise advantageously occupied by crofters or other small tenants, the crofters of the Kirkton division of the parish of Farr, at a public meeting held for the purpose, appointed me to give such evidence on their behalf as would enable your honourable Commission to carry out her Majesty's commands. I will, therefore, endeavour to limit myself briefly to the points on which you desire evidence.

There is, in our opinion, plenty of land, such as you are requested to report upon, in the parish of Farr. We refer particularly to Strathnaver, which previous to the year 1817 had a population of upwards of 2000 souls. How they were cleared out, and the attendant horrors, are now matters of history. We are the descendants of the cleared out people who were driven to poverty and untold hardship on the rocky and barren sea-shore, and we would be only too willing to return to Strathnaver to-morrow if we got the opportunity.

As we consider the evidence of your Honours will be the best evidence of the fitness of Strathnaver for profitable and advantageous occupation that can be brought before you, we will be glad to point out the localities in Strathnaver to which we refer.

I have to inform your Honours that there are sixty townships in Strathnaver suitable for occupation by crofters, and from which the people were removed at the time of the Strathnaver clearances, and had all their houses and lands confiscated, and were placed on the barren sea-shore without any provision being made for them.

Melvich, Sutherlandshire.

William Macleod.

I am requested to inform your Honours that there are plenty of people in the Kirkton division who are prepared to remove to Strathnaver on condition that they get it at its fair agricultural value and not at the value placed upon that portion assigned to them recently from the Skelpick farm, namely, 1s. 1½d. per acre, while the big farmers in many cases do not pay 2 per cent. on money expended on improvements, and nothing for the land.

In conclusion, we trust your Honours will submit an impartial report to Her Majesty's Government on behalf of the downtrodden Highlanders, and that Parliament will pass an Act which will restore to us the lands from which our forefathers were mercilessly burnt out. (Signed) WILLIAM MACLEOD.

27,830. You mentioned 60 townships?—Yes.

27,831. You did not give us their names?—I have not got the names here.

27,832. I think I can supply that. In the Oban Times of 15th April 1893 there was published a list of the townships,* with the number of families in each, and the number of arable acres, that being taken from the work I have already referred to,—the general view of the county of Sutherland, presented by Captain John Henderson to the Board of Agriculture in 1815, and the names, which are divided into two lists, are as follows:—

27,835. Do those whom you represent subsist by fishing?—Very few of them. There is another delegate coming after me from the fishing township in the district.

* According to Mr George Mackay, County Councillor for Farr, the Old Strath-Naver townships were as follows:—

East Side of River, proceeding upwards towards its source:—Aird-an-iasgaich, Ach-an-iasgaich, Blaran-odhar, Dalcharn, Adhina, Kylile, Ach-coille-nam-Boirgin, Ach-an-lochaidh, Raonbuidhe, Dail-a'-mhuillinn, Sceilpig, Achadh-mor, Ach-an-eilein, Dun-Bhidein, Rabhaigil, Garbh, Rheaphail, Innse-lampaidh, Rhealoisg, Dail-mhina, Ach-a'-phris, Ach-an-Ràth, Raomasdail, Rosail, Bad-an-losgainn, Bad-an-leth-leo'id, Dail-Harol, Truidairsgaig, Ach-an-Eas, Ach-a'-chuil, Rhea-chopag, Coire-h-iubhran, Allt-an-laoghard, Allt-na-Bà, Coire-na-feárra, Nibad, Rhea-shealabhag, Blar-dubh, Clibrig, Strath-Bhagastaidh, Cnoc-an-Duin, Taobh-mor-Mudail, Allt-na-h-eirthe.

West Side of the River, proceeding down the Strath towards the sea:—Bad-an-t-seabhaig, Taobh-beag-Mudail, Cnoc-dubh, Rudha-'chaisteil, Grum-mor, Achadh-mor, Grum-beag, Dail-shobhrach, Clais-mhairtinn, Ceann-na-coille, Rhea-dorch, Ceadsaraidh, Rhea-choirce, Saghair, Bad-gallag, Achadh-braigh-Shaghair, Breaclait, Lang-dail, Sgail, Achadh-mhaoil-Duainidh, Staonachdairidh, Leitir-bheag, Poll-Ruisginidh, Craicirnis, Dail-Leusaraidh, An-talamh-ur, Ach-shalmaidh, Carnachadh, Dail-Thorcuil, Achadh-Cheargairidh, Dail-Bhiogais, Dail-Thorraisgil, Aipigil, Ach-nam-Buithrin, Leag-bhuirne and Innirnamhair.

27,836. What district is that?—Kirtomy; most of the fishermen are in that township.

27,837. How do those subsist who do not depend upon fishing?—They have to go to all parts of the world for work, some to America.

27,838. They do not depend entirely on their holdings?—They cannot.

27,839. But they make their livelihood partly from the holdings and partly from outside labour?—Just so.

27,840. I would like to ask you this general question. Do the people who wish to change their holdings look in the main for assistance in setting themselves up in their new holdings; or do they look to doing for themselves without assistance?—A number of them would do it themselves, but that would depend very much upon the conditions on which they would get the land.

27,841. What do you say as to the majority; would the majority do for themselves, or would they look for assistance?—I believe the majority would do it, if they saw a good sign before them that they would get land at its prairie value.

27,842. Assume that they got land at a Fair Rent, —I mean a Fair Rent in the whole circumstances of the case—do the majority look forward to getting assistance, or do they look forward to doing the thing themselves?—I would not go to the majority with it, but I am safe to say that a large number of them would do without any assistance providing that they would secure the land on favourable terms, and saw they could make a comfortable living on it.

27,843. But I understand you also to say that a considerable number would require assistance?—Yes, I believe so.

27,844. Mr Gordon.—What size of holding would you suggest?—I could not say much regarding pasture, but for arable I would suggest between 20 and 30 acres, so that a family might live comfortably on it.

27,845. You say the extent of arable at that time was said to be between 900 and 1000 acres in the whole Strath?—Yes.

27,846. Well, if you were to give 30 acres to each you would not accommodate more than about 30 families supposing you had the whole Strath, according to that statement?—But there could be more taken in. I don't look merely to the ground that is there in the meantime.

27,847. Is there much land, in your opinion, that could be reclaimed in addition to the old arable land? —I am certain of that.

27,848. How many people do you suppose the Strath would hold if it was all repeopled in holdings of the size you mention?—That is a thing that I have not studied.

27,849. I am afraid you have not studied it, because I think with holdings of 20 or 30 acres you would soon find your land exhausted,—not only all the old arable land but all the reclaimable land?—Well, I would not like to leave myself unless I could see my way to live on the new holding.

27,850. What I would like to point out is that it is possible you might hold a very erroneous impression as to the number of people you could put into the Strath in holdings of a size to occupy them fully?—Yes, but the Strath is long.

27,851. No doubt. I don't know much about the Strath yet, but I judge from what you have said yourself and what the Chairman has read out?—Oh, there is plenty of land to be reclaimed in it.

27,852. I am not quite sure of that; we will see that by-and-bye. But I am afraid there is a good deal of reclamation that would not pay very well; that is to say they would not repay the man who was at the cost of making them?—In what respect?

27,853. In respect that they would cost too much to reclaim to be of any value to you afterwards.—What did it cost for what was taken in before in the Strath?

27,854. I do not go upon the cost of these recent improvements at all.—It is the former improvements I look to.

27,855. That is what I am looking to. I am supposing that a man can take in land at about £10 an acre, and I don't think he could do it for very much less, but he should be able to do that unless the ground requires much draining; and if it does require much draining he is better to leave it alone. But I am supposing you could take in the land such as it is at a cost not exceeding £10 an acre, and I am afraid that there is not a great extent of land that could be added to that which was arable land previously to the evictions?—Yes, higher up than Rhifail.

27,856. On dry land?—Yes.

27,857. Is it green or heather?—It is a mixture.

27,858. Are you acquainted with the land up there? —I do not go up very often, but I have gone at different times.

27,859. Is that glen liable to frost?—Not so far as is known to me.

27,860. I observed yesterday at Rhifail that instead of planting their potatoes at the foot of the farm where you would think they would be most convenient for use during harvest time at anyrate, they put them away up to the very top of the field; the fact of their doing so impresses me with the idea that they were afraid of frost if they had put them lower down?—Really, I cannot say much regarding that, but I know one thing for certain, it is they who have the crop.

27,861. This is a very essential matter, and if you speak about a place of that kind it is very necessary that you should know about that?—The like of us cannot understand everything connected with this Commission. Very few delegates appearing before the Commission can come out with everything just with certainty. [The Chairman.—We are glad to take all we can get from you]. One thing I am certain of is this, that it is they who have the crop up there and not us.

27,862. They have the crop?—Yes, the corn crop.

27,863. You have some pretty good pasture down beside you, but the great mistake of the crofters seems to be that they invariably overstock?—Every one tries to put on as much as he can.

27,864. You are a crofter yourself?—Yes.

27,865. Have you sheep?—Yes.

27,866. How many?—Fourteen ewes.

27,867. Now, assuming that there were new settlements made in that Strath and that part of the hill ground was allocated to the new townships, would you suggest that this pasture should be occupied as a club farm, or, as Mr Mackenzie suggested, each man having his own stock?—I would go in for that myself.

27,868. For what?—For every one holding his own stock.

27,869. Is there not a little danger of the weak ones going to the wall in that case?—I cannot say very much regarding that.

27,870. I am afraid that is not an infrequent occurrence. Would it not be a fairer thing for the crofters all round that the stock should be a common stock?—The same as they have just now.

27,871. A common stock which would belong to no man in particular, but to the township and under the management of a qualified shepherd?—That is something on the old style again.

27,872. I don't know what was the old style but I think that is the fair style, and every man gets his own? —That is just what is called the farms again, the same as they are constituted in the meantime, and the same as the farmers have. That is not what we want: it is an extension of new holdings.

27,873. Very well, you get your holdings, but suppose ten of you together, that would be 400 sheep you would have: that number would be sufficient to employ a shepherd?—But where is the arable land now for it?

27,874. You were telling me there was plenty in the glen?—I am assuming there was a certain portion of the glen set aside for ten families.

27,875. The Chairman.—What Mr Gordon means to ask is whether it would not be more advantageous for the crofters to manage their common stock through a qualified shepherd, or whether it would be better for each to manage his own?—I would go in for that in the hill.

27,876. But whether would it be more profitable and more advantageous altogether that they should have

Melvich, Sutherlandshire.

William Macleod.

ten crofters, say each with 40 sheep, in a common stock on the hill managed by a committee with a qualified shepherd; or should each crofter look after his own sheep?—I would go in for them having them in common in the hill.

27,877. In the form of a club?—Yes, for the new holdings; each one would have his own holding and the pasture in common.

27,878. Managed by a committee?—Yes.

27,879. And with a qualified shepherd?—Yes.

27,880. Mr Forsyth.—You mean the stock in common as well as the land in common?—No, I don't mean the arable land.

27,881. But the hill land?—Yes.

27,882. You mean sheep stock on the hill held in common on the club farm system as well as the hill land held in common, in fact both land and stock on the hill in common?—Yes.

27,883. The Chairman.—And each man having his own arable land and outrun to himself?—Yes.

27,884. That is what Mr Gordon meant?—I had misunderstood him.

27,885. Mr Sutherland.—You have heard the statement that was read out by the Chairman as to the number of people and the number of acres arable in Strathnaver?—Yes.

27,886. The division gives 5 acres arable to each of these families?—At that time.

27,887. That is the estimate which was made by Captain Henderson, that each family had 5 acres of arable land. I suppose you have frequently heard it asserted that the people were turned out of Strathnaver in order to improve their condition?—Many a time I have read it and heard it.

27,888. You are the descendant of one of those who were turned out?—Yes.

27,889. You presumably were turned out of a 5 acre holding of land?—I assume that.

27,890. And what is the size of your holding now?—One and a half acre.

27,891. You were improved by turning you out of a 5 acre holding to a 1½ acre holding?—Yes, your honour; a great improvement.

27,892. Would you be inclined to reverse the improvement now? Do you think you would be better with a 5 acre holding in Strathnaver than a 1½ acre holding in Achina?—That is what brought me here to-day.

27,893. You have heard difficulties started about stocking holdings?—I hear them every day in the year from some people.

27,894. Have you ever heard a complaint that you overstock your present holdings?—We can put the stock on there as thick as we like.

27,895. No one offers the slightest objection?—No.

27,896. They complain that you overstock your present grazing?—Some do.

27,897. And that if you got new holdings you will not be able to stock them?—They say so.

27,898. They say so?—But let them try it.

27,899. Don't you see that in the one case they complain of your having too much stock and in the other case of your having none at all?—Yes.

27,900. But your opinion is that if you have too much stock on the poor place you would be able to stock a good place?—Just so.

27,901. That you think is a natural argument to use?—Yes.

27,902. Then, with regard to the prospects of success if you went there, you will admit, I have no doubt, that the increasing of the amount of arable land there would enable you to occupy the grazing to greater advantage?—Certainly.

27,903. You have seen reclamations, have you not in Strathnaver?—Yes.

27,904. Who paid for them?—Dunrobin or the Duke or what they call it.

27,905. The proprietor paid for them?—Yes.

27,906. It was not the large farmer who paid for them?—They don't pay for anything there; they get everything done for nothing.

27,907. What do you mean by that statement?—I have that in my statement. As far as we can judge they do not pay 2 per cent. on the outlay.

27,908. They do not reclaim land?—They do not reclaim land, but they sit and live in the best of our land.

27,909. And the land that is reclaimed is paid for by the proprietor?—Yes.

27,910. And they do not pay the same rent as you pay?—Certainly not. The rental is here and the estate books and the acreage, and it is easily known.

27,911. Then another obstacle that is sometimes put forward, I don't know if you hear it much, but I will ask you about it,—the fear of frost?—Well, there is always some fear from the like of that.

27,912. But do you think that the potato crop suffers much from frost in Strathnaver?—How have they always got potatoes there?

27,913. That is what I was going to ask you. Do you know the shepherd at Achnaburin?—Yes.

27,914. Do you remember where his land is?—Yes.

27,915. Where is it?—Beside the river.

27,916. How many feet above the river?—About two or three feet.

27,917. On the margin?—Yes.

27,918. And how far from the river?—Close to it.

27,919. Down at the river bank?—Yes.

27,920. Did you see it yesterday?—Yes.

27,921. Did you see the good potatoes he has?—I did not see the potatoes themselves, but I saw the shaws.

27,922. That is what I mean; did they show signs of frost?—No, there was no appearance of it.

27,923. Are you of opinion that there really would be substantial damage done to potatoes or any other crop there provided the people cultivated the flats by the riverside?—There is no difficulty in that; I don't see any difficulty in the way.

27,924. Do you know, as a matter of fact, that potatoes are sometimes frosted?—Sometimes they are with the crofters, with the poorest in the place.

27,925. Where you are at present?—Yes.

27,926. And over the country?—Yes.

27,927. Do you think now it would be greater there than over the country generally?—I don't think so; for we very often get potatoes down the Strath for seed.

27,928. You get seed potatoes from Strathnaver?—We do at times; I have seen potatoes coming down for seed and potatoes going up for seed.

27,929. I suppose you can say generally that you know the sentiments of the people round about?—I think I should.

27,930. Did you follow what was stated by the Chairman, with regard to the number of tenants that were in Bettyhill at the time of which he spoke?—Yes.

27,931. How many did he say there were?—Was it not two? [The Chairman.—Two with 14 acres arable in 1815.]

27,932. Did that strike you as he was reading?—I was noticing it at the time.

27,933. How many are there now?—None except the hotel.

27,934. Then the other places; how many families are in Dalcharn now?—Six I think.

27,935. And there were only four then?—Yes.

27,936. Do you know Clerkhill?—Yes.

27,937. How many families are there now?—I think six.

27,938. Do you remember how many were mentioned in the list?—One.

27,939. Then, we may take it generally, I suppose, that the people who were in the townships above have disappeared, and that there are more down below than there were before?—Yes.

27,940. That would naturally follow. Then, the reclaiming of land you think would follow the settlement of the people there, would it not?—Yes, I have no doubt of it.

27,941. And a great deal more could be made arable than the people had when they were there before?—There is no doubt of that; that is visible enough.

27,942. What makes you think that?—The land is lying yonder, and there is nothing to do but to improve it the same as was done before.

27,943. Where?—In any extension that the crofters may get there are so many acres ready for the plough, and in a little time he could trench and take in more in connection with the green.

27,944. You think that in the case of the small holder the tendency would be continually to reclaim land?—Certainly.

27,945. In order to get better wintering for his stock?—Yes.

27,946. And do you think there would be a number of people ready to take holdings there if they got the opportunity on reasonable conditions?—There is no doubt of that.

27,947. Mr Macaulay, Solicitor, Golspie.—With regard to this place where there were six crofters, Clerkhill; do you know anything of the party who had this holding before?—That is Gordon.

27,948. Yes, was he a crofter?—No, he was a tacksman.

27,949. The Chairman.—Is that all you wish to say?—There is one matter I omitted to state, and that is regarding the grazings. In our district the whole of the pasture is common, and the people dispute very much about it, and requested me to mention the matter. They have it all in common, and the hotelkeeper has the privilege of the hill which they have no right to. I stated before your lordship, while the Crofters Commission sat at Farr, that they had no right to the old pasture and yet they held a stock there, sometimes about 100 sheep. Now, it is very hard on the crofters there if they have to pay for the whole pasture, while the estate reaps the benefit two fold. Now, Mr Box is here and he can state the facts better than I can, and I would like to know about it as I was requested to ask.

27,949*a*. That is rather a subject which falls to be dealt with by the Crofters Commission; we cannot go beyond the terms of our remit. Matters are occasionally mentioned which are not quite germane to this inquiry, and as we do not wish to stop the evidence we may allow them to pass: but that is a point that is not before us.—We must look to it somewhere; we cannot go on paying for the hill pasture while the estate reaps the benefit of it. Your lordship stated at the Court there that the hotel has no right to the hill pasture, and still they have the stock on it.

27,950. Which hotel do you mean?—Bettyhill. I don't refer to the tenant at all, but only to the hotel. It is the estate that gets the benefit of that, not the hotel so far as is known to us. They get the rent, I believe, £50, and the tenant has liberty to stock the hill for which we pay.

27,951. I am afraid we can hardly go into the merits of that question in this Commission. Is there any other matter you wish to refer to?—I omitted to say that I am a member of the Parochial Board; and thus have an intimate knowledge of the parish.

JOHN MACKAY, Newlands, Farr (32)—examined.

27,952. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—I am a crofter's son.

27,953. What is your father's name?—George Mackay.

27,954. Your father holds 2 acres 3 roods arable and 1 acre outrun, with a share in 2953 acres of hill pasture?—Yes.

27,955. Have you a written statement?—I have some notes, but they are something similar to Macleod's evidence. I want to refer to a point or two that were not taken up.

27,956. Please do so in your own way?—It has often been asserted in support of the Sutherland clearances that crops will not grow in Strathnaver. Finer crops of oats, hay, turnips, potatoes, and garden produce can hardly be found, and crops can be raised to advantage in Strathnaver when they are a failure along the coast. I remember seed potatoes being supplied to the crofters from the farm of Syre when the crofters had none.

This year the corn and hay crops were in the stackyard at Syre about the middle of August, whilst along the sea coast the crofters' corn was out five weeks later. If it was an exceptional year it was an exceptional year all over, and it proves that crops can be gathered in the Strath earlier than along the coast.

There are hundreds of acres ready for the plough, while thousands can be reclaimed and made into good land. The crofters are prepared to take the land at a fair rent.

The sheep farm of Rhifail is 12 miles by 5, at a rental of £670. On this farm alone the Duke spent on improvements between £8000 and £10,000, while the crofters reclaimed, fenced, and drained their lands and built houses at their own expense.

Mr Sellar holds 25 miles in length, or 43,300 acres, at less than 4½d. per acre, while the crofters pay 1s. 1½d. per acre for the tail of Skelpick farm. When the crofters succeeded in reclaiming land, building houses, and growing crops on the miserable patches allotted to them, it is certain that they would be successful in Strathnaver with from 20 to 30 acres arable, with pasture in proportion. Some, no doubt, would require assistance to stock the holding and build houses. Others would be able to do it all themselves.

There should be no difficulty in getting a grant from Government when there was enough money in the Treasury to banish the Highlanders to the wilds of America.

(Signed) JOHN MACKAY.

27,957. Can you mention those parts of Strathnaver where frost never was seen?—Rossal for one place. Grumbeg is always clear of frost.

27,958. Any more?—It was very seldom seen on the low ground at Langdale, especially at one place, a park there close to the river. It is a very rare thing for the shepherd at Skail to have ever seen frost on his potatoes.

27,959. Would you say that the potato crop in Strathnaver is a more certain crop than the potato crop raised by the crofters?—Yes, certainly.

27,960. Are crops more liable to suffer from frost on the crofters' land as at present occupied than in Strathnaver?—Not more, but they are as subject to it along the coast as at Strathnaver. The last year that I saw frost in Strathnaver the crops all the way from Portskerra here to Skerra West were touched with it, and they were all black in one morning.

27,961. What year was that?—Four or five years ago.

27,962. That was an exceptionally bad year from frost?—Yes, but the crofters' potatoes were equally black with those on Strathnaver.

27,963. Do the crofters with the lands they have at present more frequently lose their potato crop from frost than those who grow potatoes in Strathnaver?—Generally speaking, they do, because some years when the potatoes were frosted along the coast here there was none of it at Strathnaver; but there are very few who raise potatoes there except the shepherds.

27,964. Mr Sutherland.—You rather astonished me with regard to the difference in price that the proprietor gets for the land from the large farmer and the small: are you certain of your figures?—Such as I can make out it is so. There are 43,300 acres rented for £750 according to the valuation roll.

27,965. I just want to know where you get the figures?—I took them from the valuation roll, and, of course, I made up the total myself: if I went wrong it is in making that calculation. I took the acreage from the "Sportsman's Guide" where it is given at some hundred acres less than it appears by the map. It is 12 miles by 5 on the map, which I think gives 48,300 acres and it is only 35,000 acres in the "Sportsman's Guide."

27,966. You are referring at the present time to the farm of Rhifail?—Yes.

27,967. You said it pays 5½d. an acre?—Yes.

Melvich, Sutherlandshire.

John Mackay.

27,968. And you state also that the proprietor spent from £8000 to £10,000 upon it?—Yes.

27,969. So that after an investment of £8000 to £10,000 upon this farm it only pays 5½d. an acre?—Yes.

27,970. And your further statement is that the crofters for the extension of holdings they were given for the lower end of Skelpick are paying 1s. 1½d. per acre?—Exactly so. [Mr Gordon.—Who fixed that rent?—The Crofters Commission.]

27,971. How many times is the one greater than the other,—nearly three times?—Yes.

27,972. So the crofters are paying almost three times as much per acre as the large farmers?—Yes, and if the improvements are taken into account five times more. The crofter gets nothing done in the way of improvements; they had to make their own improvements, and as they did that the rents were always raised.

27,973. I am referring particularly just now to the exact data we have got as to what is paid per acre by the crofters for the extension that was given to them?—Yes.

27,974. You stated also that one holding was 25 miles long?—Yes, Mr Sellar's farm; from the top of the holding at Mudale down to the Carnachy burn.

27,975. That is the farm of Syre?—Yes.

27,976. You think that is a little too big?—Yes, I think it is.

27,977. In view of the holdings of 1½ acres down at the foot?—Yes.

27,978. But that is not the whole that Mr Sellar has got: has he not also a farm at Golspie?—Yes, I think he has.

27,979. And has he a farm anywhere else?—I don't know: he had two or three on that side before.

27,980. You think that is a state of matters that would bear a little remedying?—Yes.

27,981. You know Strathnaver very well, do you?—Yes, I have been there since I was a child; since I was twelve years of age I have been in it more or less.

27,982. And you think it is a far better subject than the rocky shore down here?—Certainly.

27,983. Do you think there would be any danger of people not taking small holdings if they got them?—Not in the least; they would take them fast.

27,984. And you think the condition of things there is favourable?—Yes, certainly.

27,985. There is a road right through the glen?—Yes.

27,986. Communication from end to end?—Yes; to Kinbrace Railway Station, and to Lairg Railway Station, and down to Bettyhill.

27,987. And you think all these things would tend to success?—Certainly, there was nothing of that when the crofters had it; they had no communication with the outside world except on horseback.

27,988. So that if the conditions were favourable in the olden times they are still more favourable now?—Three times more.

27,989. And is there a good opportunity at the present time to make a change back to the old arrangement?—I think so.

27,990. What is the circumstance that, in your opinion, makes it favourable at the present time?—I hear a grumble made about the crofters having too much stock, and, therefore, I think the best thing is for them to get land to put the stock on.

27,991. Then, from the other side, as to the large holdings, do you think they are a great success?—No, I don't think so.

27,992. What is, in your opinion, the reason for this want of success on the part of the large farmers at the present time? You have heard of reductions of rent given to them, have you not?—I believe that the land is now about exhausted, and the one stock being kept on it just destroys it, so that stock cannot be worked profitably.

27,993. What do you mean exactly by the land being exhausted?—It has never been turned up for the last eighty or eighty-five years, and thus it has got into its present state. I have seen myself at Rhifail farm, the ploughman setting the heather of the old crofters' ground on fire, and coming in with the plough after that, so that proves clearly that it was not feeding for sheep or anything else. And there are hundreds of acres to-day on Strathnaver where no person could say there had ever been a crofter unless they knew it; the ground is all under heather.

Melvich, Sutherlandshire.

John Mackay.

27,994. You heard little differences of opinion expressed here to-day with regard to the green spots on sheep farms?—Yes.

27,995. It was asserted that the value was given to the pasture by these old green spots?—Yes.

27,996. Do you believe that that is true?—No. Of course, the value is given to the pasture by these; but I see that crofters have very little of these green spots in their pasture, and yet their stock is equally successful.

27,997. But I was referring rather to the value given to the sheep farms by these green spots?—Oh, certainly, they make out that that is the value.

27,998. Who gave these places the value they now have?—The crofters.

27,999. When?—Before they were evicted.

28,000. And that value the crofters have been losing ever since?—That has been taken from them, and they never got any compensation.

28,001. So you think it is the result of the former industry that is getting exhausted?—Exactly.

28,002. And, therefore, the large sheep-farming system is going?—Yes, fast.

28,003. What then would be, in your opinion, a reasonable cure for the present state of things?—To put the crofters back again and give them proper holdings.

28,004. You would take one yourself if you got the chance?—Certainly.

28,005. The Chairman.—What sort of holding would you desire to have in Strathnaver?—It would depend greatly on circumstances. There might be some families with five or six members, and these would be capable of working from 20 to 30 acres; and there might be others again with only one or two, and 10 acres perhaps would be as much as they would be able to have.

28,006. You would have holdings varying from 10 to 20 or 30 acres arable?—Yes.

28,007. What size of holding would you yourself be inclined to take?—I would just go in for as much as ever I could, if I was to get the chance.

28,008. How many acres arable?—About 20 acres.

28,009. May I ask you would you venture upon that without assistance, or are you one of those who would look for assistance?—It would depend entirely on where we got to work.

28,010. I am assuming that you got the land at what you yourself considered a Fair Rent, whatever it was?—With a little time the most of the crofters could manage. I don't see why if they were successful in coming down to such barren places as this and reclaiming the land, and so forth, without assistance, they should not be equally successful in going back to good land without assistance.

28,011. You think that having done so well as they have done in poor lands they might reasonably be expected to do as well in better land?—Exactly.

28,012. But my question was rather directed to your own case. Would you yourself look for assistance, or would you venture upon this new holding without it,—assuming that you had the land at what you yourself considered a fair rent?—Yes, I would go myself.

28,013. Now, we would like to have your opinion with regard to the club farm system, and I put the question in this form. Do you consider it would be more profitable in every way for crofters to have a common hill ground, with a common stock managed by a committee and in charge of a qualified shepherd; or that each crofter should have his own stock upon this hill ground and manage it himself?—Well, in several ways I believe it would work fully better on the club system. The sheep would have the attention of the shepherd all the year round, and that would be an advantage, except perhaps in the winter time when there might be a difficulty in feeding them; one man might have three times the number of others, and if there was the necessity to hand-feed the stock the shepherd might have some difficulty in working it in that manner.

28,014. But comparing the two systems over all, which do you think would be the more profitable to the crofters?—I could not say actually.

28,015. Have you had any practical experience of the club farm system?—No, none in our district.

28,016. Each man here looks after his own sheep?—Exactly; or in many cases one man may look after five or six crofters' sheep.

28,017. That is a sort of club farm system in a modified form?—Yes.

28,018. Now, don't you think it would be advantageous to extend that system, and instead of one man looking after five or six of his neighbours' sheep as well as his own, to have a central committee with a qualified shepherd looking after the whole, and honestly divide the profits of the year?—Oh, yes, I believe it would work well enough.

28,019. What do you think would be the better course?—I have not had the experience.

28,020. You are not able to compare the two from want of knowledge?—We had none on this side of the county to give us an idea of how it would work.

28,021. You know of the Grazings Act I daresay?—Yes.

28,022. Has the Grazings Act been adopted in this quarter by any of the townships?—No, I don't think so.

28,023. Mr Gordon.—Are you bothered at all with some of the people in your neighbourhood not keeping the sheep clean; not dipping them?—No, it is very seldom that that occurs; of course, sheep may break out unawares to the crofters, and it may happen in places like this where the man perhaps to whom the sheep belong is maybe in America while his sheep are on the hill.

28,024. That is one instance where a club farm would be an advantage, because the sheep would be dipped at regular intervals?—Well, it is generally the case now that all the sheep are dipped at one time, and so many times in the year.

28,025. There is a further advantage which you would come to appreciate very soon if you were accustomed to the system, and that is this, suppose you had 10 crofters with 40 sheep each, or 400 sheep in all: that flock would be all of one character, and the probability is that they would sell for a shilling a head more than in individual lots of 10. A lot of say 150 wedder lambs of one class going to a public sale would certainly fetch a better price than a lot of 20?—They might.

28,026. You speak about the difficulty of wintering; but there is no difficulty in winter any more than in summer, because the turnips or other crops would be stored out of the sheep's way at a certain season of the year, so that the sheep from the hill would have the run of the arable lands in the winter?—Certainly, but they hand-feed all their lambs here in the winter time.

28,027. But the committee might purchase from any tenant who had a little hay to spare; there would be plenty hay grown in the quarter. The shepherd would merely have to purchase hay just the same as another tenant.

28,028. Mr Macaulay, Solicitor, Golspie. — You compared the rent of Syre with that of some lands you have, and this extent of 25 miles you seem to think is a grievance. May I ask whether the crofters would be prepared to take the farm at the same rent as is paid by the present tenant?—There are two farms.

28,029. Well, the two farms?—Yes, and I think they would make a very good thing of it at that money.

28,030. You think they would be prepared to take it if they got the offer?—Certainly.

ALEXANDER MACKAY, Crofter, Kirtomy (60) —examined.

28,031. The Chairman.—You are a crofter?—Yes.

28,032. Have you the holding No. 98 Kirtomy?—Yes.

28,033. I see your arable is 3 acres 3 roods, and your outrun 2 roods. Your old rent was £2, 8s. and your new rent is £3?—Yes.

28,034. And you have a share of 2612 acres common to the townships of Swordly, east of Kirtomy?—Yes.

28,035. Have you a written statement?—Not much. At a meeting of the Strathnaver Branch of the Highland Land Law Reform Association, held on 4th September, I was appointed to represent the townships of Kirtomy and Swordly.

The township of Kirtomy contains 19 crofters and 16 cottars, with a population of about 160, and 50 to 60 acres arable—a poor contrast to the thousands of acres of fine land lying waste in the glens and valleys of Strathnaver and in possession of three or four sheep farmers.

There are about 30 fishermen in Kirtomy, and their gross earnings from the 15th May till the end of August last only averaged about £3 each. By the memorable Strathnaver clearances the township was so crowded by those evicted that it is a hard toil to eke out an existence. At a meeting held in the public school about twenty signed their names as being willing to remove and take crofts in Strathnaver if the Strath is opened up, provided assistance is given by Government for stocking, &c.

(Signed) ALEX. MACKAY.

28,036. There are 19 crofters in Kirtomy?—Yes.

28,037. And 6 cottars?— Ten cottars. There are 16 cottars altogether, and only 10 have outhouses of their own; and there are 19 crofters and 30 fishermen. That includes the crofters.

28,038. I see that in 1815 there were 9 families in Kirtomy, with 30 acres of arable land?—Yes, but there are more to-day.

28,039. These men subsist I daresay mainly by the sea?—Yes, mainly by the sea.

28,040. Do they wish to give up the sea?—Yes, because they are getting tired of it: the fishing has been a clean failure of late years.

28,041. They desire to give up their means of livelihood from the sea and obtain settlements in Strathnaver if settlements can be got?—Yes.

28,042. And to live upon their holdings?—Yes.

28,043. They would wish to have holdings large enough to enable them to make a living without either going to sea, or seeking for labour?—Just to have holdings that would support them the whole year; provided they could get assistance to commence with.

28,044. Is that the unanimous desire of the fishermen?—Yes.

28,045. You said provided they could get assistance?—Yes.

28,046. Is that also the unanimous desire?—The unanimous desire. The people are so reduced to poverty that they cannot take holdings without it.

28,047. They do not contemplate getting holdings in Strathnaver, except with some assistance?—Only with some assistance; they could not do without it.

28,048. Do you mean by way of a loan?—Yes, by way of a loan, or some assistance from his Grace the Duke of Sutherland. If the houses were built by the Duke of Sutherland, or by means of a loan from Government they would try their best to get the land reclaimed and to stock it.

28,049. Do you mean by the house, the house and steading?—Yes, the house and the steading; that is the great difficulty.

28,050. I take it you mean assistance by way of a loan which they would repay in the course of years?—Yes.

28,051. Getting their holdings at a reasonable rent?—

Melvich, Sutherlandshire.

Alexander Mackay.

Yes, at a reasonable and a prairie rent. It was our forefathers who improved what is improved at Strathnaver, and now the big farmers are reaping the advantage of that improvement. They have the benefit of it, and our fathers were sent out from Strathnaver without any compensation; they were burnt out, and although they had their crop on the ground when they were burned out they never got that much for the crop, besides having their houses burnt.

28,052. Mr Gordon.—You give rather a bad account of the success of the fishing for the last year?—Yes, I have to give that I am sorry to say.

28,053. Well, Mr Campbell, the witness from Portskerra here said that if the harbour was improved here it might be of more benefit to the crofters of Portskerra who are fishermen than additional land would be, and that so far as he could say the fishermen would not readily remove from the township of Portskerra to any part of the Bighouse farm. Now, don't you think if you had a better harbour the fishing could be prosecuted with more success?—There is no doubt it could be prosecuted more successfully in the winter time, but for all that the fishermen would rather get land.

28,054. They would rather be farmers than fishermen?—Suppose we had the best harbours in Scotland the fish is getting scarcer on our coast. The trawlers have spoiled our coast entirely.

28,055. But there is a part of Great Britain where trawlers are not admitted, that is the Moray Firth. You are aware of that?—Yes.

28,056. Would there be any inclination on the part of the people of your township to remove from Kirtomy to Nairn or Buckie, or any place on the Moray Firth?—No, I think not.

28,057. They would not like to go there?—No, they would not like to go there.

28,058. You are aware of this, that fishing is carried on there not only profitably but most successfully?—Oh, yes, there is no doubt of that; it is more successful at times.

28,059. The fishermen are not only good hardy fishermen, but they are, as men of business, successful at their calling?—Sometimes.

28,060. But, as a rule, they are?—Just as other men.

28,061. But, as a rule, they are, there is no doubt about that. Now, the question I would like to put to you is whether there would be any inclination on the part of the fishermen of Kirtomy to move to the neighbourhood of a good harbour either in Sutherlandshire, Caithness, or the southern shores of the Moray Firth?—They would rather get the land from which their forefathers were evicted.

28,062. But the difficulty is this that there would not be land for so many people as want it, suppose the whole of the country was broken up?—Let the land be used for what is on it.

28,063. And what would you do with the remainder? You say 20 of your people have signed the paper as wishing to get crofts?—Yes.

28,064. How many people do you suppose would sign a similar paper between Melvich and Bettyhill?—I could not say.

28,065. There would be several hundreds?—I hear from Mr Campbell that the Portskerra fishermen would not take land.

28,066. But you yourself would take it?—Yes.

28,067. But you think they would not be willing to move to the neighbourhood of a harbour?—No.

28,068. Mr Sutherland.—Where did your people come from?—From Strathnaver. My father was born in Altnaharra, and had a holding in Syre. In two years he was evicted from Syre down to Skailwood, and from Skailwood to Carnachy, and from Carnachy to Achkenlochy.

28,069. How many times was he evicted?—Four or five times.

28,070. And he made a home each time?—Yes, a kind of a home. After being in Carnachy for about a year, he was turned out by Mr Sellar, who is now dead and gone; he came down and burnt the house before them. My father and my uncle came down to the house and tried to save the timber of the rafters for making a tent for themselves at night; they got the wood and put it at the back of a hillock for safety, but the burning party came and pulled down the house and then went in search of the timber. They found it at the back of the hillock and put fire to it also.

28,071. So that he could not build another?—No.

28,072. And where was he sent to next?—To Kirtomy, the place where I live now; it was then just on the top of a precipice.

28,073. Did he tell you about the state of matters in the Glen?—He told me the whole thing; and I have gone up the Strath along with him at different times.

28,074. Do you mean to say that your father had to make a new home five different times?—Yes, my father and my grandfather: my father was the eldest of the family.

28,075. He was in his father's family at that time?—Yes.

28,076. You have heard the difficulties that have been raised about making a new home in Strathnaver?—They would not think anything of it those who came from it.

28,077. You do not think there is anything in that objection?—No.

28,078. Now, with regard to the fishing, your father would not have been a fisherman?—No, but the people who came down from Strathnaver had to take to fishing, and it was so dangerous that there was a boat or two lost.

28,079. They did not take to the fishing except by force?—By force.

28,080. By the force of circumstances?—They could not get anything else to do.

28,081. They would either have to fish or to starve?—To starve.

28,082. Were they put down there at Kirtomy for the purpose of being fisherman? Was that stated?—No, they were sent down, it was said, to improve their condition, but it was quite the contrary.

28,083. What preparation was made at Kirtomy to improve their condition?—None at all.

28,084. Was it contemplated that they should turn fishermen?—Yes.

28,085. Was that stated?—Yes.

28,086. And were they provided with a harbour?—Not a harbour, but what God made.

28,087. Have you any harbour to this day?—Not a stone, but just a natural creek, and the people have to haul their boats every day they go to sea.

28,088. You stated that the people of Kirtomy were from home practically after May to the month of August this year?—Yes, from 15th May to the latter end of August, there were nineteen out of Kirtomy at the herring fishing.

28,089. And they only brought home £3 ahead?—The gross average was £3 ahead; I had that from the fishermen themselves at the meeting here in the public school.

28,090. And you have no reason to suppose but that is correct?—Quite correct; some of them came home penniless.

28,091. After being away from their homes for all that time?—Yes, from May to August.

28,092. You are not surprised, I suppose, after that experience that they would like to get a home where they could attend to their business all the year with a reasonable hope of success?—No indeed, they are just getting disgusted with the sea.

28,093. You state that you would require assistance in new holdings?—Yes.

28,094. And to what do you attribute the fact that you require assistance now?—We were made so poor by so many being put together in one township. In the township that was for nine, there are now nineteen.

28,095. And you do not subdivide your holdings?—No.

28,096. Who subdivided them?—The Duke of Sutherland.

Melvich, Sutherland-shire.

Alexander Mackay.

28,097. So that there are now thirty fishermen in Kirtomy?—Yes, there were thirty out last year.

28,098. And their experience after all these years is that they wish to drop their fishing, but they are so poor that they cannot make homes without assistance in the new places?—They cannot make homes without assistance; it is impossible.

28,099. Generally speaking and taking a wide view, to what do you attribute that fact? You heard witnesses here to-day giving evidence that they would be able to take holdings without assistance; what makes the difference between them and Kirktomy do you think?—I cannot say.

28,100. Do you think it was the attempt to make them fishermen in spite of nature?—Yes, I believe there are a good many in the parish who get work mostly every day,—perhaps some of them up Strathnaver; but the Kirtomy people never get a decent day's work on the estate hardly.

28,101. Was it asserted that it was a deliberate attempt to make fishermen of the people?—Yes, just a deliberate attempt to make them take their livelihood out of the sea.

28,102. Without making any provision for them in the way of a harbour or anything?—Not a stone. The Duke of Sutherland has given them a store-house.

28,103. What is it for? What are you going to store in it?—Sometimes fish; if a curer would come to buy it. It is meant for the good of the fishermen. They work at the lobster fishing in the spring, and when they leave that the lobsters are stored in the store-house; also the sails, and nets, and such like. The store-house is very handy.

28,104. Are the people in Swordale in much the same position as you?—There is no fishing there at all except the herring fishing.

28,105. Now where were these men from May to August?—Some of them were in Shields.

28,106. And when the fishing ended at Shields what did they do?—Came home.

28,107. Were they there for the six months?—Yes.

28,108. Where did others go?—To Peterhead, Fraserburgh, Wick, and the early fishing at Scrabster.

28,109. So it cannot be said with any truth that they are not industrious men?—No, they are very enterprising.

28,110. More enterprising than the large sheep farmers? What did they do?—Anything they want they will get, and we get nothing.

28,111. How many people in Kirtomy do you say expressed their willingness to take farms?—Twenty were willing to leave Kirtomy to-morrow, provided they would get some assistance.

28,112. But that assistance they would repay with interest?—With interest.

28,113. They never thought of anything else?—No.

Hugh Gunn.

HUGH GUNN, Baligill, Strathy (36)—examined.

28,114. The Chairman.—Have you something to tell us?—I have nothing to say at all. I was appointed as a delegate, but I did not agree to act, because I have nothing particular to state.

28,115. Were you appointed at a public meeting to come as a delegate from the Armadale district?—From Strathy.

28,116. Do you concur generally in the evidence given to-day?—Yes.

28,117. And you have no addition to make?—No addition to make.

John Mackay

JOHN MACKAY, Strathy (44)—examined.

28,118. The Chairman.—Do you reside in No. 66 Strathy?—No. 74, it is my mother who holds the croft, Widow William Mackay.

28,119. I see your area is 5 acres 2 roods 6 poles arable, 5 acres 34 poles outrun, and a share in 4284 acres. How many share in that?—I mention the number in my statement.

28,120. Your former rent was £4, 1s. 11d. and the present rent is £8, 17s.?—Yes. Melvich, Sutherland-shire.

28,121. Were you appointed as a delegate?—Yes.

28,122. At a public meeting?—At a public meeting. John Mackay

28,123. Held at Strathy I presume?—Yes.

28,124. When was it held?—In April last.

28,125. And you have a written statement?—Yes, which I submitted to a public meeting on Monday last.

28,126. Did they approve of it?—It was unanimously approved of.

28,127. Just read it please?—Statement by John Mackay, delegate, Strathy, representing the townships of Baligill, Strathy, Strathy Point, Aultivullin, Brawl, Aultiphuirst, Ardvinglass, and Leadnagullen.—The following statement was submitted at a public meeting of crofters, cottars, and others, and was approved of unanimously. In the Strathy Strath, forming part of the Armadale sheep farm, there were prior to the clearances thirty-six tenants who were all removed about the year 1817 to make room for sheep, as follows:—Shellach, two tenants; top of strath, eight; Dalangwell, five; Bowside, six; Achrayan, four; Dallchine, five; Dallagnevach, two; Reg Roy, one; Dallgeback, one; Arclouch, one; Baligill Burn, one; total, 36. Some of them got small patches of land at Strathy, which they improved and built houses upon without any assistance. Two years later, in 1819, the Strathnaver evictions took place, when a number of newcomers were settled among them, which left the place so congested that there was no room for making any improvements, and it is in this state at the present day. When the people were in the Straths they were quite comfortable, and ever since they have been in a state of poverty verging on destitution.

There are at present forty crofters in the township of Strathy having only 153 acres called arable land, or an average of about 3¾ acres each. In the township of Balligill there are twelve crofters having 73 acres arable, or an average of about 6 acres each. There are about 2485 acres of hill pasture in common between the townships of Strathy and Baligill, or an average of about 47½ acres for the fifty-two crofters. There are at Strathy Point thirty crofters having 103 acres arable, or about 3¼ acres each; Aultivullin, three crofters and eight acres arable; Brawl, seven crofters and 27 acres arable; Aultiphuirst, six crofters and 17 acres arable; Ardvinglass, three crofters and 9 acres arable; Leadnagullen, twelve crofters and 25 acres arable.

From Strathy Point to Leadnagullen there are sixty-one crofters having a common share in 3740 acres of hill pasture. There are also twelve cottars and a number of lodgers in the district I represent who are landless and quite willing to get land.

General Statement.

In the parish of Farr there are 415 crofters having only about 1462 acres called arable land, with about 37,173 acres hill pasture in common, and paying £1103, 17s. 10d. of rent. We had last year 174 paupers and 42 dependants on the poor roll receiving relief, on whom was expended £1309, 16s. 4d., or £205, 18s. 6d. more than the whole of the crofters' rent. There are nine sheep farms in the parish, including part of Borgie farm, in the hands of seven men, all absentees except two, and holding land to the value of £3395, or more than three times the rental of the 415 crofters—all in the interior of the parish and the crofters on the barren rocks. Deer forests, shootings, and sheep farms pay together £7570, or nearly seven times the rental of all the crofters. The sheep farmers live in luxury on the fruit of our forefathers' labours, and the poor crofters starve in sight of hundreds of acres of the best land in the county. I wish to draw your particular attention to the number of paupers in the parish and the money expended on them, and compare it with the time when the people were living in comfort in the straths and glens before the clearances, when such a being as a pauper was unknown.

(Signed) JOHN MACKAY.

Melvich, Sutherland-shire.
John Mackay.

28,128. You say last year you had 174 paupers and 42 dependants, or in all 216, on the poor roll?—Yes.

28,129. Have the paupers been increasing of late years?—Increasing every year.

28,130. Do you remember the increase last year?—I don't remember.

28,131. But has there been a steady increase in the number of paupers?—There are continual applications at every meeting of the Parochial Board.

28,132. Are you a member of the Parochial Board?—No.

28,133. Who is the Chairman of the Board?—Mr Box, factor for the Duke of Sutherland.

28,134. To what do you attribute that constant increase in the number of paupers and dependants?—The want of land.

28,135. And do you think that if arrangements were made for assignment of land to those who wish it, and can take it, pauperism would decline?—Yes, it would.

28,136. Is there a strong desire for additional land on the part of those whom you represent?—A very strong desire.

28,137. Are the districts you represent congested?—Very congested.

28,138. And is the land they work exhausted?—Very much exhausted by continual cropping.

28,139. Is this desire for land in the form of new holdings, or additional grazing, or both?—Principally new holdings.

28,140. And what do you say as to the question of assistance?—Well, the majority of them would require a little assistance, but I would not consider it much assistance. If they got a proper dwelling-house built I think they would be able to build the offices themselves in course of time.

28,141. If they got some assistance for their dwelling-houses they could manage as to the land and as to the steading?—That is my opinion.

28,142. Assistance by way of loan to be repaid in a period of years?—Yes.

28,143. And getting their holdings at a reasonable rent?—Yes.

28,144. And you have mentioned the places where you think such land ought to be considered by us?—It is not much that I have mentioned, there is not much land; the river has spoilt a good deal since the people left the place, because there were no steps taken to prevent the overflowing of the river.

28,145. And it has destroyed the banks?—Yes, but there could be a good few there.

28,146. On what farm?—On Strathy farm.

28,147. The people at present are all crowded down towards Strathy Point?—Yes.

28,148. And you represent the desire that they should be migrated farther up the Strathy water?—A few of them, but the most of the people at Strathy Point and Strathy are descendants of the people who were evicted from Strathnaver.

28,149. Then, is the land you have in view at Strathnaver mainly?—Both places.

28,150. Mr Forsyth.—Can you tell me what the poor rate is in this parish?—Yes, it is 2s. per £.

28,151. Has it been increasing?—I am not in a position to say.

28,152. At present it will fall 1s. on the landlord and 1s. on the tenant?—Yes.

28,153. And that is owing to the large amount of pauperism that you have been speaking about just now?—Yes.

28,154. Then, in the event of a number of new holdings being created in this district it would be difficult to provide for those who are already very poor and not able to take new holdings, would it not?—To the poorest of them I would give the the holdings that would be left so that they would not require to remove; I mean by that that the township should be weeded out.

28,155. Would you give to the landless poor the holdings of people who went to larger places?—Yes.

28,156. And you think that would keep them off the poor roll?—Yes, and by help of their friends when they were in the better place.

28,157. Mr. Sutherland.—You stated that the poor roll is increasing?—Yearly.

Melvich Sutherland-shire.
John Mackay.

28,158. May I ask you how this process goes on? Do you ever look at the ages of the registered paupers; —Yes.

28,159. Have you been struck by anything in the ages?—Not very much; there are some young people on the roll as well as old people.

28,160. Have you noticed that they are all either very old people or very young people?—The majority are old.

28,161. Why are they paupers, these old people?—Because their friends cannot keep them, and it is too much for them to keep themselves.

28,162. And have they friends here in some cases at all?—Yes, plenty.

28,163. And in other cases?—In the majority of cases they have friends in the township.

28,164. Take the case of an old woman, say one who is a mother or a grandmother, do you know of such?—Yes.

28,165. In some cases friends may be here, but too poor to help?—Yes.

28,166. And in other cases the friends may be away altogether?—In a few cases.

28,167. Which is the more general case?—The more general one is that of those who have friends at home too poor to support them.

28,168. The poor rate you say is 2s. per £?—Yes.

28,169. You were not able to say if it is increasing very rapidly?—I am not in a position to say so.

28,170. But you are aware that the Government subventions for the maintenance of the poor have greatly increased of late?—Yes.

28,171. So it is quite possible for the poor roll to increase enormously without the rate increasing, because you get a greater amount of money now from the Government?—Yes.

28,172. You also said that the greater number of them are descendants of those who came from Strathnaver?—Yes.

28,173. You know Strathy Point very well, don't you?—Yes.

28,174. Have you any remarks particularly to make upon that district?—No, except that I think it is a place that no crofter should be in. Almost every year they lose corn by going over the rocks if a storm is to happen at harvest time; and another thing they lose a great many cattle and sheep.

28,175. How does the improvement theory apply at Strathy Point? You heard the assertion, I suppose, and read it that it was for the improvement of the condition of these people that they were sent down from Strathnaver?—I deny that it was for their improvement.

28,176. And you think, I suppose, that the present situation is quite sufficient refutation of that theory without anything further?—It is.

28,177. I think you also said that the new settlers would in most cases require some assistance?—Yes, in the majority of cases. There might be some amongst them who would be quite able to build and stock with the assistance of their friends in various parts of the world.

28,178. But that remark as to assistance applies more particularly to the district included in Strathy Point you think rather than to some other parts?—No, to the whole district that I represent.

28,179. Do you not think that perhaps thirty men could be selected from among them who would not require any assistance? You observe that the question of assistance would depend very much upon what conditions you may have in your mind as requiring to be fulfilled when they went there?—Of course.

28,180. You may have present in your mind at the present moment that they would be as poor in the future as they are now, but if there were a reasonable hope of the conditions being changed do you not think they might fulfil more onerous conditions in the future than now?—I have no doubt of that.

28,181. That would, you think, be an element in forming any opinion in regard to that?—Yes.

28,182. And if there was a prospect of people being more comfortable in the future they would make greater efforts, don't you think, than they are called upon to make just now?—I have no doubt of that.

28,183. Is it the case that at the present moment the people are without hope that they can improve themselves in their present place?—Yes.

28,184. And do you think the belief in a man's heart that there is no hope has an effect on the efforts he may put forth?—Yes.

28,185. If hope were given to the people that they could improve themselves by their own efforts they would put forth greater efforts than before?—They would; they have no encouragement at present to do anything, because they have no land to improve.

28,186. Take the case of Strathy Point near us here. Can the people put forth any effort of industry to improve their condition?—No.

28,187. The first element of success in the shape of land to work upon is wanting?—Yes.

28,188. But suppose they were put back into Strathnaver, do you think there would be a hope for them there?—I have no doubt of it.

28,189. You have a knowledge also of the fishing? The people at Strathy Point are more or less fishermen, are they not?—Yes.

28,190. You have heard the statement that has been made by Mr Mackay, Kirtomy?—Yes.

28,191. Does the experience that he relates of Kirtomy apply also within your knowledge to Strathy Point?—I believe it does.

28,192. A great number go away to the fishing?—Yes.

28,193. Do they carry on a fishing at Strathy Point itself?—A little, but it does not pay them.

28,194. Do you know under what circumstances they carry it on?—They sell their fish to a curer.

28,195. Have you ever seen what is called their harbour?—I have.

28,196. And you know the conditions under which they land their boats?—I do.

28,197. Are there many accidents off this coast by drowning?—Not many, because they do not fish but with small boats.

28,198. I am talking of the whole of this district round here?—Three years ago there was an accident.

28,199. How many people were drowned do you remember?—I don't remember just now. I am told twelve from Portskerra alone were drowned.

28,200. Now, one question in conclusion. Would you yourself take a holding in Strathnaver if you got it under reasonable conditions?—I would in a day.

28,201. You are quite prepared to do so?—Quite prepared.

28,202. Mr Box, factor.—Do I understand that you are in a position to take a holding in Strathnaver?—On certain conditions.

28,203. What conditions are they? Are you in a position to bear all the expense in connection with that?—No, I did not say so.

28,204. You said in the commencement of your statement that there were several townships in Strath Strathy?—Yes.

28,205. Would you tell me whether any of these are in your own grazings just now?—Yes.

28,206. They are not on the farm?—Not on the farm.

28,207. You also spoke of the destruction by the flooding of the river?—Yes.

28,208. Can you tell me any of these places where any quantity of the arable land was taken away by the Strathy river?—Almost all of the places, a good deal of land.

28,209. What number of acres can you say?—I cannot say the number of acres, but there is a lot of shingle and stuff spread on what used to be arable land.

28,210. There is a little at the mouth of the river where the crofts are?—I mean at the top of the Strath.

28,211. But you would not say that there is very much damage done after all?—There is a good deal of damage done.

28,212. Mr Sutherland.—Since how long have these old townships been in your grazings?—About nine or ten years. [Mr Box.—I may perhaps state that in 1884 an addition was made to these grazings.]

28,213. The Chairman.—What was the extent of it? [Mr Box.—About 3000 acres, and it was all fenced by the estate at a cost of over £1000.]

28,214. Can you tell me about the poor rate? [Mr Box.—The poor rate has not increased very much. I would like to ask the witness about it. The Chairman.—Certainly.]

28,215. Mr Box.—Is it not the case within your knowledge that a great many persons apply for parochial relief now who would never have thought of coming to the Board at all before?—Their condition compels them to do that.

28,216. But is it not the case, as a matter of fact, that in late years they were much more reluctant in coming to the Board than they are now?—It is quite possible they might; their position now drives them to ask parochial relief.

28,217. Exactly, or else they would not come. They were helped otherwise in previous years in a way that prevented them coming to the board so frequently as they do now?—That is quite possible.

28,218. Mr Sutherland.—Do you attribute the destruction of that good feeling which Mr Box has referred to, to the present state of things? I have no doubt you have observed that what Mr Box says is quite true, that people more readily apply for parochial relief?—Yes, because circumstances force them to do so.

28,219. You think that that is a great condemnation of the present state of matters?—Yes.

28,220. Does it not point to a time when the people had more self-respect than now?—Yes.

28,221. And a state of greater comfort than now?—Yes.

28,222. Then, with regard to the extension of your grazing, I suppose it was done at the same time as the grazing extensions were given all round Sutherlandshire?—Yes, at the time of the election. [Mr Box. I beg to contradict that.]

28,223. At any rate it was before the election?—Yes.

1. Ribigill.

'I, James Cumming, Free Church Minister, at 'Melness, being on duty at Achnahuagh, Melness, on 'the 5th day of February 1884, interviewed George 'Morrison, tenant there. He is in full possession of his 'faculties, except that his eyesight is a good deal im- 'paired. He stated deliberately as follows:—that he 'was born in Arnaboll, on the west side of Loch Hope, 'in May 1795, that he is now in his 89th year, that 'his wife, Isabella Calder, was born in West Strath, 'Melness, in 15th August, O.S., in 1794; that when he 'was an infant the family removed to the east side of 'Loch Hope, and when he was at the age of six years 'they removed thence to Lettermore, and that he was 'eleven years of age when his father, Alexander Morrison, 'removed thence with his family to Dionachcory, where 'he remained only two years, and removed thence to the 'west side of the Kyle of Tongue; that he knew all 'the tenants in the various townships, embraced in 'what is now called the farm of Ribigill, except 'Scrabster. List of tenants on the farm of Ribigill continued as given by Donald Gow, aged 84, a native of the Parish of Tongue. In his boyhood he taught a side school in Scrabster:— Tongue, Sutherlashire.

Hugh Mackay.

39. Alexander Mackay, Og.
40. Angus Mackay, Abarach.
41. James Mackay.
42. George Mackay, Macurachay
43. Colin Mackay.
44. Davie Reid.
45. Neil Mackay, Clabarich.
46. Ann Uilleam ic Ruaric, Scrabster.

'This same George Morrison declared, that in 1806, 'Lord Reay had come to Tongue House, and that the 'tenants of Lettermore heard there was a meeting of 'leading men in the district held at Tongue House that 'it was reported, this meeting which may be denomin- 'ated a clearance league, were consulting to eject the 'tenants of Lettermore and lay their little farms under 'sheep in the hands of one man. On hearing this that 'the tenants of Lettermore held a meeting, at which 'they agreed to offer a considerable rise on the rent 'formerly paid, and having written a document to this 'effect John Gordon and his father Alexander Morrison, 'two of their number, were deputed by the rest to wait 'on Lord Reay, with the proposal made in the written 'offer; that on handing it to his Lordship, they ob- 'served while perusing the paper, his countenance 'changing with symptoms of displeasure. After reading 'it through, Lord Reay said to the deputies "Poor men, '"what a pity you did not come yesterday! Your '"lands are set on another, but I'll be overmatched '"else he who has got them will pay as high a rent '"for them as you have offered." In a few years 'thereafter Mr Hughieson, from the East Coast, offered 'a higher rent than this tacksman was giving. But a 'dispute having arisen about the boundaries, between 'Lord Reay and the new tenant the case was litigated; 'Lord Reay lost, and Mr Hughieson repudiated the 'tack and the misguided Lord Reay got no rent during 'those years for his lands on the farm of Ribigill. 'And the first tacksman went over to Melness and 'began the work of clearing out the tenants on that 'very extensive farm, and continued at this unholy 'work till he ruined himself and died dependent on 'charity.

'Well, George what was the condition then of the 'tenants of Lettermore? They were better off than 'kings, for they had plenty to clothe and sustain them 'without the care that oppresses kings. What sub- 'stance had your own father? When our family re- 'moved to Dionachcary, there were 70 head of sheep, 'and 60 head of goats, 30 head of black cattle, 3 brood 'mares, and 2 garrons for home work. At to-day's 'value that stock would be a considerable capital? It 'would be close on £500. But, then, there would not 'be many holding so large a stock? About the half 'of them would. Some had a larger stock than my 'father and others less; the half of them fully would 'average as good a stock as my father had.

'Such is the account the so-called crofters give of 'themselves, those that are willing to traduce or mis- 'represent them fix on some poor family or case of 'distress and trump it up as a specimen of the liveli- 'hood the people had. But we know from the amount 'of bone and muscle contained in the frame of an 'average Reay countryman, that pinched maintenance 'never could produce them. Had they been the half 'starved people the Messrs. Thomas Purves and Thomas 'Sellar and others present them to have been how to 'account for the fact that the British Isles produced 'nowhere stronger and more enduring men?

2. Melness.

'The memoranda in this sheet as in sheet No. 1 '(Ribigill) was made at the dictation of the same 'George Morrison.

'The following is a list of tenants and cottars on the 'east side of Loch Hope, being a part of the farm of

'Melness, and resided there about the year 1808, and 'not long thereafter were removed to make room for 'sheep :—

'Besides the above list who paid rent directly at 'Tongue office there were three cottars. The same 'George Morrison declares he saw all these holding 'their lands at the same time. In his own words, '"Saothaireachadh us paid headh na fearainn," i.e., 'cultivating the land and paying its rent.'

'On the west side of Tongue Kyle and in the farm 'of Melness, there were :—

3. Eriboll.

'The following list of tenants on the west side of 'Hope Water, including Eriboll, was given by Neill 'Macleod, presently residing in Skinnet, Melness. Neill 'is a native of Eriboll, and now over eighty years of 'age. This list was taken on the 27th of November 1883. 'The persons mentioned in the list had all of them 'their lots and residences at the same time on what is 'now the farm of Eriboll. There is a tradition as stated 'by James Mackay of Helam, one of the tenants of that 'period, that when it was resolved to put Eriboll into 'the hands of one man, under sheep, the tenants met, 'and after consulting entered into a club and offered '£900 for the farm of Eriboll, but that Mr Anderson, 'who was then factor for Lord Reay, dissuaded his 'Lordship from accepting this offer, advising it would 'be more profitable to eject the people and to lay out 'the lands under sheep. But now in 1884 after the 'present proprietor and his father, Dukes of Sutherland, 'have laid out from 7 to 10 thousand pounds on this 'farm, it is questionable whether it would, if advertised, 'fetch a rent of £900 even now :— Tongue, Sutherlandshire. 'All these resided on what is now the farm of 'Eriboll. Attested correct as taken at the dictation of 'the above mentioned Neill Macleod, at the above 'mentioned date and inserted in this memoranda, May '6, 1884, by

'James Cumming,
'F.C. Minister of Melness and Eriboll.

'Copy of memoranda by the Rev. James Cumming, 'Free Church, Melness, made on the 17th March 1884.

'Adam Gordon Mackay, a native of Abersgi near 'Skelpick, Strathnaver, declared that he is eighty-one 'years of age, was fifteen years old when that district 'was cleared of its inhabitants, that he was the youngest 'of a family of 6 ; that there were 18 men in the party 'that went about that day firing the residences of the 'inhabitants, that they were led by one Duncan Ross, 'a ground officer, who afterwards retired to the district 'of Helmsdale, and died in that part of the country ; 'that on the occasion in question his father and some 'of the stronger members of the family were away from 'what was till then their home, being occupied in con-

'structing a hut at Leadnaguilan, a distance of 10 or '12 miles. Thither they intended removing all the 'movables they could bring with them; that he and 'other juniors had on the previous days pulled down 'the byre, and the portion of the premises used as a 'sitting room, called in Gaelic "cearn." The rafters 'and couplings being principally bog fir, is a very 'durable kind of timber, the boys picked out such 'pieces of the timber as was likely to be of use in con-'structing their future residence at Leadnaguilan; and 'placed them by themselves at some distance from the 'devoted premises; that there were two good rooms, 'usually called in Scotland the "ben," part of their 'dwelling, in which were stowed away chests, with bed 'and body clothes, several articles of furniture, and pro-'vision for the family. But when the incendiaries 'came they set fire to the whole and nothing was 'saved; further that they went and fetched the pieces 'of timber the boys had set apart for future use and 'pitched them into the general conflagration! Is it 'any wonder the memory of these deeds, worthy of 'Huns and Vandals, should rankle in the bosom of the 'people and kindle the hottest indignation in all that 'hear of them! The same Adam G. Mackay declares 'that on that day he saw 30 homesteads on fire at the 'same time, in townships of Apigill, Achnaborgean, 'Achacheragary, Abersgi, Skelpick, Rinnivie, and 'Achanlochie. Remembers only some of the names of 'the occupants of the several residences of the above 'townships.

1.	George Mackay (Adam's father),	Abersgi.
2.	Donald Munro (the miller),	Dalnadroghaid.
3.	Alexander Duncan, . .	Skelpick.
4.	George Gordon, tacksman,	do.
5.	Adam Munro, . . .	do.
6.	John Mackay (M'William)	do.
7.	Hugh , . .	Fastli.
8.	(name forgotten),	do.
9.	Angus Mackay, "the pensioner," . .
10.	John Munro, . . .	Rhinivie.
11.	John Mackay, . . .	do.
12.	John Maccaskill, . .	do.
13.		do.
14–23.	Achanlochie was occupied by ten tenants, does not remember their names . .
24.	William Chisholm, .	Achnaborgean.
25.	John Mackay, . .	do.
26.	Andrew Munro, .	do.

'There were several others, but their number or names 'he could not recollect. His father, George Mackay, 'when tenant in Abersgi, had four or five milch cows, 'about a dozen yeld cattle, a few sheep, and goats. The 'soil yielded cereals of a superior order. He never ex-'perienced potatoes better than were produced in 'Abersgi.

'His father's family scattered after they had removed 'to Leadnaguillean; he himself became servant to the 'Rev. Mr Findlater, Durness; after the disruption Mr 'Findlater did not require his services. Mr Sinclair, the 'factor of the district at that time, allowed him to build 'a cot on a bit of waste ground, and fixed a rent of 5s. 'Having improved an acre of this waste, the rent is 'raised to £1. The Duke or rather the factor charges 'him interest in the form of rent on the labour he has 'invested in the Duke's lands.

'The above declaration made by the same Adam 'Gordon Mackay, on the 17th March 1884, in his own 'cottage at Durness, was written down by me and 'inserted herein on the 6th of May 1884.

'About the same time, if not actually on the same 'day the matters referred to in Adam Gordon Mackay's 'declaration were executed in the same neighbourhood, 'a savage and criminal act was perpetrated, viz., in the 'case of George Munro, miller at Farr, whose cottage 'before the clearances happened to be in the march 'between the territory assigned to the sheep farm of 'Skelpick and the outrun assigned to the small tenants. 'George had in view to remove his cottage to Clachan 'and was progressing with the erection of the same.

'Meantime his family were visited with a severe attack of 'fever, by which his wife and all his children were 'prostrated. There was no member of the family that 'could help the other but George himself. These in-'cendiaries came to George's cottage. In case of catch-'ing the fever they were afraid to go in. To implement, 'as I suppose, a form of law, they felt bound to ex-'tinguish the household fire. The plan they took was 'to go to the house top and pour down the opening above 'the fire pails of water. This created a volume of 'smoke, mingled with ashes, that filled the whole place, 'and made breathing most difficult. The neighbours 'learning what was going on assembled and placed the 'invalids each on a blanket, and four men in each case 'carried them down to the manse barn that afforded them 'shelter till their own cottage was ready. In the good 'providence of God they all recovered of the fever and 'escaped the suffocation provided for them by what was 'reckoned the executors of law and order. But for 'the strength of Bible principle prevailing among the 'people the land would have been infested with assas-'sination and murder. After all, even yet some would 'character such proceedings as "the advance of civilisa-'"tion."

'I had the above narration some years ago from Mrs 'John Macdonald, Edinburgh, Grace, the daughter of 'the late Rev. David Mackenzie, minister of Farr.'

James Cumming.

Free Manse, Melness,
July 25, 1893.

28,230. Were you appointed at a public meeting?—Yes.

28,231. What was the date of the meeting?—I do not remember the date.

28,232. Was it recently?—No, it was before the men went away to the fishing. They were going away from home and they held a meeting, at which I was appointed a delegate.

28,233. That was earlier in this year?—It was in summer of this year.

28,234. I see you have given in four written statements. Did you get these from Mr Cumming?—Yes, I got them from Mr Cumming's memoranda.

28,235. Did you get them from himself?—No, I did not, but I got the memoranda from him, and had them copied.

28,236. You got the memoranda from Mr Cumming, and then you wrote them out?—Yes.

28,237. Is this your handwriting?—No, it is my son's.

28,238. Is Mr Cumming still alive?—Yes.

28,239. We would like if you would ask him to put his signature to these documents. [Mr D. H. Mackay.—We have his written statement here. (Hands in document.)]

28,240. Are these the originals?—Yes.

28,241. I think we may take them as sufficient since they are original. Now, you mentioned the farm of Eriboll in particular?—Yes, because the people of Eriboll came to our district, and it was not like the crofters of to-day that they came; they were more like princes coming.

28,242. What I wanted to ask you now is, whereabouts on the farm of Eriboll is there land suitable for the object we have in view?—The land on both sides,—the land on the west side of Loch Hope that was never cultivated. There is a great deal of it. There are two or three townships that were cultivated before, but it could be all cultivated.

28,243. You mean from Hope Ferry?—Not from Hope Ferry but from Arnabol.

28,244. From Arnabol going up towards Strathmore?—Strathmore to Caisteal-Dubh.

28,245. The whole of the land between these points on the west side of Loch Hope?—Yes.

28,246. Now, in your opinion, what is that land suitable for?—For cultivation.

28,247. Do you know of cultivation having been tried ongue, itherland-ire.

ugh ackay.

there to any considerable extent?—No, but I was through the ground myself.

28,248. You know the ground?—I know the ground.

28,249. Is it suitable, do you think, for the settlement of crofters?—Very suitable for the settlement of crofters, because it has a southerly aspect, and it is not steep.

28,250. And not too high perhaps?—Not too high either; it is well sheltered, and the ground is looking good. A very few pounds per acre would cultivate it.

28,251. How much do you think, now, would be necessary to reclaim it?—£5 an acre.

28,252. You think a crofter could reclaim the land at £5 an acre?—Yes, a crofter could, but the estate management I see could not improve land the same as crofters could; because I see it cost the estate £44 to £73 per acre to improve and bring land under cultivation, while it only cost the crofters £5 to £12 to take in their land.

28,253. Do you think there is land up Strathmore, a considerable distance?—Yes, to the top of Strathmore.

28,254. On the west side of the burn?—Yes, and upon the east side of the burn too.

28,255. What is the name of the burn again?—The Strathmore River.

28,256. Now, besides that land you have indicated on the west side of Loch Hope and on the east and west sides of the Strathmore River, is there any other suitable land in Eriboll?—Yes.

28,257. Where is it?—Far above the head of the Loch, there is a place that they call Strathbeg, which is a fine place.

28,258. That is at the top of Loch Eriboll?—Yes, above Loch Eriboll.

28,259. Surrounding the top of Loch Eriboll?—Yes, just so; and there was also another township there, Faoilinn.

28,260. I see it is marked on the map Creag-na-Faoilinn?—It was a large township at the time; also Bad-an-achaidh and Achinloch; there was no better place between this and Canaan.

28,261. Now, is there land on the west side of Loch Eriboll?—No, there is nothing on the west side of Loch Eriboll that I saw that could be profitably cultivated; there might be pieces.

28,262. There might be patches, but you don't think there is any tract of ground?—No, there is no tract of ground.

28,263. There are a good many crofters down there already?—Yes.

28,264. And I understand they are rather ill off?—Oh, yes.

28,265. Is their land poor?—Very poor; very bad soil. Their land is so poor that sheep were tried on it once, but they failed to live, and were cleared off, and the land was given to a few crofters.

28,266. Is there only one township there, or more than one?—One township.

28,267. Now, passing from the west side of Loch Eriboll to the east side, and going south, say from Heilim Inn, is there any land there?—The Eriboll land is there, and there were a number of crofters in Eriboll.

28,268. Is there suitable land there to any extent, or do you not ask our attention to that part?—There is very fine land in Eriboll.

28,269. I mean on the east side of the Loch,—on the fringe of the loch, at the east side?—There is not much that could be cultivated now, because it was taken in by the proprietor for the sheep farmer of Eriboll. [Mr Sutherland.—The Chairman is asking you about the land between Eriboll and Heilim?—There is no land there.]

28,270. Then, is there any land to the south of Eriboll; between Eriboll and the top of the Loch?—No; but there is land that could be cultivated between Eriboll and the top of the Loch too.

28,271. Have you been looking at the land recently?—Yes, I was looking at the whole of it.

28,272. And is it suitable for cultivation, or suitable for grazing?—Very little would cultivate it. Tongue, Sutherland-shire.

28,273. Has it been cultivated before?—No.

28,274. But it could be reclaimed at a moderate cost?—I think £5 an acre would reclaim it. Hugh Mackay.

28,275. Now, passing from the farm of Eriboll for a little to the farm of Melness, is there land on the farm of Melness suitable?—Yes, there is a place that they call Hope, beside the loch, and there is a place to the south of that, that they call Breisgil, and all the land that is between Breisgil and Hope could be cultivated profitably.

28,276. That is going past Hope Lodge, is it?—Since you leave Hope Lodge till you go to a place called Merkan, which is only a small township.

28,277. Is there any considerable extent of land there, or is it trifling in extent?—Oh, a great deal of land.

28,278. Now, besides land on Melness, is there any other land?—There is in Strathmore.

28,279. Then, you ask us to consider, I suppose, the whole of Strathmore?—The whole of Strathmore.

28,280. On both sides of the river?—Yes.

28,281. Up to what point?—To Blaig on this side of the road.

28,282. You are now referring, I understand, to land in Strathmore, forming part of the farm of Melness?—Yes.

28,283. Now, besides the land at Loch Hope and the land at Strathmore, is there any other land on Melness which you would like us to consider?—Upon the side of Melness, facing here, there are four or five townships, but there is land that could be profitably cultivated up from Strath Dithreibh.

28,284. Running up from the top of the Kyle?—Yes; up to Loch-na-Meide. I was there as a shepherd, and it gave as good a crop as ever I saw, and was very easy to cultivate. Above Achaidh Mhoir there is a great deal of land that could be cultivated, miles of it, until you come to Loch-na-Meide.

28,285. To the top of Loch-na-Meide?—Yes. I was putting up sheep stalls there; and there is nothing in it but just fine land and clay under it.

28,286. And is that land on both sides of Loch-na-Meide?—It is in Strath Dithreibh.

28,287. Running up to and along the side of Loch-na-Meide?—Upon the west side of Strath Dithreibh.

28,288. Passing up from that, is there any land on the west side of Loch-na-Meide?—There is not much land there; some could be made, but it is pretty high land there.

28,289. Is there any other land that you would like to bring under our notice?—Yes; the land of Ribigill farm.

28,290. What about Ribigill?—People from Ribigill came down upon us.

28,291. What part of Ribigill is suitable?—All round Ben Loyal.

28,292. There is good grazing at the base of Ben Loyal?—There is good grazing and good land there.

28,293. Is there good land for cultivation?—Yes; good land. There were crofters living round Ben Loyal who were as well off as any in Scotland before the clearance.

28,294. Were there a good number there?—Yes; there were forty of them.

28,295. Separate holdings?—Separate holdings; and there were more than that hereabout. There is a place or two opposite here that are not mentioned in the paper that I read.

28,296. Can you mention the names?—Ach-a-chaisteil.

28,297. Where the old castle is?—Yes.

28,298. Were the people there in any considerable number?—No; there was not a considerable number. Another place is Ceanndroch; that is a place you can see from here, and it is not mentioned in the paper either.

28,299. But generally you ask us to consider the land round the base of Ben Loyal, the land over at the castle here, and the other old township of Ceanndroch?—Yes.

Tongue, Sutherlandshire.

Hugh Mackay.

28,300. Is that all the land you ask us to inspect on Ribigill?—Yes, that is all.

28,301. Well, you have given us a very distinct statement. I would like to ask you further, among those whom you represent is there a considerable desire for land suitable for new holdings?—Yes, and a great need for it, and a great need for extension of holdings. At the time the Crofters Commission was here they applied for the farm of Melness.

28,302. And they were not successful?—No, they were not successful.

28,303. There is a great deal of floe land between Melness farmhouse and Hope Lodge as you go along the moorland road. I suppose you agree that that land is not fit for occupation?—No, that is deep and very soft moss.

28,304. Not suitable, perhaps, either for settlement of crofters or for grazing purposes?—No, indeed it is not.

28,305. Then, does the land you have been thinking of most lie to the south of that and nearer Ben Loyal,—between the road and Ben Loyal?—There is little there worth speaking of.

28,306. Then, where is it that you think extension of grazings could be most advantageously granted?—The extension of grazings is of no consequence; it is extensions of farming that they require.

28,307. You mean an increase of holdings?—Yes.

28,308. But are the crofters of Melness still desirous of an increase of grazings, suppose such an increase could be got?—To be sure.

28,309. Now, where is the land suitable for them?—There is plenty land suitable upon the farm of Eriboll, upon the farm of Melness, and upon the farm of Ribigill.

28,310. No doubt, I was dealing more particularly, however, with the farm of Melness. Is there land suitable upon the farm of Melness?—The farm of Melness is, I believe, the worst farm in Scotland for cultivation.

28,311. But is it suitable for extension of grazing?—Yes, if there was land along with it; if Melness would go along with it.

28,312. You mean the farm steading?—Yes, the farm steading: if it went along with it, it would be suitable.

28,313. But you don't think the grazing of Melness is good unless you get the arable land along with it?—No, I don't think so.

28,314. Mr Sutherland.—Where did the most of the people that are now in Melness come from?—The greater part of them came from the Eriboll Farm, the Melness Farm, and the Ribigill farm.

28,315. At the time when these farms were being made?—That was the time of the clearances.

28,316. They were cleared off the farms and swept into Melness; is that the operation?—Yes, they were cleared off, and put down into Melness. That was in the time of Lord Reay.

28,317. What was the date?—From 1811 to 1820.

28,318. And did Lord Reay form these farms as they now exist before he sold the estate?—Yes.

28,319. The Duke of Sutherland got them made, did he?—Yes.

28,320. And were they the same extent that they are now?—The very same.

28,321. I want to ask you how the Melness land now occupied by the crofters was occupied before these people came there?—The whole of what is occupied by the crofters was formerly occupied by about 50.

28,322. And how many are there now?—Ninety-three. It used to be 50, but by the clearance there came others from Eriboll, and from Melness, and down from the Strath here, and that made the number 73. After that 20 more crofts were formed upon the people's grazings.

28,323. But where did these people come from who came that second time?—They came from all parts.

28,324. They came from farther away than Eriboll and Ribigill and Melness Farms?—Yes, there were some among them who were labouring upon these farms, and when they changed hands these people were sent down, and the estate gave them a share.

28,325. Holdings upon the former people's grazings?—And the former people's lands too.

28,326. They were sub-dividing the arable land as well as the grazing?—Yes, and the best of it.

28,327. Then, what was the state of the land before these migrations to that land down at Melness where the crofters are now? When they went down were they given arable land ready cultivated?—Yes, they were getting the best that was there.

28,328. I am talking about the people who were cleared out of Ribigill, Melness, and Eriboll Farms when these farms were made. When these people were sent down, what sort of land did they get?—Lord Reay provided for them the best pieces that there were in Melness.

28,329. For the people who were cleared off the farms?—Yes, because you see when Lord Reay, or rather his lawyer, commenced these clearances,—

28,330. But I want to know what sort of land these people who were evicted from these farms got when they went down to Melness: was it land reclaimed or land in a state of nature?—Land reclaimed.

28,331. So that all the land that is reclaimed in Melness now was reclaimed in 1809, was it?—Yes, mostly, except what is in the township that I live in.

28,332. And then the arable holdings of the people who were down there were sub-divided when these additional people were sent in?—Yes, they were sub-divided; and it was to the advantage of those who came in, and to the disadvantage of those who were there before. My father had a share in the township; and when the clearances were made and the Duke of Sutherland got the place, he was knocked out of his place. It was mostly the same as it would be set fire to, and he only got one-fourth of an acre of arable land; he had eleven head of sheep and he was obliged to sell the whole of them.

28,333. So the people were put from good circumstances into very much worse circumstances?—Yes.

28,334. Did you ever hear it stated that it was for the benefit of the people that all this was done?—Oftentimes, but I never believed it.

28,335. You think it is a most absurd and ridiculous statement to make, as well as being untrue?—It was a most unholy statement.

28,336. Now, you referred to the way in which these clearances were carried out in Strathnaver and other places, and you did so I presume to show that the land the people occupied before could be profitably occupied now?—Yes.

28,337. Do you know what advantage was gained at the time by any person from these clearances?—Yes, I will tell you the advantage gained by these clearances if you will allow me to speak upon it.

28,338. Who profited by the transaction, that is what I want to know?—Well, I will tell you that as I go on.

28,339. You can put it very shortly.—When the clearances began, the landlords had to stock the land for the sheep farmers.

28,340. What is your authority for that?—My authority for it is that Major Forbes got Melness and he got Ribigill besides, and when Houston came from your own side of the country and offered for it, Major Forbes dropped it and went and cleared away Melness; and you see as it is written in the paper by George Sutherland that Lord Reay got no rent for Ribigill during this period.

28,341. For how long?—During this period.

28,342. Until Houston came?—Houston went away; he repudiated the lease.

28,343. Is it your statement that to the best of your knowledge and belief the landlord had to advance the capital to those men who took the lands from which the people were evicted?—Yes, and it was that that evicted Lord Reay. He stocked the farms for the sheep farmers; they could not pay the interest on it, and the bills came due and Lord Reay had to sell his lands and to flee the country.

28,344. In order to pay his liability?—Yes.

28,345. To pay the liabilities he had undertaken for the sheep farmers?—Yes, he had to pay the money to the bank, and he fled the country like a fugitive or a vagabond.

28,346. And do you say that, according to your knowledge, this is the reason why Lord Reay had to sell his estate?—The very reason, but it was beneficial to the sheep farmers.

28,347. As to the question of benefit now, who benefited by it, seeing Lord Reay did not?—The sheep farmers benefited by it, because after Lord Reay fled the country they never paid him a farthing, and they got to be tenants under the Duke of Sutherland without ever paying a farthing to him. And then they raised a report upon Lord Reay that he was a spendthrift.

28,348. That was the way he spent his money, was it?—Yes, and I see by statistics that from the year 1811 to the present time a sixpence did not go into the pocket of the proprietor, the expense was so much.

28,349. Yes, I saw that statement too; that has been made public over and over again?—And that the Stafford exchequer paid £60,000 besides the whole rental of Sutherland since the year 1811.

28,350. Where did you see that?—I saw it in some of the statistics that were given by Mr Loch in Parliament, and I got some of the facts from Mr Box here.

28,351. Did you ever see a statement of the accounts that was published by Mr Brereton who was Commissioner for the Duke of Sutherland?—I saw that.

28,352. Is the same statement made there?—No, as to the statement that was made by Mr Brereton I don't know what I would call it; I had better call it nothing at all.

28,353. But your assertion is that the system for which the people were cleared was a failure from the beginning?—A failure from the beginning to the end.

28,354. No one denies now that it is a failure, but you say it was a failure from the beginning?—Yes, it was a failure from the beginning, and it is a failure still, because I do recollect the year there came distress among the sheep, for the snow lay on the ground for a very long time, and they had to hand-feed the sheep upon the farms. Well, the sheep farmers of Sutherland formed into a league, and they adopted the plan of campaign; they went to the Duke and offered him half rent, and said if he would not take them they would throw the land upon his hands.

28,355. They offered him what rent they pleased, did they?—They offered him just 50 per cent. of the rent. It was the sheep farmers of Sutherland who commenced the plan of campaign, before ever it was commenced in Ireland.

28,356. With regard to the land from which these people were cleared, you say that it was started by men without capital?—Yes, they had no capital.

28,357. Who were they as a rule?—They were the lawyers who were on Lord Reay's estate.

28,358. You are talking of Lord Reay's estate just now, are you?—Yes. It was there that it commenced. I think the imperial law never came north of the Grampians at that time, and I am doubtful if it has come so far north as this yet.

28,359. These men, who are reputed to have been men of capital, men of skill, men of enterprise, and men of all the virtues, were they, as a matter of fact, men of capital at all when they came to take these farms?—They had no capital at all.

28,360. The capital had to be found for them?—Yes, it had to be found; and Clark of Eriboll had to keep some of the crofters upon his farms till they would advance the money. There was one Angus Mackay—

28,361. I take your general statement without going into details. Now, I ask you all these questions in view of the difficulties which we hear at the present time, about getting capital to start people in new holdings?—I don't see any difficulties.

28,362. Have these crofters, the better class of them even yet, as much capital as the sheep farmers had when they came to Sutherland?—Just about the same.

28,363. As a matter of fact, do the greater number of these large farmers not come here as shepherds?—Yes, the greater number of them come here as shepherds, only these had got it first. After that the whole of them come here as shepherds.

28,364. They would be the men who had good practical knowledge of sheep farming, I suppose?—Yes.

28,365. In your opinion then, would all this great difficulty exist with regard to capital, if there was a willingness on the part of those in authority to make a trial of them again?—If there was willingness on the part of the authority there is way enough.

28,366. And what do you think about this question of capital; do you think it is at all necessary for a man to start on a small holding now, with full equipments valued at £600 or £700?—I will give you my opinion upon that. If they would start in the proper way, if they would not put the cart before the horse, if they would start with the best offer and remove them, and let Government advance £150 as was advanced to the American settlers, and the landlord would give full compensation for their improvements.

28,367. You mean where they are now?—Where they are now.

28,368. You mean to say if he was to compensate them when removing to their new holdings for the improvements they left behind?—Yes, wherever the landlord made improvements let him have the improvements, and wherever the crofter made improvements let him carry the full value of the improvements with him. There are a good many of them who have stock that would do at first, and if they would get £150 each over five years at a low interest I think they would get a good start and prosper well, but people without capital cannot enter on anything.

28,369. Could not they enter upon it as well as the large sheep farmers did at the time you spoke of?—With sheep farmers it was possible enough, because they got the proprietor to stock the land for them.

28,370. But could not the proprietor do it now as well as then?—Yes, if he was willing.

28,371. But you think he is not willing?—I cannot say; I will not say whether he is willing or not, because I do not know.

28,372. You have not applied to him?—Yes, he said to me that he was willing to help them, the only time that ever I spoke to him; and he said that he would help myself.

28,373. I wish to ask you as to the rent that is being paid by the small holders and by the large farmers respectively. You have heard it stated, I suppose, that the large farmers are paying more for the land than you are paying. What is your opinion regarding that?—Take the farm of Melness which comprises 73,000 acres.

28,374. That is the old farm, I suppose?—Yes, the old farm, and what was under the tenants' or crofters' 10,000 acres. The crofters paid £300 and the farm of Melness paid only £600; compare the 10,000 acres with the 73,000 and you will see which of them paid the most rent.

28,375. What is the result; have you made the calculation?—No.

28,376. Do you know what is the present rent of the farm of Melness?—No, I don't know; but I know that it was reduced lately.

28,377. Do you hear that it is £280?—I heard it was something over £200, but I could not say.

28,378. Do you know the extent of the present farm of Melness?—It is said to be 22,000 acres.

28,379. It is more than that. [Mr Gordon.—It is less than that]. That is what is said; I never saw it stated in print.

28,380 But do you think you are paying more per acre than the farmer is paying for the farm of Melness?—Yes, because I pay £3 for two acres, and a little over it.

28,381. And the share of the hill pasture?—Yes, the share of the hill pasture. I did not pay at first but 35s., that was about 1830, but it was raised twice afterwards; in 1832 it was raised to £2, 6s. and in 1858 to £3, 6s.

Tongue, Sutherlandshire.

Hugh Mackay.

28,382. And how much did the landlord do for that?—He never did anything for me. My house came down about the time the Crofters Commission was here, and I believe most of the rest who repaired their houses got something from the landlord, but I got nothing.

28,383. I take it from the papers you have read, and from the general drift of your evidence, that you believe that there is land suitable for occupation by crofters or other small holders, and that it could be occupied to profit; also that there is a desire on the part of the people to take such land if they had the opportunity?—I am sure of it.

28,384. And you think these places you have mentioned to us as having been inhabited before are very suitable for the purpose?—I am sure they are. I remember the people that left the places, and I saw their stock, because as you see I am an old man.

28,385. And have you yourself had experience in reclaiming land?—I think I have had as much experience as any one that could speak about it.

28,386. More that a factor or a larger farmer, I suppose?—More than all the factors and large farmers in the country.

28,387. You are speaking, therefore, from your own personal experience?—I speak from what I have done myself.

28,388. You know personally the ground that you have referred to?—Yes.

28,389. You have walked over it?—I have walked over the whole ground several times.

28,390. You were asked by the Chairman if you knew the land on the west shore of Loch Eriboll; you do know that land, don't you?—Yes, I was through that land too.

28,391. And you said it was land that, in your opinion, was not suitable for cultivation?—In my opinion it is not suitable.

28,392. Yet there are people planted there, are there not?—Yes.

28,393. If you had the putting down of people in a a place where there is a reasonable chance of success, would you put them down in Laid?—I would not put one down there.

28,394. And don't the people in Laid see from their doors some of the best land in the parish lying uncultivated?—They see the best land that I know of in the north.

28,395. Lying waste?—Lying waste.

28,396. Up about the top of Loch Eriboll you said?—Yes, the land there is upon limestone.

28,397. And the land at Laid is not upon limestone?—No, indeed, it is upon the quartz stone, and there are holes that eat it away.

28,398. Are there now in the district of Melness a number of people who would be very glad to take new holdings if they got them in a better place than Melness?—Yes.

28,399. Mr Gordon.—I see you have a pretty large extent of pasture along with your crofting townships in Melness?—Yes.

28,400. About 10,000 acres?—It never was that amount though it is said to be so.

28,401. Now, there are 93 crofting tenants having an interest in the pasture: tell me how you occupy it,—have you sheep?—Yes.

28,402. Do you keep it as a club farm, or a common grazing?—As a common grazing.

28,403. Have you any idea how many sheep are upon that ground; have you a souming, or how do you regulate the number?—No.

28,404. Does each man keep as many or as few as he likes?—Every man keeps as many as he likes.

28,405. How many have you yourself now?—About a score.

28,406. Well, suppose you were to multiply 93 by 20 you would have nearly 2000 sheep?—Yes, about 2000 sheep.

28,407. And how many cattle would there be: four or six to each tenant?—About 500 or 600 cattle.

28.408. How many sheep would you allow for each beast? Would you allow five or four?—I think four.

28,409. That makes over 2000; how many horses have you?—About 60.

28,410. And would you allow ten sheep to each horse?—Oh, no.

28,411. Well, say five: they are not overfed, I suppose?—Say six.

28,412. That makes 360. Now, would you say that upon this bare part of the pasture you have nearly as much stock as there is in the whole farm of Melness?—Yes, but I know that if the crofters got Melness farm they would put double the present stock on it.

28,413. Yes, but would that not be to their loss,—to the loss of the people who put the stock on it? Don't you think a great deal of your want of success is due to overstocking?—Yes, and I know that the overstocking arises from the want of agriculture, because grazing without agriculture is a failure everywhere. If there was agriculture upon the farm of Melness they could have more than double the sheep stock on it at present, because the grazing of Melness is not a great deal. [The Chairman.—Mr Gordon's question is have you not too many sheep upon the grazing of Melness?]

28,414. He will hardly own that?—Yes, there are.

28,415. What sort of land lies between your present grazing and Loch Eriboll?—The worst of it.

28,416. Is it worse or better, or as good as you have?—It is just about the same as what we have.

28,417. Just about as good. There is no green land round by that part of the coast, is there?—No.

28,418. There is none till you come to Hope Lodge?—Only one township.

28,419. Is that at Freisgill?—Yes.

28,420. There is an old township there, and some old arable?—Yes.

28,421. But the bulk of that land lying between you and Loch Eriboll is floe land?—Yes, and there is no shelter in it at all.

28,422. But there would be shelter in one side or another of the hill: if it was blowing a west wind the stock would take naturally over to the side of Melness, and if an east wind they would take naturally over to Loch Eriboll?—Yes, but it is pretty flat.

28,423. Did your crofting townships ever apply for that part of Melness farm?—We applied for the whole farm of Melness, and also for a part of it, but we did not get either.

28,424. How many people do you think could be conveniently accommodated with arable land in your township? How many of the 93 men would you remove in order to leave the others in a comfortable position?—To leave them in a comfortable position two out of every three.

28,425. Then, you think there is not more land than would properly accommodate 31 people?—That is as much as it could hold comfortably.

28,426. Where would you suppose land could be got for the others? You have told us where there is land, but do you suppose that in all the places you have mentioned you could place the other 60 people comfortably?—Yes, and the land I went over and referred to to-day would accommodate other 60 beyond them.

28,427. Is the fishing industry carried on with you, or how do you live? Is there any part of the population of your townships that lives by fishing?—There are none who live by fishing; it would be a poor living.

28,428. You have no harbours?—No.

28,429. Nor boats?—No, nor a coast suitable for fishing.

28,430. In fact, your principal livelihood is drawn from the land such as it is?—It is drawn from all countries.

28,431. The men go out to work do you mean?—The men have to go as far off as America and Africa to work.

28,432. It is by labour outside your crofting townships that the townships are maintained?—Yes, the fishing is a little help, but it is a poor support.

28,433. Do the younger men go away to the summer fishing?—Every one that can go.

28,434. You live partly by fishing, but not home fishing?—We don't live at all by fishing.

28,435. Would your township consider it an advantage to get an extension of grazing towards Loch Eriboll?—No, I don't think it would be any advantage to get grazings unless they got arable land along with it.

28,436. Have you quite as much grazing just now as you can use properly or profitably with the small extent of arable land you have?—Yes, because it will summer our stock.

28,437. Your opinion is that to obtain a real relief you must remove from the townships at least two-thirds of the present occupants?—That is my opinion.

28,438. The Chairman.—I see that the crofters of Skinnid have 81 acres of township pasture, is not that so?—Where?

28,439. Township pasture, 81 acres held in equal shares by the crofters of Skinnid, is that not correct?—No, it is not correct. [Mr Watson, surveyor.—At Airdskinnid]. It is no more than——

28,440. Never mind the precise extent, but is there township pasture held by the crofters of Skinnid at Airdskinnid Point?—Yes. The extent of it is very little.

28,441. Just listen to these two sentences from Mr Loch's book. In his account of the improvements on the Sutherland Estate published in 1820, p. 108, the following passage occurs:—'The Reay country which 'had been arranged in the same manner as the estate of 'Sutherland was most judiciously done by Lord Reay, 'and with equal success. The whole of the interior of 'that property has been let in seven large sheep farms 'occupied by two south country and five native stock 'farmers. The people have been settled on the shores 'near the mouths of some of the noble sea-water lochs 'with which Lord Reay's estate is intersected;" and in another sentence on p. 109, he says 'Lord Reay's lands 'are situated at Skerray, and near the mouth of Loch 'Inchard on the west coast, and at the mouth of Loch 'Eriboll and at Skerray near Eriboll Island on the north 'coast.' That is correct, is it not?—I think it is.

28,442. I was going to ask you this further question. You stated, I think, in the course of answering Mr Sutherland that you had been promised, or that the landlord had been favourable to giving you some assistance at one time for stocking?—Yes, but it was not publicly; it was in my own house.

28,443. Are you yourself desirous of getting a new holding?—To be sure.

28,444. And you would be willing to remove?—I was in much need of removing.

28,445. Is that the prevailing feeling in the township of Skinnid?—That is what I always heard among them.

28,446. Now, suppose you removed, would you require assistance?—Yes, but I think Government assistance should be given, such as was given to those who were emigrated to America.

28,447. Then, is the assistance you require about the sum you mentioned, £150?—£150 divided upon five years. [Mr Gordon.—I don't think his meaning is clearly expressed; I think he means spread over five years.]

28,448. Spread over five years and repaid at a low rate of interest?—Yes. £30 a year would keep a family working upon the croft; but if they did not get anything they would require to scatter and to seek work in other places.

28,449. You mean the £150 to be lent to you in sums of £30 each year?—Yes.

28,450. And repaid by you over a long period of time at a low rate of interest?—Yes.

28,451. Mr Sutherland.—You said that you are willing to remove to a new holding? Yes, I have the greatest need of all.

28,452. And who has the power to give you the new holding?—The estate.

28,453. The Duke of Sutherland you said intimated his willingness to help you?—Yes.

28,454. And he has the power of doing it?—Yes.

28,455. Why then are you not in the new holding? (No answer.)

28,456. Well, I won't press you for an answer to that. But, with regard to the overstocking, is it a fact that the crofters' lands are overstocked as compared with the large farmers'?—Yes.

28,457. How do you account for that?—Because every one that can keep sheep tries to do so, and those who have none are apt to suffer.

28,458. In other words it is from a desire to make the best of your circumstances?—Yes.

28,459. It is a proof of the desire of the people to do better than they can at present?—That very desire.

28,460. Have you ever heard it raised as an objection against giving new holdings to crofters that they could not stock them?—That was always the objection.

28,461. And now it is an objection that they have too much stock?—Yes; but they must object to something.

28,462. Then, with regard to the amount of green land on the sheep farms, I think Mr Gordon stated,—and stated quite correctly,—that it is a very great matter to have green land on a grazing farm. Do you agree with that?—Yes.

28,463. You believe that too?—Yes, I was ever of that opinion.

28,464. And how is heather made green?—That is easily done.

28,465. How is it done?—Plough heather and it will soon come green.

28,466. Who made the green spots in the large farms that give them their value?—It was the crofters; and the crofters could do very little at that time compared with what they can do now, because then they had nothing but a spade, and I am doubtful if they had even that.

28,467. You stated, I think, that the large farm of Melness had a great deal of inferior pasture on it; is that not so?—Yes.

28,468. Who was the tenant before the present tenant?—William Mackay, Thurso.

28,469. Had he other farms?—Yes, a large number in Caithness.

28,470. He had arable farms, had not he?—I think about the time he took the Melness farm he had fourteen arable farms.

28,471. And has the present occupier also got low country farms?—There are two about the farm now.

28,472. And has either of them got low-lying arable farms?—One of them is a proprietor, with the best places I think in Caithness. He has Scrabster as an estate, and he farms extensively in Caithness besides.

28,473. Then, it has always been found necessary, has it not, that the occupier of Melness sheep farm required to have arable land somewhere?—Yes.

28,474. And that is the principle you are advocating with regard to making more arable land in these glens,—that they would then carry more stock?—The very same principle.

28,475. Did you hear that the Duke of Sutherland's object when he initiated the reclamations on the east coast was to increase the amount of arable in proportion to the pasture, so that they could winter more stock?—Yes, and I am sure that was the object.

28,476. Are you aware also that the sheep carrying power of the pasture in Sutherland is decreasing?—Yes, I know that grazing without agriculture is on the decline everywhere.

28,477. And do you think that the reason for that is that there is too little agricultural land and too much pasturing?—That is the very reason.

28,478. And are you of opinion that if the people were sent back to the glens they would increase the amount of arable land very largely?—If half the money was spent upon agriculture that was spent upon desolating the country they would have every piece that could be profitably cultivated in Sutherland cultivated in half the time.

Tongue, Sutherlandshire.

Hugh Mackay.

28,479. Are you aware that the Duke of Sutherland expended enormous sums of money in reclaiming large acreages on the large farms in this country, and in other parts of the county as well?—Yes, I know, because I was working at it myself.

28,480. And I think you stated in your paper that he paid an enormous sum per acre for doing so?—Yes, according to the estate account from £44 to £73 per acre.

28,481. And you are of opinion that crofters could reclaim it at what price?—From £5 to £12.

28,482. Then, if the Duke of Sutherland had encouraged the crofters to reclaim the land he would have reclaimed six times the acreage with the same money, is that what it comes to?—Yes, by giving the money to crofters.

28,483. And, as a matter of fact, have not the rents been raised upon the improvements made by the crofters themselves?—It is I that could tell that.

28,484. You could tell that from personal experience?—Yes.

28,485. Do you ever hear of a rent being raised on a large sheep farmer for the improvements he made at his own expense?—I never heard that a large farmer made any improvements.

28,486. And do you know, as a matter of fact, that the large farmers are allowing the land to get worse and worse every year?—I know that the land is deteriorating every year, and that it will soon be worse than the deserts of Arabia.

28,487. Do you think it would be in the interests of the landlords themselves, or the landlord himself in this case, if the land were given in the way you advocate?—If the land was given in the way I advocate, I think it would be as profitable for the landlord as it would be for the crofters.

28,488. Taking into account all the circumstances that you know, is the present time, in your opinion, a favourable time to try such an experiment?—Yes, it is, because I see that every other thing has failed, and I think that this should be tried now.

28,489. You think that all the experiments that have been tried for the last eighty years have now practically turned out a failure, and that the time is now arrived for trying something else?—All the skill of the managers of the north of Scotland has failed now.

28,490. And is that the general opinion in the district you represent here to-day?—Both my opinion and the opinion of those I represent.

28,491. Mr Macaulay, Solicitor, Golspie.—I want to get some further explanation regarding the statement about Lord Reay having stocked the sheep farms. What farms do you specially refer to when you say that he stocked their farms?—Five farms.

28,492. Who held them?—Forbes had one, and he got another; that was two; Clark of Eriboll got another.

28,493. Do you say that Clark of Eriboll's farms were stocked by Lord Reay?—What other would stock it but Lord Reay?

28,494. Who are the other parties? Who held the farm of Ribigill?—There was one Charles Clark.

28,495. Which farm had he?—He had two or three farms; I think he had Glendhu, and he had Shegra and Shilivall.

28,496. Now, how do you come to know that that was the case? Is it simply by report or have you any means of telling us? It is an extraordinary statement.—It was just a report, and I am sure it was true enough.

28,497. When these parties went out, do you think the incoming tenants paid for the stock?—They did.

28,498. So that Lord Reay did not. For instance, Mr Innes in Ribigill; do you think his stock was paid for by Lord Reay?—No.

28,499. Then your statement simply applies to the Forbes', does it?—Yes.

28,500. Now are you aware that the Forbes' were friends of Lord Reay?—Yes, I know that they were. [Mr Sutherland.—Do you mean relatives?]

Tongue, Sutherlandshire.

28,501. Relatives?—Yes, and a good bit off too.

Hugh Mackay.

28,502. You made a statement here that the present Duke of Sutherland promised you a holding; where did he make that promise? [The Chairman.—No; it came out in this way; what he said was that the Duke had a private conversation in his house, when he expressed his willingness to assist the witness in stocking: but the examination after that rather took the form of assistance otherwise. I think what witness meant was assistance in stocking.]

28,503. It was especially with regard to the answer he gave to Mr Sutherland that I asked the question. [To Witness]. He did not promise you a holding?—No, but he asked if I were to get a holding, how did I think I could work it, and I told him how far I could stock a holding. He said if I would get assistance from the landlord along with that, and I said yes. 'Well,' he said 'take not the advice of evil counsellors, and I will try to give you advice.'

28,504. You told us a little ago that the Crofters Commission had fixed a Fair Rent for you. Have you paid up that rent?—I think it is paid.

28,505. But have you paid the rent that was fixed by the Crofters Commission? Have you fulfilled your obligations to your landlord?—No, I could not.

28,506. How many sheep do you say you have?—Twenty.

28,507. Do you think you have more than your share of sheep?—I think it is fully as much as I should have.

28,508. But still you don't think you are doing anything wrong in having so many sheep?—I don't think I am doing anything wrong.

Donald Hugh Mackay, Merchant, Ach-na-h-uaighe, Melness (36)—examined.

Donald Hu Mackay.

28,509. The Chairman.—Are you a grocer?—Yes.

28,510. Was your croft dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—Yes.

28,511. I see your arable land is 4 acres 2 roods, and outrun 6 acres 3 roods, and share of 10,773 acres common grazing; former rent £5, 19s. 3d., fair rent £5?—Yes.

28,512. Were you appointed at a public meeting?—Yes.

28,513. As a delegate to represent the crofters of Melness?—Yes.

28,514. Was there a meeting of the townships generally?—Yes, a public meeting called for the purpose. A committee had been elected, and still exists, of which I am a member.

28,515. Have you a written statement?—Yes, but it simply reaffirms what my friend has already stated to Her Majesty's Commission.

28,516. And you agree with his statement?—Yes, I simply reaffirm what he said. My statement is word for word with his, and two delegates being elected in case one might not be able to attend.

28,517. Mr Forsyth.—You have heard Mr Mackay's statement as to the number of people who would have to leave the place in order to make the rest comfortable, i.e., two out of every three?—Yes.

28,518. You concur specially in that view?—Yes, indeed.

28,519. Would that leave the holdings sufficiently large to enable the people to live?—Well, it would place them in better circumstances; but in some instances they would require that more should leave, because their holdings are miserably small and bare patches.

28,520. Even more than two-thirds?—Yes, although that would be a great improvement on the present state of matters.

28,521. You have a share in the grazing, of course, along with the rest?—Yes.

28,522. Is there any system of management at all?—Simply that we have a private committee appointed for keeping regulations as to herding and the like of that; and we have to pay for our herds, and so forth.

Tongue, Sutherlandshire.

Donald Hugh Mackay.

28,523. Is there any limit among you as to the amount of stock?—No, we are simply allowed to go our length that way as far as we are able to winter the stock.

28,524. The fact then is that everybody puts upon that hill what is right in their own eyes in the way of stock?—Exactly.

28,525. And do you find that the place is overstocked?—Yes, indeed, I find that.

28,526. Has there been any attempt made to improve the sheep pasture by surface cuts or sheep drains?—No.

28,527. I noticed that there is a great deal of wet land there; don't you think that would add to the value of it?—It would if we had the means of doing it.

28,528. Don't you think that could be done by combination among yourselves?—Yes, if we had the means, but the question is how to get the capital; we cannot expect men to work without something.

28,529. But could not you all arrange to turn out for a certain time at a slack season and trench these wet lands?—Yes, but, in fact, people have so much to do: for the first part of the summer they are away at the fishing, and during the depth of winter the day is short and everything is inconvenient, and in the commencement of spring we are sowing; there are so many things pressing upon us.

28,530. Then, as a matter of fact, you think the most is not made of the grazing land, and that the grazing is overstocked?—Yes, because it is of such a character that we cannot depend on cattle living there for the winter supposing we were able to keep a shepherd.

28,531. Mr Gordon.—I put the question to the former witness as to whether there would be any advantage in getting your grazings extended, and he said there would not unless you had more arable land. Now, assuming that you keep your present stock of sheep and cattle on the ground, would it not be an advantage to have them better grazed?—Yes, certainly it would.

28,532. Would they not be better grazed if you had the grazings on to Loch Eriboll?—It would if we got the arable land; but without the arable land it would be in vain to get an extension.

28,533. But would your beasts not be a little better grazed if you had a little more extension of pasture?—No, because we cannot get any good off our grazing that we have, as it cannot keep cattle during the winter.

28,534. But you have too many sheep on for the boundary you have; you have too many mouths to feed?—We have simply to hand-feed all our stock, from the hens to the horses; that is how we stand.

28,535. Would it not be better if your cattle and sheep were away some distance along Loch Eriboll side just now while the weather is good?—Certainly, if we had arable land there.

28,536. But if you had a shepherd?—We cannot afford that as at present circumstanced.

28,537. Mr Sutherland.—With regard to the stock on the hill, you agree among yourselves as to the stock, don't you?—Yes, certainly.

28,538. And with regard to the improvement on the pasture, I suppose you don't deny but it would be important to drain the pasture?—Certainly, I do.

28,539. Is your land worse drained than the large farm of Melness?—Yes, it certainly is.

28,540. Who made the drains on the large farms?—It was done by the sheep farmers themselves; they employ men for the sheep drains and pay them.

28,541. And who pays the money?—I think it is the farmers.

28,542. Do you?—Yes, for the sheep drains whatever.

28,543. What is your reason for supposing that?—I was speaking to the men that were employed.

28,544. And they were paid by the farmer?—Yes.

28,545. But you don't know whether it was the farmer's money or not?—I cannot say, I will not take that upon me.

28,546. I presume that the want of drains on your pasture in the past would be owing to the fact that you had no security of tenure?—Certainly.

Tongue, Sutherlandshire.

28,547 But now that you have security of tenure, perhaps it might not be a bad thing, you think, to improve it in that way?—No, I should encourage that.

Donald Hugh Mackay.

28,548. As I understand from what you have said, the limit to the pasture you might usefully use is the amount of wintering, is it not?—Exactly.

28,549. And it is your contention that you could not utilise this properly, because your arable land is too small an area?—Yes.

28,550. If you got improvable land you think you could increase that arable land, and thus be able to winter more stock?—Yes.

28,551. In fact, is this the case, that the problem as to keeping of stock is just the same in your case as in the case of the large farmer; you can only maintain a certain amount in proportion to the wintering land you have?—Exactly.

28,552. And you think that the amount of pasture that has been referred to is too large in proportion to the arable land you have?—Exactly.

28,553. The Chairman.—Are you of opinion that if the crofters who have this large extent of upwards of 10,000 acres kept only as much sheep stock as the land would carry it would be more profitable to them than keeping the excess number?—I do confess it would be better to keep it equal to the wintering they have.

28,554. Then, do they keep stock at present in excess of the wintering?—Yes, they do. For the past two or three years there has been no price for cattle, and people were obliged to keep their stock on hand for two years in succession; they were unable to clear the stock although they had a mind to do so.

28,555. But how do they winter their stock at present? You say they have an excess of stock and have difficulty—how do they winter it?—As far as the provender that we have at our hand will go we must hand-feed them, and they are half starved after all.

28,556. And when the provender at hand fails, do you buy any?—Yes, whenever we can get it.

28,557. That makes wintering a very expensive business?—Yes, it is quite a failure.

28,558. And the expense is added to by the fact that the sheep on the hill are in excess of what the arable land will sustain?—Yes.

28,559. Mr Macaulay, Solicitor, Golspie.—Has any movement been started in your township to come under the operation of the Grazings Regulation Act?—Yes, we made arrangements to get a committee appointed for that purpose.

28,560. And has the matter been gone on with?—It has not been put forth yet, but, in fact, we made a noise.

28,561. Is there an application before the Commission? [Mr Box.—No, but there will be before long.]

28,562. About these drains on the sheep farms, your understanding was that the farmers paid for these?—Yes.

98,563. Well, that is the fact, I may tell you?—Yes, I thought so.

28,564. Mr Sutherland.—Are you aware that there are advances made every year by the country for the purpose of draining lands, and that there is a special Act of Parliament passed for the purpose of allowing that?—I was not aware of that, but still I believe it now.

ALEXANDER BARNETSON, Cottar, Skinnid, Melness (38)—examined.

Alexander Barnetson.

28,565. The Chairman.—You are a cottar at Skinnid?—Yes.

28,566. Have you any land at all?—No land whatever.

28,567. Just the site of your house?—Yes.

28,568. Have you a potato patch?—Nothing, but what I get from my neighbours.

28,569. And do you pay them anything?—Formerly I did, but not for the last two years.

Tongue, Sutherlandshire.

Alexander Barnetson.

28,570. Did you pay in labour or in money?—I paid partly in both.

28,571. But you have not been doing so for two years?—No.

28,572. Was that owing to bad times?—Well, since the Crofters Commission was here the cottars of Melness, 30 in number, held part of the arable land, that was down in Ardskinnid, which was at one time cultivated by the crofters. Before the Commission came round they were giving it to cottars, but since the Commission came round they were taking it away from cottars; so that anything they give to the cottars is simply small patches on the crofts.

28,573. May I ask you how do you earn your livelihood?—Sometimes I go to the fishing, and at other times I work away in the south, and anywhere I can obtain work.

28,574. Your livelihood is obtained by labour wherever you can get it?—Yes.

28,575. And, I suppose, that labour is precarious?—Yes.

28,576. What average wage do you earn?—To take it upon an average, I suppose, about £35 a year.

28,577. Have you been earning that during the last two years?—No, I have not. I have been working at home, at the new quarries that have been started at Melness for the last two years.

28,578. What wage did you get there?—15s. a week.

28,579. But your labour is steady in the meantime. Were you one of the delegates appointed at that meeting?—Yes.

28,580. I suppose we may take you as representing specially the feelings of the cottars?—Yes.

28,581. Are these cottars desirous of obtaining holdings?—Yes, they have applied to the present factor, Mr Box; they have applied to the late Duke, and to the Duchess Dowager, and also to the present Duke for land, and they could not get it.

28,582. Were these different applications?—Yes, they were different applications.

28,583. How many applications were put in?—We made two to the late Duke, and one to the Duchess Dowager, and one to the present Duke.

28,584. That makes four; what answers have been made? Did you get an answer to each of these?—The last answer we got was handed in to you, my lord, at the time the Crofters Commission was here, by the agent who represented the people of Melness, Mr Ewen Robertson.

28,585. But possibly you can tell me what the substance of the answer was?—The substance was that we were to apply to the Crofters Commission.

28,586. That was the answer made by the estate?—Yes. [Mr Ewen Robertson.—The answer was that it was left over to the Crofters Commission to settle it.]

28,587. Do the other cottars whom you specially represent maintain themselves similarly to the way in which you do?—Yes.

28,588. By labour?—By labour and by fishing in the summer time.

28,589. As hired hands?—Yes.

28,590. Have any of them boats of their own?—No.

28,591. But they get occasional hiring engagements on fishing boats?—Yes.

28,592. Is that the herring fishing?—The herring fishing.

28,593. Mr Sutherland.—How many crofters are there in Melness?—Ninety-three now. There were ninety formerly, and other three were added when the Crofters Commission was here.

28,594. And how many cottars?—Thirty.

28,595. Thirty people without land in Melness?—Thirty without land and having separate houses. [The Chairman.—And paying no rent?—Paying no rent. None of them?—Two of them; one pays 5s. and the other 12s.]

28,596. And they have no land?—Well, they have a garden.

28,597. Who built the houses?—Their forefathers, I suppose.

28,598. Not the proprietor?—No, the proprietor built no houses in Melness as far as I have heard or can learn.

28,599. A rent of 12s. is paid for what acreage?—I would say that this man who pays 12s. will have only ¼ acre.

28,600. Then, he pays at the rate of 48s. an acre?—Yes.

28,601. You state that the cottars made repeated applications to the estate to give them some land?—Yes.

28,602. Did you specify any amount of land wanted?—We specified part of the farm of Melness, and pointed out the boundaries.

28,603. But I did not understand what answer you got?—The answer we got then was to apply to the Crofters Commission.

28,604. The Crofters Commission had no land?—No, but they had the power. The estate, I suppose, tried to give us the best answer they could, or to put us off at the time, and that was the answer they gave, —to go to the Crofters Commission.

28,605. The Chairman.—Were you not aware that the Crofters Commission had no power to enlarge the holdings of cottars?—We were fully aware of that, and we wrote back to that effect.

28,606. To whom?—To the present Duke; but we got no answer.

28,607. The Crofters Commission, as you are aware, have special Parliamentary powers under the Act to give enlargement of holdings to crofters, but not to cottars. —Well, I know that we wrote back to the present Duke stating that we knew the Crofters Commission had no power to give land under the Act, and that we hoped his Grace would be kind enough to give his consent to the Crofters Commission to deal with the cottars of Melness; but we got no reply to that.

28,608. When was that answer by you to the estate made?—Shortly after we got the answer from the Duke that we were to apply to the Crofters Commission.

28,609. And you got no reply to that?—No reply.

28,610. Mr Sutherland.—Did that answer come through the usual channel of communication with the Duke of Sutherland,—that you were to apply to the Crofters Commission?—Yes, it did.

28,611. From the factor?—Yes, we got the reply from Tongue; but the last two replies came from the Duke's Secretary.

28,612. Are all these thirty cottars that you referred to anxious to get land?—Very anxious; I suppose if they had not been anxious they would not have applied to the Duke for it.

28,613. I think you are quite justified in making that statement. They would be perfectly willing, you think, if they got land on anything like reasonable terms to take that land and to work it to advantage?—Very willing.

28,614. And do you think there is plenty land in this district?—I hold that there is plenty land in the farm of Melness.

28,615. Suitable for them?—Very suitable.

28,616. And plenty on the farm of Ribigill?—Plenty.

28,617. And plenty in the whole of this district and on the farm of Eriboll?—Yes.

28,618. You don't think these holdings are too restricted, do you?—No, I don't.

28,619. Mr Macaulay, Solicitor, Golspie.—With regard to these cottars, are they men of any means? Are the cottars in Melness fairly well off?—I think they are about the average.

28,620. Would they be able to stock holdings if they got them?—I hold that if they were not able they would not ask for them or apply for them.

28,621. You think no one in these parts ever asked for anything he could not fulfil?—I am speaking for the cottars.

28,622. Then, you think they would be able to stock a holding and pay a rent?—I am fully aware that they would be able to stock a holding.

28,623. You would be able to do it yourself?—Yes.

28,624. The Chairman.—Do you admit, Mr Mac-

Tongue, Sutherland-shire.

Alexander Barnetson.

aulay, that the answer from the Duke was to apply to the Crofters Commission? [Mr Macaulay.—I am not in a position at this moment to say.]

28,625. You do not deny it? [Mr Macaulay.—I am not in a position in the meantime to deny it, but I could shortly ascertain.] [Mr Box.—If the letter in question came from Tongue, copy of it can be obtained.]

28,626. We would like very much to see a copy of the letter at your convenience. [Mr Box.—Very well. I cannot carry in my mind the exact facts of the case, but I don't think they were told to apply to the Commission.]

28,627. Mr Box. [To witness].—Did that letter come from me?—No, not the last letter.

28,628. The letter in which it was stated that you should apply to the Crofters Commission for this land; how was it that the letter came?—Through the Duke's Secretary.

28,629. The Chairman.—Who got the letter?—I got it myself.

28,630. It was you who wrote the application?—Yes.

28,631. And you received an answer directed to yourself?—Yes.

28,632. Have you got that letter?—I understand it was lodged with the Crofters Commission and put up as a production along with the application.

James William Morrison.

James William Morrison, Torrisdale (29)—examined.

28,633. The Chairman.—Are you a teacher in Melness school?—I am not employed as a teacher now; I am staying with my father.

28,634. When did you cease to be a teacher?—I was teacher in Melness school in the beginning of this year.

28,635. Were you appointed as a delegate at a public meeting of the crofters of Torrisdale?—The crofters of the district of Skerray.

28,636. You are here therefore as a delegate from that meeting?—I am.

28,637. And have you a written statement?—I have. Shall I read it?

28,638. If you please.

I was elected at a public meeting of the inhabitants of the district of Skerray, in this parish, to give evidence before your honours, in regard to the land suitable for cultivation lying in our immediate vicinity.

The district I represent contains 84 crofter families, with a population of about 520 more or less resident, —that is who have no other permanent home. Besides these there are 26 families, who come under the designation of cottars or squatters representing 100 people or thereabout. The 14 crofters have on an average $2\frac{3}{4}$ acres of arable land, or 230 acres in all, and for this they pay £295, 13s. 10d., or an average of £3, 10s. 4d. Each crofter is also supposed to have 73 acres of hill pasture as his share of the common grazing ground, but this includes lochs, rocks, and bogs, so that they pay rather more than $11\frac{1}{4}$d. per acre over all. The neighbouring farm of Borgie pays about 5d. an acre.

The only land in the vicinity capable of being cultivated with advantage is on the farm of Borgie, lying on both sides of the river Borgie. It comprises the old township of Polruisguidh, Crackerine, Achnantot, Eas-an-fhaidh, Borgie-beg, and Reidh-ruadh, on the right or eastern bank of the river, and Aultyhallard and Breachadh on the left bank. All these places were formerly occupied by tenants, but the old arable land is not so extensive as might be supposed from the number who lived there seventy years ago. This might be owing to the primitive methods of agriculture and the difficulty of working any extent of land with the tools of husbandry then in use. However, as far as can be ascertained there are 105 to 110 acres above Borgie which could be turned with the plough alone, while there are about 150 acres that would require some labour in reclaiming them, but nothing compared with what has been spent in other places. Besides, there is a piece of ground about 45 acres in extent called Melvich under cultivation until seven or eight years ago, but now in the possession of the crofters of Naver, who got it from the Crofters Commission as an extension of their grazing ground. It is not in any way suitable for grazing from the nature of the soil, and it has turned mossy since it has been under grass, but it used to yield splendid crops of oats, turnips, and potatoes. Alongside this there is a wide extent of level land,—Blar-eilean-na-goal, part of which was formerly cultivated, and the remainder about 100 acres is capable of being turned into good land, as there is a capital clayey subsoil, and only about 18 to 24 inches at the deepest part of peaty soil above that. It is also in the possession of the Naver crofters.

Tongue, Sutherland-shire.

James William Morrison.

There are thus about 470 acres on this farm eminently suitable for crofters, and it is free from many of the objections made to some of the other straths, as it is remarkably free from early frosts, and the elevation above the sea is generally from 50 to 150 feet; in no instance would the arable land be more than 200 feet above the sea level. The subsoil is good, being in some cases clay mixed with sand, and in others fine gravelly sand which usually bears good crops where it occurs on the present holdings of the crofters. The shepherd at Dalness, as high up the strath as any of the proposed holdings, usually has a good yield of potatoes, the only crop he cultivates.

I should like to point out that in instituting any comparison between the small holdings and the large farms, it has to be noted that there is in the case of the large farms considerable expenditure on improvements on the part of the proprietor at the end of each nineteen years' lease. In the case of Borgie, with a rental of £250 per annum, there has been expended on improvements including repair of the dwelling house, river embankments, new fencing, and repair to dykes, &c., something like £380,—at least that is my estimate, and if the amount yet to be expended is added it will not fall far short of two years' rental. The crofters on the other hand when they do get any help from the estate have to pay interest at the rate of 5 per cent.; and not only that, but rates are charged on the interest, so that in this parish a crofter pays $5\frac{9}{16}$ per cent., surely more than is current in any other investments in this kingdom. They do not get help at this exorbitant rate with any goodwill, for, to give one instance, when the crofters of Torrisdale applied to the proprietor last year to erect a fence round the township and offered to pay the interest on the outlay, their application was curtly refused.

As to the size of the new holdings, much would depend on the nature of the ground and the capabilities of the tenants, but in no instance should a holding be smaller than 15 acres arable. But strict limits should not be set to the extent of the arable ground. In a place like Strathborgie where old arable and new ground suitable for reclamation lie side by side a certain proportion (say 15 acres) should be given that could be cultivated with immediate profit; while there should be no limit to the extent the tenant might reclaim of the new ground lying in a line with his first portion. Taking 30 acres as the average holding, with outrun to correspond, the whole of the farm of Borgie could be profitably utilised by the crofters settled on it.

Some of the crofters in the district I represent might be able to take a holding without any outside aid, but the great majority would need help in erecting buildings and stocking the holdings. If the estate gave as much in proportion as they give to the large farmers at the beginning of a lease, and the Government gave a grant in aid, the money difficulty—the only difficulty on the crofters' part—would be settled very soon. And any legislation on the question will not be satisfactory that does not provide for the remaining one of the three F's — free sale, that is, that the crofter could dispose of his tenant right, or assign it as security to the Government for the money advanced, without being hampered by such conditions of consanguinity as are a blemish on the present Crofters Act.

In conclusion, I desire to point out to your honours the urgent necessity there is for something being done to relieve the congested districts similar to the one I represent. The people are eagerly desirous of availing themselves of any opportunity of getting back to the straths, and never was there more need of land than there is now. Other industries are not in a prosperous state, and work is so scarce that it may be said to be wanting altogether. The fishing cannot be prosecuted with confidence owing to the want of harbour accommodation; and through the non-fulfilment of the late Duke of Sutherland's promise of pecuniary aid, the money given by the Government cannot be used, and the harbour at Skerray on which the people set such high hopes and for which they made sacrifices in subscribing money greater comparatively than the Duke of Sutherland seems to be no nearer realization than when the proposal was mooted first.

Tongue, Sutherlandshire.

James William Morrison.

Rates are increasing, and while the population is diminishing the number of paupers is on the increase. And increase it will and must under the present conditions, when every man has enough to do to keep himself and family without providing for those who under happier circumstances would share in his prosperity and be fed by his bounty.

(Signed) JAMES WILLIAM MORRISON.

28,639. Have you a croft yourself?—My father has.

28,640. Is he No. 257 Torrisdale?—I think that is the No.

28,641. I see the area is stated as 5 acres 1 rood arable, 1 acre 1 rood outrun, and 6½ shares in 11,070 acres of hill; the former rent was £6, 10s. and the fair rent is £5, 10s.?—That is so.

28,642. You have referred particularly to the farm of Borgie, and I think part of your observations were directed to the whole of the farm?—They were.

28,643. But you call our attention particularly to the land on both sides of the river Borgie, going up the valley of the river?—Certainly.

28,644. And is it in that quarter you think that we can find the 470 acres from Borgie Bridge?—If I may be allowed to explain the matter, there is part of the 470 acres included in the extension of holdings given by the Crofters Commission to the crofters of Naver.

28,645. Can you tell us what extent of land there is exclusive of the land given to the crofters of Invernaver?—It would be about 325 acres in the farm of Borgie.

28,646. And particularly on the banks of the river Borgie?—Yes.

28,647. Is that land, in your opinion, suitable for new settlements?—It is.

28,648. Is the township of Torrisdale congested?—It is; both the township of Torrisdale and the district of Skerray.

28,649. You represent the whole district?—I do.

28,650. Can you tell me how many cottars are in the district?—Twenty-six families.

28,651. And how many families of crofters?—Eighty-four.

28,652. You represent both I take it?—Yes.

28,653. Have any of the 26 cottars land?—None, I don't count them cottars if they pay any rent.

28,654. All these are tenants who pay no rent?—They pay no rent.

28,655. And have no land?—And have no land. Some of them have some stock, they do have some sheep.

28,656. Upon the crofters' pasture?—Yes.

28,657. But I suppose we may take it a very small number?—Well, about half of them have sheep; and one or two of them have cattle and sheep.

28,658. How do they live?—They mostly live by fishing or other work.

28,659. Have any of them boats?—None of them have boats, but some of them have a share in a boat.

28,660. When you say fishing do you mean that for the most part they go as hired hands?—Yes. There are one or two who are hands upon the boats given by Government and the Duke of Sutherland.

28,661. How many such boats are there?—There are two in the district; one given by the Government and one by the Duke of Sutherland.

28,662. You said the crofter part of the township of Torrisdale was congested and there are 84 families; how many of these would you propose to take out in order to leave sufficient area of crofters' holdings for the remainder?—Between two-thirds and three-fourths.

Tongue, Sutherlandshire.

James William Morrison.

28,663. And could they find accommodation in Strath-Borgie?—No, not all.

28,664. Only to a limited extent?—Only to a limited extent.

28,665. Could they find accommodation taking the whole farm of Borgie?—No, not on the farm of Borgie.

28,666. Then, where would you propose that they should go?—There is Strathnaver and round about there; some of them came from Ribigill farm and some from Strathnaver.

28,667. Wherever there is available land in the district?—In the county.

28,668. Is there a desire on the part of the crofters of Torrisdale to remove?—I have so expressed in my statement.

28,669. And I take it you say the same of the cottars?—I do, more strongly in their case if possible.

28,670. The case of the cottars is even worse than that of the crofters?—Even worse than that of the crofters.

28,671. Mr Sutherland.—You were born in Torrisdale?—I was.

28,672. And have been brought up there?—Yes.

28,673. And know intimately and of personal experience all the circumstances and opinions of the people?—Every one of them.

28,674. What is your knowledge with regard to how that colony was formed at Torrisdale? I take for granted that it is not a place to which people would go of their own accord?—No, unless they wanted a good view; that is about the only thing they can get there.

28,675. How did they come to settle there?—They were driven there.

28,676. Where did they come from?—Some from Strathnaver, and some from Strath-Borgie, and Torrisdale itself,—I suppose you include the district of Skerray.

28,677. Yes.—Well, they came from Strathnaver and from Strath-Borgie, and from Ribigill, and up by the side of Loch-Loyal there.

28,678. In fact it is the old old story that they were swept out of the land and put down there out of the way?—That is so.

28,679. And the good land made into sheep farms?—That is so.

28,680. Do you know what provision was made for them when they were sent there?—I will give you an instance. There were some crofters sent from Strath-Borgie down to a place we call Achtoty. They were allowed one cow, but they had to sell the rest of their stock; they had to build their houses there, and they had to sleep in the houses they were building all through the summer, because it was too far to their homes. They kept their cow that winter; they had to cut hay in Tongue wood here; it was the women who cut the hay, and they were allowed as much as they could carry home on their backs after their day's work.

20,681. That was the payment a woman got for her day's work?—Yes.

28,682. The green grass she could carry on her back?—Yes.

28,683. From Tongue to Skerray?—Yes.

28,684. What is the distance?—Eight miles.

28,685. These were some of the circumstances under which the settlements were made there?—Yes.

28,686. You referred to Achtoty. What sort of land did the people of Achtoty get?—Land covered with three feet of water.

28,687. The water was measured out for them?—Evidently.

28,688. The land that the people down there hold in common borders with two large farms; you hold in common with Tongue, don't you?—Yes.

28,689. On this side it borders with the large farm of Ribigill and on the other side with Borgie?—Yes.

28,690. Have you anything to say about suitable places on the farm of Ribigill?—I have no personal knowledge of the farm of Ribigill.

28,691. You simply left that for the people of Tongue to point out?—I did, those who knew better about the place than I do.

28,692. You said that there are 26 cottars, people without land. You know the terms of our remit very well, I have no doubt you have read it?—I have read it.

28,693. We are appointed to inquire as to land that is suitable for cultivation to a profit or could otherwise be advantageously occupied by crofters or other small tenants, and you know the restrictions that are put on it?—Yes.

28,694. Knowing the circumstances and the opinions and feelings of the people, are you of opinion that there is a good deal of land such as we are looking for in this neighbourhood?—In this neighbourhood there is more than will suffice for all the people who would want the land.

28,695. You know the Strath of the Naver?—Perfectly.

28,696. Is it your opinion that it would be advantageous for all parties that it should be reoccupied?—It would pay the proprietor better than the large farms, and there is no doubt it would be to the advantage of the crofters; and it would be for the benefit of the nation at large.

28,697. You have had a considerable experience and knowledge of the world. How do the people here compare in industry and intelligence with the people in other parts of the country?—I have a considerable knowledge of England, and I would no more think of comparing the Highland crofter to the English labourer than I would compare a philosopher to a Hottentot.

28,698. So that in the interests of the public you think that in conserving a good and intelligent portion of the public for the nation, something ought to be done on that ground alone?—I think it is urgently necessary that it should be done.

28,699. You are aware, no doubt, and would have heard and read that it was stated at the time the clearances were carried out, that the people were not up to the scientific method of agriculture?—I have seen it stated.

28,700. And I suppose that comparing them at the present time you would be inclined to agree that that is so?—Yes, I would admit that.

28,701. Now, what I wish to ask you is this; in your opinion, is it a fair thing to compare the people of eighty years ago and their advancement, with a state of matters that did not exist anywhere at that time?—There is no fairness about it.

28,702. They are comparing it, are they not, with the present time?—Yes.

28,703. But if you compare the method of agriculture carried on in Sutherland with the method of agriculture carried on in the county of Ayr at the same time, do you find any difference?—No, I should not fancy so, but what I should state is this, that within the last eighty years agriculture has made more strides than I suppose it ever made from the beginning of agriculture.

28,704. But it made it in Sutherland as well as in Ayr?—In Sutherland as well as in Ayr, within the last few years.

28,705. I don't want to dwell upon that, but I merely wish to ascertain the opinion of a gentleman who has given this question some thought, and who is not likely to look at it from one point of view alone. You think, then, that viewing all the circumstances, the policy that dictated and led to the clearing of the people has been a failure?—It has been a failure from the beginning I think.

28,706. Have you noticed that the apologists of that policy have departed from almost all their own old arguments?—I have noticed that.

28,707. They have given up a great number of their old arguments?—They have.

28,708. Which you take, I presume, to be tantamount to an admission of the case you advocate?—That they were wrong in the beginning.

28,709. Accepting that,—do you consider that these places in which the people were before could be advantageously occupied in terms of the subject that has been remitted to us?—I have not the slightest doubt about it.

28,710. Do you know, as a matter of fact, people who would be very glad to undertake such a holding?—I know many of them.

28,711. Now, you have just referred to the discrepancies between the amount paid by the large farmers, and by the crofter, as he is now called?—I have.

28,712. We take here, in your own case, two blocks of land, which appear to be practically the same area, and which the figures show to be almost the same area, that is the farm of Borgie, and the grazings held by the crofters of Tongue and Skerray together; in the one case, the crofters have 12,420 acres, and the other the farm of Borgie has 12,350 acres; these are practically the same figures?—Yes.

28,713. What is the rental, do you know, of the farm of Borgie?—£250 I am told.

28,714. What is the rental of Tongue and Skerray?—I cannot say as to Tongue.

28,715. Well, it is £431; we have practically here, then, Borgie, with 12,350 acres, paying £250; and Tongue and Skerray, with 12,420 acres, paying £430, or double the amount as near as possible?—It amounts to what I have stated,—11¼d. for the crofters, and 5d. for the large farmers.

28,716. And what do you say as to the quality of the land?—I say this: I could give you an instance if you would permit me to give an explanation.

28,717. Which is the better land: I would put it that way?—There is no doubt about it that Borgie farm is worth ten times as much as the other.

28,718. So that for the poorer land that you think is not half so good, the people pay double what is paid for the better land?—That is so.

28,719. Are you of opinion that that would apply all over,—to the other large farms as well?—I believe so, but I would not like to affirm so without more practical knowledge of the question.

28,720. I think you say in your statement that the people when they came there made homes for themselves under very disadvantageous circumstances?—I mentioned that in my cross-examination.

28,721. And you think they would do the same thing much more easily under favourable circumstances if they got the chance?—That is why I mentioned such a thing.

28,722. Would you be surprised to find that the farm of Borgie, with which we make the comparison, pays a higher rental than any other large farm in the neighbourhood, with the exception of Achnabourin?—I believe it is over-rented: I have no doubt as to that.

28,723. Mr Gordon.—This is a populous part of the country round the coast?—It is.

28,724. Our last witness told us that there were 93 crofters at Melness?—Yes.

28,725. And a witness from Skinnid told us that there were 30 cottars, or together 123 families. There are 84 crofters you say in Torrisdale and 26 cottars—in all 110 families. Between Bighouse and Melvich we were told the other day that there are 415 crofters. I am not able to say from my remembrance of the evidence how many cottars, but I have no doubt there are a good many, possibly over 50 cottars. Then, there is a district of the country between Melvich and your township, of which at the present moment we have no information before us as to the number of crofters or cottars. But we have here from the evidence taken to-day and at Melvich the large number of 648 cottars and crofters, without taking into account those who reside between Melvich and your township. Now, you and the last witness who gave us very clear evidence, stated that it would be necessary to remove two-thirds of the crofters, and I presume the whole of the cottars from these districts?—That is so.

28,726. That would mean that out of 648 you would have to remove 432. You further stated to us that it would be necessary to give each man at the commencement 15 acres of old arable land?—I mentioned one place in particular where it was not exactly old arable, but land that could be turned by the plough. I confined my attention to our own place.

Tongue, Sutherlandshire.

James William Morrison.

28,727. You proposed to increase that arable area to 20 or 30 acres?—I set no limits to the arable land within a reasonable amount.

28,728. It is very easy to make a statement which it would put us into a great difficulty to fulfil. You say there is abundance of land in this country to meet all the wants of these people?—I believe so.

28,729. Multiply 430 by 20 and you see that you have upwards of 8000 acres to find. Do you mean to say that there are 8000 acres in this quarter that could be reclaimed?—I cannot follow you there; what is the 400?

28,730. The number of families all the way from Bighouse on to Melness. [The Chairman.—From Strath Halladale to the Kyle of Tongue]. And that excludes the people between Melvich and your township? [Mr Box.—I may say that, as a matter of fact, there are 745 families in the whole of this district without cottars.]

28,731. I merely want to put you right as to the general statement you made. Do you think there are 8000 acres of land?—I do, and I believe there are fully more.

28,732. More than 8000 acres that could be reclaimed and would pay for reclamation?—Yes, to a profit.

28,733. I am sorry to say I differ from you. Assuming that there are 400 acres that could be reclaimed profitably, you, as an intelligent man, must have been thinking out in your own head how that would be applied. What arrangement would you propose for locating people on the land?—It is not my part to enter on details.

28,734. But that is a very important matter; how are you going to divide the land among the people?—I indicated in my statement that 15 acres should be given to each man.

28,735. But what man is to get the first 15?—The people who could best afford to leave the place; and they should be taken out of the most congested places to begin with.

28,736. But who is going to do that?—The thing is not going to work by itself; it must be done by some machinery, and if the Government is taking the inquiry in hand surely it will provide the machinery to work it out.

28,737. I thought you would have had some idea in your own mind?—I could not presume to set my own idea up. [The Chairman.—All Mr Gordon means is, have you any suggestion to offer on the matter, if so, we shall be glad to hear it]. I might have; but I have not yet considered any details like that. If I were to prepare to be questioned on the matter in detail I might be able to say, but off-hand I could not give further details without consideration.

28,738. But your opinion is that in order really to afford the remedy which the people desire it would be necessary to remove two-thirds of the present crofters and the whole of cottars from the township which you represent?—I might qualify that statement a little; I believe that in every community it would not be well that every man should of necessity have land; I believe that we cannot mix the occupations of fishermen and crofters very well, and if we have a harbour and a good fishing industry we could have fishermen settled there without any land.

28,739. You are in favour of that?—I am.

28,740. Do you think the fishermen would remove from your township to the neighbourhood of a good harbour?—Well, there are associations connected with the place one is born in that are very hard to shake off in the case of the Highland people.

28,741. How would you get them to remove for the sake of crofts, if you would not get them to remove for fishing facilities?—The old associations of their forefathers are very strong.

28,742. But surely the sentiment exists in each case equally: if it would work in the case of the croft, why not in the case of the harbour?—No, not with the sea.

Tongue, Sutherlandshire.

James William Morrison.

28,743. Are there many men in your township who would take to the sea naturally as a profession or as a business?—I represent crofters in an island called Eilean Roan, who really make a profession of fishing.

28,744. I ask the question in this way. Good harbours cannot be made at every part of this rough rocky coast; that is scarcely to be hoped for, I am afraid.—But recommendations have been made.

28,745. There are certain points on the coast which an expenditure of money would convert into places of safety. But supposing the Government were to lay out money in the formation of a good harbour at certain points, perhaps 5, 10 or 15 miles apart,—supposing they were to make a good harbour at Scrabster and another at Melvich if possible?—There is one recommended at Melvich.

28,746. But suppose they were to make good harbours at such points as these, do you think there are people in your township who would willingly migrate to the vicinity of these places in order to fish?—I beg your pardon, there is a harbour scheme recommended for our own place, where we are now.

28,747. But suppose the Government did not see it in their power?—The Government have seen their way to build a harbour at Skerray, so I won't make the assumption.

28,748. Do you suppose people would shift from Melvich to Skerray for the sake of a good harbour?—There is one recommended at Melvich also.

28,749. I am afraid they won't all get harbours.—But the Government has granted the money for it.

28,750. You don't think that, as a rule, men would be willing to remove from certain localities to other localities for the sake of being near a harbour, putting it generally?—Yes, taking it like that; I believe that the men within a certain radius of the harbour on each side would be inclined to come. There are three harbours recommended on the north coast,—Talmine, Skerray, and Portskerra; there are five miles between Talmine and Skerray, and ten between Skerray and Portskerra.

28,751. If these men had houses provided for them there in the neighbourhood of these new harbours would you find a proportion of your crofters and cottars who would willingly devote their life to the sea?—I believe there would be a number.

28,752. So that would be one relief to the present congestion?—Yes.

28,753. Mr Forsyth.—You mentioned the farm of Borgie, and you have given information as to certain lands which would be available for the plough, I think I gather from you, on both sides of the river Borgie?—Yes.

28,754. Is that above the bridge?—Above the bridge.

28,755. Can you tell me where it is more accurately?—I could point it out to you on the map. There is the Achantot burn (explains on map.)

28,756. I have seen that ground. How much available land fit for the plough do you consider there is there?—I think between 55 and 60 acres.

28,757. Of land available and ready for the plough?—Certainly, with a little labour. It could not exactly be all turned with the plough.

28,758. But that is what I understood you to say?—Of course, you would have to work, to make drains for burns, and all that sort of thing to begin with.

28,759. Then, you mean land that is reclaimable?—Well, it would only need to be turned.

28,760. Do you mean that it is dry enough for the plough?—I mean so.

28,761. That it needs no drainage?—Not as far as I am aware.

28,762. Have you been over the land yourself?—Often.

28,763. And have you any practical knowledge as an agriculturist?—Yes.

28,764. Have you worked land?—I can work land.

28,765. Do you say there are 70 acres on the land that would need no draining?—Fifty-five to 60 acres.

28,766. Well, I must say I am surprised; and where else besides this place do you propose to find land?—On the left bank of the river.

28,767. How far up?—Just above the bridge—the flat above the bridge.

28,768. By the left bank, you mean the west bank?—Yes.

28,769. About half a mile above the bridge?—Yes.

28,770. How much would you say there is there?—I cannot remember the particulars, but I made it out and I gave it as a general statement. I should say there would be about 18 acres of old arable there; and I know one or two places that would be fully better ground than the old arable, which could be used. I take it that the old arable could be turned with the plough at any time without any further labour, and there are one or two patches down at the riverside at both ends of this place called Breachadh which could be turned with as great ease as the old arable.

28,771. By that you mean the patch where the green land is?—Yes, and round about it.

28,772. And you think more could be brought in?—Yes.

28,773. I think so too; and you say there is about 18 acres of green land?—No, I don't mean green, but old arable.

28,774. Well, fairly good dry land that could be brought under the plough?—I don't exactly mean to say that it would do to turn over a big field without putting drains in it.

28,775. In fact reclaimable land?—No, I don't say that draining land is reclaiming it. I mean to say this, that if you drain and trench land that would be reclaiming it; but if you only put drains in it I don't mean that that would be reclaiming the land.

28,776. It would cost something at any rate; it requires outlaying to drain it?—It would really not cost much to the crofter to make drains in any land; but it is the only thing for which he would require any help.

28,777. But on the whole it is not land immediately available for a crofter going into at once?—It is land a good part of which would yield a crop the first year.

28,778. And how many holdings do you think could be got in this valley?—If I am allowed to take in this part now in possession of the Naver crofters. [The Chairman.—Oh, no, please keep that out of view in the meantime]. Very good, but supposing that these crofters would see their way, I am not sure if the law allows them to cultivate this, they would need an extension of holdings for pasture, for outrun.

28,779. Which land is this you are referring to?—The old arable land, in possession of the Invernaver crofters as an extension of holdings.

28,780. Would you suggest that you should take the land from the Invernaver people?—Not we; they could do it themselves.

28,781. But I was restricting my own inquiries as to Borgie farm, because I wanted to get your views as to what should be done in the valley, without any reference to the part of Borgie farm that belongs to Invernaver. It is the land up the glen I mean.—There would be room for something like ten crofters.

28,782. And how much would you give them a piece?—Fifteen to forty acres according to the circumstances of the place and the capabilities of the tenant.

28,783. And that could be done in that glen?—I believe so.

28,784. Mr Sutherland.—You were asked questions with regard to the finding of improvable or reclaimable land for the number of crofter and cottar families that were on the land in this management?—Yes, I was.

28,785. Did you know Mr John Barclay, who was for thirty years in the Duke of Sutherland's office in Tongue here?—I have heard about him; he was before my day.

28,786. Are you aware that he sent in a very valuable statement to Lord Napier's Commission at the time they were here?—No, I was not aware.

28,787. You were not aware that he stated that all over Sutherland one acre in every ten is reclaimable land?—I have seen the statement made.

28,788. And was not Mr Barclay, in your opinion, a very high authority?—I should fancy he would be a very good authority on the Strath.

28,789. You were not aware that he made that statement?—No.

28,790. Well, you may take it from me that he made that statement with all the authority and weight attaching to one of his experience. What in round numbers is the area of the Tongue management?—I could not say. [Mr Box.—About 400,000 acres.]

28,791. Divide 400,000 acres by ten?—40,000 acres.

28,792. Divide 40,000 by 270, the number of families given: it brings 148, which would be the number of acres of reclaimable land for each of the 270 families; do you follow?—Yes.

28,793. That would be a very fair proportion of arable land don't you think?—I should fancy it would be rather more than we need.

28,794. So that you think if the will was there the way is plain enough?—I think the way is plain enough.

28,795. As to the question of harbours and fishing; as a matter of fact the people of Skerray do go far and wide in search of fishing: they go all over the country, do they not?—They do.

28,796. And do they suffer a good deal of hardship and undergo a great deal of labour, to your own knowledge, while pursuing their avocation?—It is the most arduous occupation I know of, especially if conducted on the north coast.

28,797. And it was with these conditions in view that the executive Government of the country saw fit to grant them how many thousands for building harbours,—£10,000 was it not?—Something like that.

28,798. And do you know any of the arguments that recommended the project to the Government? Have you ever heard them stated?—No.

28,799. Have you ever heard that the people were sent down from inland places to the sea coast in order to become fishers?—I heard that; it is an old argument.

28,800. And was it not stated that after eighty years there were no harbours there?—Yes, I have seen that statement.

28,801. Would not that now in your opinion be an argument that would go a very long way with an executive Government to induce them to make harbours?—I should fancy it would; a Government that had the good of the country at heart.

28,802. Therefore, it cannot, in your opinion, be said with any degree of truth that the people are not very anxious to be fishermen if they could?—They cannot be fishermen if they would.

28,803. Then, with regard to the people applying for land, did it in your opinion ever occur that all the community wanted to cultivate the land?—Never; I should have fancied there would be other means of employment.

28,804. There would be merchants and tradesmen, would there not?—Yes.

28,805. There would be ministers?—Yes.

28,806. There would be lawyers even, would there not?—Well, a few of them.

28,807. And there would be a great number of the population absorbed into the professions would there not?—Certainly.

28,808. So you think generally and finally that there is plenty land for every person?—I do; more than enough.

28,809. The Chairman.—I gather from what you said before that suppose a considerable change made on these congested townships, you are in favour of establishing two classes, a crofter class with self-subsisting holdings, and a fisherman class who live by the sea?—That is my own idea.

28,810. That is an opinion which you hold most distinctly?—Quite distinctly.

28,811. And in any arrangements made you would

Tongue, Sutherlandshire.

James William Morrison.

be in favour of steps being taken for the establishment of a fisherman class along with the crofter class?—I should like to see a class established that would devote their whole time to the sea.

28,812. With houses adjacent to the sea, and small patches of ground for potatoes, and so forth, but whose whole time was really to be devoted to and livelihood to be derived from fishing in the sea?—That is my opinion.

28,813. Do you think there is any considerable desire in that direction?—The difficulty is this, that we have such bad harbour accommodation, there is so much danger at present in prosecuting the fishing industry that it offers no attraction to any man.

28,814. Well, then, suppose the harbour accommodation to be materially improved, and such other conditions as could fairly be granted given to the class of men in question, would there be a sufficient number to warrant steps being taken to form such holdings?—I believe so, but, of course, you cannot educate the people in a year or two; I believe in a few years there would be plenty demand.

28,815. With harbours?—With harbours and facilities.

28,816. And with small holdings adjacent to the sea, there would be a development of what you might call fisher crofters?—I believe so in a few years.

28,817. And are you of opinion that the men are men who would readily become fishermen?—The men are as skilful fishermen as can be found.

28,818. And would that kind of population, in your opinion, tend to increase with such facilities as we have been pointing out?—Of course, because the sea round about us is teeming with fish.

28,819. These, of course, would be people without land practically?—Practically without land.

28,820. Mr Macaulay, Solicitor, Golspie.—How does the quantity of arable land in the townships of Tongue and Skerray compare with that upon the farm of Borgie as now occupied?—I cannot give you the figure for Tongue, but for the district of Skerray it is 230 acres, and 70 acres for the farm of Borgie, or thereabouts.

28,821. You cannot tell me the state of matters as regards Tongue?—No, I am sorry to say I cannot; I don't represent Tongue.

28,822. Would you be surprised to find that there are upwards of 500 acres arable on Tongue and Skerray?—Yes, I should be surprised.

28,823. You think there are not so many?—I think not.

28,824. There are actually 532.

28,825. Mr Sutherland.—Who made the land on Borgie arable?—The crofters, of course, the old inhabitants.

28,826. And who made the land on the holdings of the people of Tongue and Skerray arable?—Themselves.

William Mackay.

WILLIAM MACKAY, Torrisdale (41)—examined.

28,827. The Chairman.—Do you live with your father?—Yes.

28,828. Is he a crofter?—Yes.

28,829. Were you appointed as a delegate?—Yes.

28,830. At the same time as Mr Morrison, the last witness?—Yes.

28,831. Your father's name is John Mackay, Ard-Torrisdale?—Yes.

28,832. I see he has 3 acres arable and 1½ acres outrun?—Mr Watson said it was 3 acres arable, but I differed from him.

28,833. And also four shares of the common grazing: the former rent was £4 and the fair rent is £3?—That is right.

28,834. Have you a written statement?—Yes. At a public meeting of the inhabitants of the district of Skerray, in the parish of Tongue, I have been appointed as delegate to represent them before your honours. In this district there are 84 crofters, and 26 cottars with no land. The only land formerly under cultivation near this locality is on the Borgie farm, which contains nine townships, from which 38 families or 228 individuals were removed. The first removals took place about the year 1826, when four families were removed from the township of Achantot, and were allowed to settle on Borgie More for three years. In or about the year 1829, the whole of the 38 families were cleared out to make the present sheep farm, on which about 30 individuals reside. Some of those removed were allowed to settle on the shores of Lochtoty, where they got about 1½ acre of land on the side of a hill, with leave to keep one cow: they had to build new houses and reclaim land without any assistance or compensation for their former holdings. After reclaiming their allotments they set to work, drying the loch and made it good arable land. They slept out under cover during the summer months when reclaiming their new holdings, which is a proof that they were an industrious people. Others of them went to Island Roan and some to Polerscaig in Farr. Annexed is a list of the townships with number of crofters or tenants removed:—

Among the majority of the cottars there is a desire for holdings as there is no work to be got in the country; the only industry is the fishing industry, and owing to the wild nature of the coast and want of harbour accommodations it cannot be carried on to advantage.

I got my information from William Mackay, Alexander Munro, and others.

(Signed) WILLIAM MACKAY.

28,835. You concur also with the evidence given by the previous witness?—Yes, I concur with the evidence given by Mr Morrison.

28,836. Mr Sutherland.—You can give us plenty information about the fishing?—Well, I believe I could give you a little, I have been trying it for the last twenty years at any rate.

28,837. You have been going all over the north?—From Shetland to the Butt of Lewis, and as far south as St. Abb's Head.

28,938. You have a good idea of what it is to be a fisherman?—Yes, and what it is to be a crofter too, because I have to work at that also.

Tongue, Sutherland-shire. William Mackay.

28,939. And you would be very glad to give up the fishing for the chance of having a croft?—I would do it before to-morrow if I was getting a new holding, for I don't care very much about the one we have at present.

28,840. You would like it on better land?—I would.

28,841. But it is your father who has the croft?—Yes, but he cannot work it now by himself, and I am the only one of the family who resides with my father.

28,842. So you practically have to go all over the country in order to maintain your father when he lives here?—Yes, I have.

28,843. And is the croft self-supporting?—Well, I believe, as was stated already to the Crofters Commission, that for the last seven years we got about one and a half bolls from the croft, from the two and a half acres. Mr Watson, the surveyor, told me it was three acres. He paced it, but I measured it with a chain and made it rather less—2½. I don't know which of us is right, but I maintain that I am right.

28,844. You hold that the croft is not self-sustaining?—No, it is not. We keep two cows and a calf and 20 sheep.

28,845. There is no rent in it?—No.

28,846. The rent comes out of the sea?—It always comes out of the sea.

28,847. As far south as St. Abb's Head?—All round the coast of Scotland. It comes from Edinburgh partly, because my brothers are there, and they help to maintain my father.

28,848. Have you an opinion regarding this matter, whether it would be better for fishermen to have no land, or to have a little land?—I believe it would be better for them to have a small patch of land, just enough to grow potatoes; but I know from practical experience that it is not very beneficial to have a regular croft and be a fisherman: you cannot attend to both at the same time.

28,849. The questions the Chairman asked were rather, I think, directed towards the state of matters where you would not have to go all round the country from home for fishing?—But the fish do not stop in one place. I believe you would have read Mr Maconochie's statement before the House of Commons.

28,850. What was the gist of his statement?—His opinion was that the fish came on from the Butt of Lewis, round the north coast here, and went round to the east coast.

28,851. Do you agree with that opinion?—No, but I agree that the fish come to all the fishing grounds at their natural times; each place has its own time.

28,852. Take the case of Skerray. When you get your harbour there, will it be necessary for you to go away from Skerray and pursue the fishing all round the coast as you do now?—I think it would; we could prosecute the herring fishing up to July, and then there might be some other fishing to follow, though not perhaps so profitable as the herring fishing; but I think people would require to go to the east coast fishing as well.

28,853. But you think if you had a self-sustaining holding such as the Chairman has been asking questions about it would not be necessary to follow the fishing everywhere?—No, it would not.

28,854. And it would be desirable you think to have such a holding?—Yes, it is desirable; there is a lot of expenses connected with the fishing more than with a holding.

28,855. Are the risks greater?—The risks are much greater, without a doubt; you are under the risk of losing everything you have and perhaps your own life as well.

28,856. Have you seen as much as £100 worth of fishing gear lost in one night?—Yes, and far more. I have known of £400 or £500 worth being lost from this same parish in one night at the fishing.

28,857. And did you ever hear of £100 worth of potatoes being destroyed by frost in one night?—Never, or anything like it.

28,858. If you had an opportunity of taking a moderate sized holding you would do so?—Yes, I would.

28,859. And you would be ready to take it at any time?—I would be ready to take it to-morrow without any assistance.

28,860. The Chairman.—Subject to what you have said, I understand you agree with the evidence given by the previous witness in favour of the establishment of fishermen's holdings along the north coast where the fisherman would depend exclusively upon the sea for his livelihood?—Yes, with a small patch of land to grow potatoes.

28,861. Who would take their livelihood from the sea and not from their holdings?—Yes, of course.

JOHN BOX, Factor for the Tongue Property of the Duke of Sutherland (48)—examined. John Box.

28,862. The Chairman.—You are factor on the Tongue management of the Sutherland estates?—Yes.

28,863. And that exclusively?—Yes.

28,863*a*. For how long have you been factor?—For eight and a half years.

28,864. The previous factor was Mr Crawford?—Yes.

28,865. I see you have a statement to submit to us. Kindly read it.—Sutherland Estate—Tongue District. Statement of facts, statistics, &c., prepared for the inquiry of the Royal Commission (Highlands and Islands 1892) by John Box, factor, Tongue.

The Tongue district of the Sutherland estates comprises (a) part of the Reay country, viz., the parish of Tongue and part of the parish of Durness; (b) the old property of Strathnaver, comprising a considerable portion of the parish of Farr, and extending from the march with the parish of Tongue, on the west to Armadale on the east; (c) the old estate of Armadale, including Strathy to Portskerra; and (d) the Bighouse estate, which includes Strathalladale.

The Reay country was bought by the Marquis of Stafford, from Lord Reay, in 1829 (May 15th); Strathnaver was disposed by Donald, first Lord Reay, to John, Earl of Sutherland, in 1642; Armadale, with Strathy and Portskerra, was disposed to the Marquis of Stafford by Lord Armadale, in 1813; Bighouse, with Halladale, was acquired by the Marquis of Stafford from Major Mackay, in 1830 (July 23rd). All these properties were acquired by purchase after the removals had taken place, except in Strathnaver.

CLEARANCES.

The Armadale property was cleared for sheep by Lord Armadale in 1792, and the people removed to their present holdings. The Reay country was cleared for sheep, and the people removed to their present holdings by Lord Reay between 1800 and 1815. Bighouse was almost entirely cleared by Mackay of Bighouse before the sale, but a few crofters were left who were under notice of removal, which took place a year after the sale of the property. Many of these tenants were left in their houses for some time. Strathnaver was cleared—the east side of the river—in 1814 and the west side in 1819.

AREA.

The area of the Tongue district is:—

Tongue parish, ...	87,330 acres.
Farr parish (old boundaries), .	194,586 „
Farr parish (formerly part of Reay),	71,842 „
Durness parish (part of), . .	29,500 „
Total, . . .	383,258

Tongue, Sutherlandshire.

John Box.

Divided as follows:—

	Hill.	Arable.
Sheep farms, . . .	262,660	1,005
Deer forests, . . .	47,800	nil
Crofts, ...	62,377	2,300
Hotels, factor, &c., . .	...	300
	372,837	3,605
	3,605
	376,442
Leaving for water, plantations, glebes, &c., . .	6,816

The deer forests contain about 300 acres of old arable, now under grass.

Tenancies.

The number of tenancies has changed but very slightly since 1830, at which time they were 745, whereas in 1892 they numbered 751.

Crofters' Rents.

The crofters' rents show an increase during the same period as follows:—

In 1830 they were, . . .	£1534
„ 1850 „ . . .	1720
„ 1860 „ . . .	1894
„ 1870 „ . . .	2048
„ 1890 „ . . .	2057

And in 1891 they were reduced to 1953 by the Crofters Commission.

The increase during the above sixty years (£523) is explained by the fact that in 1830 there were a large number of nominal rents, viz., a few shillings a year, which were to hold during the lifetime of the tenant. The increased amount also includes in it a considerable sum for interest on money expended by the proprietor for the improvement of land, &c.

It will be noticed, however, that there has been no increase on the total of the crofters' rents since 1870. The slight difference between the total then and at 1890, viz., £9, being much more than accounted for by interest on money granted for improvements.

Estate Outlays.

During the last ten years—1883–1892—the proprietor's expenditure in connection with crofts, principally in help for buildings and land reclamations, amounted to £6507, an average of £650 per year.

Crofter Outlays.

On the other side, I would call attention to the fact that during the six years since the passing of the Crofters Act the value of the land improvements done by the tenants themselves amounts in all to £527, or £88 per year for 750 tenancies.

Deer Forests.

The deer forests in the Tongue districts are only three in number, viz.:—

Lochachoire in the heights of Farr, contains about 10,000 acres. It was cleared of sheep by the tenant in 1881, the farming of sheep in that high land being found unprofitable. This forest ranges in altitude from 500 feet to 2300 feet. There is very little below 500, and its general average altitude may be stated at about 1500 feet. In this forest there are very few signs of previous habitation. The green patches are very few in number and small in size. They consist principally of two small patches or shepherds' crofts. There is probably not more than 30 or 40 acres of what may, by the most liberal interpretation, be called old arable land, in this forest.

The rent of the farm (Coire-na-fearn) was £405, reduced in the last year of its occupation, by 50 per cent. to £202, 10s. (not permanent).

Tongue, Sutherlandshire.

John Box.

The shooting rent cannot be fixed, as it was part of a larger area, with a cumulo rent as a grouse-moor, but it is certain that a better return has been obtained by clearing the ground of sheep.

Upper Mudale (part of Ben Klibreck shootings) lies at the upper end of Strath Mudale, towards the base of Ben Hee. It contains about 7500 acres, and was cleared by the tenant in 1887. This was wether ground and found to be unprofitable. The ground is from 500 to 1500 feet high, the general height being about 1000. There are no sign of previous habitation within its bounds. The old rent of the sheep ground (£150) is paid by the shooting tenant.

Kinloch was cleared in 1890 and comprises the high portions of Melness farm. The stock had to be taken over by the proprietor on the expiry of the late tenant's lease, and at a very high valuation. All the sheep belonging to the high parts of the farm were at once sold off at considerable loss, and the ground afforested. The area is about 30,000 acres, and with the exception of a narrow strip in Strathmore it is all wether ground and very high. Strathmore is below 500 feet, but with that exception the altitude of this forest ranges from 500 feet to 3040 feet (Ben Hope). It will average fully 1800 feet, and except Strathmore it is entirely unfit for habitation. Strathmore contains about 200 acres of old arable land, and there has probably been about a dozen families living there. With the exception of the old shepherd's croft at Mussel and a patch of from 15 to 20 acres at the up end of the Strath, all this green land is regularly subject to flooding and to frost, and quite unfit for cultivation unless the river were embanked, as would appear to have been the case in past times. This land has never been deeply cultivated, the system adopted being that known as 'lazy 'beds.' It is most unquestionably better suited to growing grass than for crops at the present time, and is of the greatest importance to the forest as feeding ground and shelter for the deer in winter. All the deer of the forest practically live there during hard times. Strathmore was included in the boundaries of Lord Reay's old forest.

The whole of the remainder of Kinloch forest does not contain more than 50 acres of old arable land, and that widely separated and in very small patches.

Over all these forests the amount of arable land is so very small, and its proportion towards the enormous areas of comparatively valueless land so infinitesimal, as to preclude the possibility of these lands being profitably occupied by crofters; and if the few green spots were taken for occupation, long narrow strips would have to be effectively fenced at great cost, and the deer forests seriously injured.

The change from sheep farms to deer forests in these instances was necessitated by the inability of farmers to work these high lands profitably and by the difficulty of letting them to other tenants. At present I should say that as many persons, if not more, are employed on these lands as before, and the rents obtained for these forests greatly assist in keeping the rates and taxes from becoming more burdensome than they now are.

Sheep Farms.

The sheep farms (ten) produce an annual gross rent of £4475, and give employment to a considerable number of people, both permanent and casual. The green land on the lower parts of these farms, which after all forms a very small proportion of the whole area, is, I need not point out, of great importance to the farms, which could not be worked without it. This, however, is a matter which I would wish merely to mention here and not to enlarge upon, as it is one of the principal points that will engage the personal attention of the Commissioners at their inspections. I would, however, wish to impress upon them the smallness of the proportion of arable land included within the boundaries of the sheep farms and forests in this district. Statements have been frequently made that would lead to the belief that very large areas of arable land exist on the sheep farms and forests in this part of the estate that are fit subjects for cultivation and occupation. On inquiry and investigation I venture to say that these statements will be disproved. I do not believe that the old arable ground, even on the most liberal interpretation of the definition, will be found to exceed one per cent. of the entire area, and much of that is not suitable for cropping.

As far as can be made out without an actual survey, I would estimate the old arable land on the sheep farms as follows:—

Farm.	Arable. Acres.	Hill. Acres.	Old Ar. Acres.
Achnabourin,	10	5,780	150
Armadale, .	70	29,700	130
Bighouse, .	200	47,300	390
Borgie, . .	70	12,000	40
Clebrig, . .	10	41,200	235
Melness, . .	100	20,000	50
Mudale, . .	—	8,000	80	and 50 ac. lones.
Rhifail, . .	160	30,000	260
Ribigill, . .	175	26,500	200	and 50 „ „
Skelpick, . .	100	11,880	130
Syre, . . .	120	30,300	350
	1,015	262,660	2,015	100 „ „

Of these 2015 acres, a large proportion cannot properly be called arable, and a considerable quantity could not be cropped through flood and frost.

Mudale and Ribigil contain each 50 acres lones. These lones are useless for cultivation or occupation. Most of the arable land on the sheep farms has been made at a very heavy cost during recent years, and its cultivation is maintained at a considerable expense, much more than it would be in the power of crofters to do.

The carrying out of any large scheme of migration on these lands would necessitate a very heavy outlay of capital, which we are led to understand is not possessed by the crofters. Houses would have to be erected, dykes built, land improved, hill fences erected and stocks purchased. A few crofters may have the means required, but such persons cannot be numerous.

Crofters' Rents.

Fair rents were fixed by the Crofters Commissioners in 1891, when they cancelled £447, 15s. 9d. of arrears and ordered £1269, 7s. to be paid. Of this only £1000, 5s. 4d. has yet been received. Since the fixing of fair rents two years' rents have become payable, amounting in all to £4111, 7s. 4d., and of this sum there has only been paid £1626, 18s. 6., leaving a total amount of arrears due of £2753, 10s. 6d. At the present moment there are only 22 tenants out of 751 who are clear, that is, who have paid all the rents due by them up to Whitsunday 1893.

During the twelve months or so previous to the passing of the Crofters Act, the late Duke voluntarily reduced the crofters' rents in many cases, totalling in this district an annual amount of £47, 8s. 10d., and on two occasions he granted abatements; to the extent of 50 per cent. in 1885 and 25 per cent. in 1887.

Enlargement of Holdings.

I do not find that any of the crofters' land has been taken away from them during recent years, but considerable additions have been made to crofters' arable holdings by granting money for such work done by the crofters themselves at a low rate of interest, and in some cases, as Baligill and Strathy, where the work has been done on a larger scale. In these townships land to the extent of 75 acres has been thoroughly made and is now under crop.

In 1885 two of the grazing parks, measuring 35 acres and 19 acres of good arable land, belonging to Tongue Mains farm were let to crofters.

During recent years many additions have from time to time been made to the crofters' grazings. In 1884 an area of 3000 acres of the best hill ground on Armadale farm was added to the crofters' grazings for that district free of charge, and fenced by the Duke at a cost of £1043. In 1887, 350 acres of good hill ground were added to the Naver tenants from Borgie farm and the land fenced by the Duke.

In 1891 these same tenants obtained through the Crofters Commission a further enlargement from Borgie farm, consisting of 150 acres hill, with a large proportion of green ground, and 48 acres of arable land.

In 1891 the West Farr tenants obtained an enlargement from Skelpick farm, consisting of 1568 acres good ground, which contained a considerable proportion of green haughs.

The Skerray tenants got the fertile Island Coomb, 70 acres of the best grass in the district; and the Island Roan tenants got the Rabbit Islands, 138 acres of good green pasture; and at the same time, when the Crofters Commissioner's inquiry was proceding, the remaining portion of the farm of Melness was offered to the crofters of that district; vide Crofters Commission Report, p. 181.

I feel that I need not here enumerate the vast amounts of money expended by recent owners of the Sutherland estate for the benefit and improvement of that property and its people, but it is worthy of consideration that the prospects of everyone on that estate have been more or less improved by that outlay, particularly by the immense sums spent on roads and railways.

As has already been explained by the factor of the Dunrobin district, the Duke of Sutherland is disposed to look favourably on the creation of small farms where suitable holdings can be found, and where they can be made with satisfaction and with prospects of success to those concerned, and provided that the whole farm be utilized, and not only the best of the ground selected.

(Signed) John Box, Factor.

Tongue, October, 1893.

28,866. How many crofters do you say are on the coast line from the Bay of Bighouse to the west side of Loch Eriboll?—The whole number of crofters in the Tongue district is 751: if you wish to exclude Strath Halladale, I think you would arrive at a fair estimate by taking off the 51.

28,867. I do not wish to go outside your management; but from the east boundary of your district to the west boundary along the coast there are 751 crofters?—Yes.

28,868. And how many cottars?—That I cannot tell you. I have heard to-day of 30 at Melness, and 26 in Skerray, and I think that at the Melvich sitting there was some mention made of about 25 at Portskerra; and there would, of course, be others elsewhere.

28,869. From 80 to 100 cottars may we say?—There will be 100 cottars at least.

28,870. That makes a total of 851 families?—I believe there will be fully 100 cottars.

28,871. I am putting the number down as 100 at a rough estimate. The greater number of these are along the coast?—Yes.

28,872. Many of them close to the sea?—Yes.

28,873. I suppose you admit that that district from Bighouse to your west boundary is a congested district?—Parts of it, certainly.

28,874. Which parts do you specify as congested?—Congested is a comparative term, I suppose, is it not?

28,875. Use the word in your own sense. Of course, it is a comparative term; but what points do you say are congested?—I can tell you the points where the houses are closest.

28,876. Where?—At Melvich, Portskerra, Skerray, and Melness: I should think these are the most congested.

Tongue, Sutherlandshire.

John Box.

28,877. And Strathy Point?—At Strathy Point they are not quite so close; not nearly so close as at Melness. The crofts at Strathy Point are certainly very poor, but the houses are not nearly so close as at the other places.

28,878. Any other place?—These are the principal.

28,879. And perhaps you will admit that the other townships, while not so congested as these, are to some extent congested?—If you will tell me exactly what congested means I will be better able to answer you.

28,880. I mean where the crofts are too small to enable the holders to get on even with the aid of outside labour?—The crofts all the way through the estate are much about the same size, with the exception of those in Strath Halladale.

28,881. I will put it in this way. Suppose you had this land along the coast to lay out as crofts now, would you think of making them as small as they are at present on an average?—I should prefer to see them larger.

28,882. And if you had the making of them, the lotting of them, would you lot them in larger areas?—Well, I should prefer to see them larger.

28,883. The cottars again who number 100 are, of course, a considerable burden upon their neighbours, the crofters?—Yes.

28,884. They have no land?—No land: they have been allowed to crowd in at various times.

28,885. They depend entirely for their livelihood upon labour and fishing, and such chances as may occur?—Yes.

28,886. You concede, I have no doubt, that that is a most undesirable state of matters?—Which?

28,887. This congestion and crushing in, this overcrowded state of the people between these two points: you concede I suppose that that is an undesirable state of matters?—Yes, it is undesirable.

28,888. And one that calls for a remedy if a legitimate remedy can be got?—Yes.

28,889. What is your remedy?—I can hardly propose a remedy.

28,890. Or do you say with all your knowledge of the place that there is no remedy?—I should be sorry to say that.

28,891. I should certainly think so. Then, what remedy do you suggest?—The remedy I suppose is, on the face of it,—larger holdings.

28,892. And I daresay you would concede larger holdings in the neighbourhood of these large holdings if they can be got?—If they can be got.

28,893. Now, in view of that, do you adhere to your statement that there is no available land within your district?—Oh, no, my lord, I did not say that.

28,894. Where do you say there is available land?—I don't know where there is available land: I can tell you where there is old arable land and new arable land.

28,895. You have given us a pretty precise account of the old arable land and arable land within your district?—I have endeavoured to do so faithfully. It is only a rough estimate, however.

28,896. I take it as approximately correct, and as intended to be perfectly straight. Is this land, in your opinion (I am not now dealing with the question of injury to the farms), but would the taking up of that land in your judgment operate a considerable and substantial relief to those congested districts?—Apart from the question of sheep farms or deer forests, or other management of the estate, there certainly is some land upon which crofters could be profitably put.

28,897. And the taking of that land would greatly relieve,—I don't say wholly but greatly relieve the state of matters to be found along the north coast within your limits?—Naturally it would if you took any away.

28,898. Could that be done to a considerable extent?—I think that is a question I should rather leave for the Commission to determine.

28,899. But I am asking whether you think from the knowledge you have of the available arable or old arable land, that this relief could be operated to a considerable extent?—I have enumerated the land which I consider old arable land, and which would doubtless make crofts: there is also some proportion of land that was never under cultivation, which might be reclaimed, and put under cultivation now, if it was considered that such could be done profitably.

28,900. Your answer, therefore, is that to the extent that there is such available land as you have indicated, it would to that extent, if so used, relieve the congestion on the north coast?—I think that goes without saying.

28,901. Are you of opinion that no land can be taken from the farms without serious injury to the remainder?—I certainly think that to take any of that land away from the farms or the forests would distinctly deteriorate them as farms and forests.

28,902. I put it to you in this way. Do you think the injury to the farms or forests would outweigh the benefit that would arise from the assignment of the land to the crofters?—Is that quite the question to put to one, sir?

28,903. Well, if you do not wish to answer I will not press it. You said that the Duke of Sutherland was favourable to the creation and formation of small farms?—Yes, I do.

28,904. Do you indicate to us where land is to be got for that purpose?—At present all the land in this district is under lease.

28,905. Then you say there is no such land at present?—Not available in the immediate present.

28,906. But suppose land to become available?—If land became available, and it could be demonstrated that a certain farm could be taken by crofters, and could be cultivated by them, and so tenanted by them as to be to their benefit, there is no doubt, I should think, that the Duke would be quite willing.

28,907. To consider a proposition of that kind favourably?—A practical proposition.

28,908. Even although the return to the Duke were somewhat less than the return he gets from the farmer?—I believe I may safely say that if the return to the Duke were only somewhat less, he would not allow that consideration to stand in the way. I do not suppose, however, that he could be expected to give it all away.

28,909. No, no, I am not suggesting that. Now, which of the farms within your management is in your opinion most favourable for that purpose, supposing it fell out of lease?—I can only answer that by telling you those farms that have the most old arable land, and I have enumerated them already.

28,910. You referred to the crofters' arrears of rent? Do a considerable portion of the present arrears come to be due in consequence of the position of matters after the late Duke's death?—Yes, a considerable portion was due before he died.

28,911. And you think the present arrears are in some degree due to the circumstances which have arisen in connection with the estate?—Yes, probably to a certain extent that may be so, because owing to legal difficulties we got no instructions to collect the rents at the proper time last year. But I have held rent collections since, after giving official notice, and the people have had the opportunity of paying their arrears had they felt inclined to do so.

28,912. The last year's rents have not been collected?—I have held the audit, but the rents have not been paid.

28,913. That state of matters being due, I think you say, to some extent to the circumstances which have arisen in regard to the estate?—The putting off of the collection was due to that.

28,914. Now, is there any holding along the north coast, between the east boundary of your district and the west boundary, which you could describe as a self-sustaining holding?—There is no gradation of holdings here at all; there is nothing between the large and the small,—the very large and the very small.

28,915. And are there very small holdings, holdings of a kind which, to enable the crofters to live, require the aid of outside labour?—Yes.

28,916. Are there such holdings?—Most of them require the aid of outside labour.

28,917. Can you mention any one that does not?—I think you have seen the holdings in Strath Halladale?

28,918. Yes.—I should certainly say that the holdings in Strath Halladale do not, as a rule, require outside labour; except it is in the case of several sons in one croft. No family can expect to live on a holding of £6 or so of rent, and keep seven or eight of a family.

28,919. You think the holdings there may be self-sustaining, but you do not mention any others?—They would be self-sustaining I should think to any ordinary family.

28,920. But except these, are there any others?—We have no others as good as Strath Halladale, with one or two exceptions hardly worth enumerating.

28,921. I may take it then that there are no self-sustaining holdings along this north coast, except the Strath Halladale holdings?—There are some fairly good holdings,—I cannot tell whether they are self-sustaining or not.

28,922. Are the majority of them such as would require the aid of outside labour?—Yes.

28,923. The man must be partly a crofter and partly a fisherman or a labourer?—Yes.

28,924. Is that a state of matters that meets with your approval?—I have already said that I should like to see the holdings larger.

28,925. Would you like to see as a matter of good for the estate and for the individuals themselves, a grade of holdings between the large farmer and the crofter, of the kind I have been describing as a self-sustaining holding?—Yes. It would not be so easily done here, however, as on the east coast, where there is a large amount of arable land; because where we have 10 or 20 or 100 acres of arable land we have 10,000 to 40,000 of hill ground, a large proportion of which is of little value.

28,926. But you think, assuming always that the land could be got, that it would be for the good of the estate to have a grade of farmer or holder between the very large farmer and the labouring crofter?—I think it would be beneficial all round that it should be so. I don't know that it would be particularly for the good of the estate if you mean by that the economical good.

28,927. It would be beneficial all round,—I am quite willing to take it in your own words. At present all the tenant holders of land are either very large holders or very small holders, with a few exceptions?—Yes.

28,928. There is no middle class?—No, there is not. We might enumerate a dozen, or a score or so, who have comfortable holdings.

28,929. But that is a small number out of so many hundreds?—I am speaking now of the proportion.

28,930. How do the rents of the crofters in the part of the estate under your management compare with the rents of the farmers?—Do you mean the rents fixed by the Crofters Commission?

28,931. Yes, the present rents, the fixed rents we should call them?—I can hardly answer that question, because it is impossible to make a comparison. The proportion of arable land to hill ground will not agree in any shape in the two cases.

28,932. Is there more arable in proportion to the hill ground in the case of the crofter than in the case of the larger tenant?—Yes, a great deal more.

28,933. Have you endeavoured to make any comparison?—No, I have not.

28,934. Has there been in recent years a very considerable reduction in the rents of the large farmers?—Yes.

28,935. And the reduction in the rents of the crofters recently has been due to the operation of the Crofters Commission?—Yes, except in the case of the temporary abatements. In this connection it might be well to remember that at a certain period the sheep farm rents reached a very high rate.

28,936. And they are now at a very low rate?—They are now at a lower rate.

28,937. Are they down 50 per cent.?—Yes, about that.

28,938. More than that?—Well, perhaps on the whole not quite so much; you may say they are down 40 per cent. over all roughly speaking.

28,939. May we take that as the average reduction in farmers' rents in recent years?—I do not speak from the book, but I think that is about the figure. In some cases it may be more, and in others perhaps a little less.

28,940. You heard evidence given with regard to an application from cottars for land and an alleged reply by the secretary of the Duke advising them to apply to the Crofters Commission; had you any personal knowledge of that?—I have a recollection that an application was made by the cottars of Melness,—one or two applications, but I have no recollection of the terms in which the reply was sent.

28,941. It is not said to have been a letter from you?—No.

28,942. But from the secretary of the Duke, Mr Wright, I suppose?—Yes.

28,943. You did not know of the writing of such a letter?—I am not prepared to say that at all; I really do not recollect the occurrence sufficiently. If I had had notice of this matter I could have looked up my correspondence and seen what I did know of it.

28,944. Of course, you are aware that the Crofters Commission had no power to enlarge the holdings of cottars?—Oh, yes, I know that. I should like to say that I am not aware that that was the wording of the letter referred to, and I am not prepared to admit it.

28,945. I do not ask you to do so, because we have not got the letter before us, your own recollection does not help you in the matter?—No, it does not.

28,946. Mr Sutherland.—Your statement as a whole does not, I think, call for much questioning, but I should like to ask you in reference to one or two particular points. There was some question of an historical character which I wished to ask, but it has escaped my memory; perhaps I may recollect it later. You said that when the people were settled at one place on the coast their rents were nominal for some time?—Yes.

28,947. That is when they were first settled there?—At the time the estate was taken over from Lord Reay.

28,948. But these changes that you have referred to were carried out on the Reay estate before the Earls of Sutherland acquired it?—Yes.

28,949. With the single exception, I think you said, of Strathnaver?—Yes.

28,950. Then, you stated with regard to Strathmore, I think, that it was inhabited by only a dozen families?—Yes.

28,951. Did you not hear more than a dozen families enumerated very circumstantially here to-day?—I really did not altogether follow all that was said.

28,952. It was a little more than a dozen?—You may make it 15 if you like. The best way would be to look at the place; I have no means of telling you; I have no rental to go by. This is the impression I have got from looking at the place, and it was also the impression of those who know Strathmore better than I do. From a dozen to fifteen is the most I have been able to gather, and most of them say about a dozen.

28,953. But you see no reason to throw doubt generally upon the statement that was made there?—I can criticise it when I read it; I could only hear the witness very imperfectly.

28,954. I gathered that there were a little more than a dozen?—You may get a lot of names together, but they might be simply individual names.

28,955. I don't suppose the discrepancy is very great?—I think not.

28,956. Then you made remarks with reference to the deer forest; and you stated that you had not many deer forests; as a matter of fact, you have not?—No.

28,957. But they are on the increase, are they not, since you came here?—Yes, I have given the dates.

Tongue, Sutherlandshire.

John Box.

28,958. Yes, you have. As to the method in which they were cleared, you said that the tenant in one case cleared the land of sheep and made it into a deer forest?—Yes.

28,959. Did that remark apply to the other two cases as well?—It applies to the ones in which I have stated so.

28,960. What are they?—I think I have stated that at Coire-na-fearna the tenant himself removed the sheep; and at the upper end of Mudale the tenant himself removed them; but, in the case of Kinloch, the Duke sold them by public sale immediately after the ground was cleared. He had to take over the whole of the late tenant's stock, and all the eild sheep at the upper end were instantly sent off and sold.

28,961. What I wanted to ask was the operation by which the tenant can change the land let under lease from a sheep farm into a deer forest?—By mutual arrangement with the proprietor.

28,962. Of course, there is no use of asking you,—you are quite familiar with leases; are not the purposes to which the land is to be devoted very stringently specified in the lease?—Oh, yes, but it is quite possible for the proprietor and the tenant to come to terms even although the lease may not have run its natural course.

28,963. But changing them during the currency of the lease from one purpose to another,—is that part of the bargain?—Not at all: the sheep farmer simply retired from those areas.

28,964. I must have misunderstood you. Is it the sheep grazing tenant who changed the land into a deer forest?—No, he simply got permission to give up his ground, or that portion of his ground which he found unprofitable under sheep.

28,965. Then another man came in and took over the sheep stock?—No, the tenant himself did what he chose with the sheep stock,—sold it as he chose, and left the ground clear.

28,966. That is not the usual case?—It is the case with those places.

28,967. Then, the bargain that he had with the proprietor in the commencement must have been different?—Oh, no. It is quite simple. Take the case of Upper Mudale, Mr Sellar, the sheep farmer, said "I want to get rid of the wedder ground as it does not pay me." We came into correspondence and conversation with the shooting tenant, and I said to Mr Sellar "Very well if you wish to clear that ground you must take your sheep and do what you please with them; the Duke won't take your stock off that ground; do what you like with them; clear them off that ground and your lease for that ground ceases." That was done, and the ground was let as a deer forest.

28,968. Is it not the usual arrangement that the proprietor agrees to take over the stock at a valuation?—But the proprietor here agreed to break the lease before its natural termination.

28,969. The usual conditions were departed from?—Yes.

28,970. Outside your management, is that becoming common, that way of making an arrangement?—I don't know that it is.

28,971. We have met one or two cases of it. You may be able to correct me, but I always understood that on the Sutherland estate, at any rate, it was a condition of the taking of a grazing farm that at the termination of the lease the proprietor would take over the stock at a valuation?—That is so; but when the tenant comes forward and says "I wish to break my lease so far as a portion of the ground goes as I find it unprofitable," then we may say "Very well, but you must take your stock with you; we don't want it, and if you choose to leave on these terms you may; but you must dispose of your stock." [The Chairman.—The tenant is anxious to get quit of his lease?—Of that portion of his ground.]

28,972. Is it not the fact that every tenant who leaves is anxious to get rid of his lease, otherwise it is primâ facie an argument that he would like to continue?—Do they not like to continue sometimes?

28,973. I take it that they would be allowed to continue if they were satisfactory tenants?—But when they don't want to keep that bit of ground what objection is there to the Duke making an arrangement with them to relieve them of it?

28,974. I only wish for information.—Upon what?

28,975. The distinction in this case between leaving the stock on the hands of the landlord, and in the other case the tenant himself getting rid of the stock?—When the lease comes to its natural expiry the landlord or the incoming tenant is bound to take over the stock. But if you come before your lease expires and wish to get rid of some particular land, if you come to the Duke and say, This wedder ground is not paying me now, and I will be very glad to get clear of it, and you can get a shooting tenant, the proprietor may very well allow you to go.

28,976. Then, I understand these changes took place during the legal currency of a lease?—Certainly.

28,977. That saves the landlord from the responsibility of a valuation?—It does so.

28,978. In that operation in the case of large farmers, did the landlord suffer considerable loss sometimes in the transfer of stock?—He did in the case of Kinloch when that was cleared.

28,979. But was the valuation there higher than the market price?—I am unable to say that; it was much higher than the price we got for them.

28,980. That is the market price, I presume,—what you were able to get for them. How did that come about, do you know?—I don't know.

28,981. You said that Strathmore was within the boundary of Lord Reay's forest. Of course, you don't mean by that that it was a forest in the sense of a deer forest now-a-days where no man is allowed to live?—I don't know what is actually meant.

28,982. I have no doubt you are aware that the appellation of 'forest' in the old time was very different from what it is now?—Yes.

28,983. So it might have been just a territorial name in that case?—It might have been, but one would hardly understand it as such.

28,984. These people we have heard of, and were all living in it?—The whole estate might be called a forest if it was only a territorial name.

28,985. Do you know anything of it as regards the usage of the word?—No.

28,986. But here you admit that there were a dozen families living within a forest; that state of matters would not be applicable in the case of a forest now-a-days?—No.

28,987. So you don't mean that Lord Reay's forest was a deer forest in the same sense as Mudale now is?—No, I don't think so; certainly not in the same sense as when applied to ground that has been cleared.

28,988. In reference to your statement as to what the Duke of Sutherland was willing to do, you had how many limitations, do you remember,—three or four?—You had better perhaps refer to the statement itself.

28,989. You say, 'Where suitable holdings can be 'found and where they can be made with satisfaction 'and with prospects of success to those concerned, and 'provided that the whole farm be utilised and not only 'the best of the ground selected.' Now, it would depend, you will observe, very much on where suitable holdings can be found; we would have, you see, to get holdings that in the estimation of the proprietor would be suitable?—Yes, but that does not in any way influence the action of the Royal Commission: this offer is purely voluntary.

28,990. I understand that; but as I understand the whole gist of your statement is a defence of the present system, more or less?—My statement does not profess to be a defence.

28,991. But you have stated certain facts and admitted others,—very candidly I must admit,—but upon the whole I may take it that you are naturally interested in defending the management as it is at present carried out? I don't think that is a false position to put you in?—I don't think it is, but I did not understand that there was any necessity for defence.

28,992. But you very naturally defended the present arrangements; that is the position you take up, and you modify that by saying that the proprietor will consider a certain course in certain circumstances. But, as you say, that is not meant to influence us in any way?—Oh, no.

28,993. Then, you said in answer to a question by his lordship in references to this very paragraph that where it can be demonstrated that new holdings if made would be successful, &c. How can it be demonstrated before hand that they could be successful?—I said where it could be demonstrated that there would be a reasonable prospect of success.

28,994. You know there is no demonstration except actually trying it?—I only stipulate for a reasonable prospect of success. You would not wish to break up a sheep farm if it could be seen in a few years that the thing would come to grief or would not succeed. What we require is that there should be some real prospects of success before it should be done.

28,995. You have been in Sutherland for a great number of years?—Yes.

28,996. Have you never heard any statements like this twenty years ago?—Like that? No, I don't think so.

28,997. On no occasion?—No, I have no personal recollection of such.

28,998. Of any promise like this being made by the proprietor in Sutherland?—No, I think not.

28,999. Well, I am glad to know that your experience is different from mine.—If you will ask me about any individual case I will be glad to answer.

29,000. I could mention one or two cases within my own recollection.—I can only say that so far as I can speak from my connection with the estate I don't know of any.

29,001. I think you made some modification or rather explanation of your statement in regard to the arrears in answer to the Chairman. Is there not, as a matter of fact, with regard to the current rents of the crofters, a good deal of uncertainty in their minds naturally arising from the delays that have taken place owing to the complications that have been referred to?—It is very likely they may take some such view; but at the same time the estate has made an application to them for the rents, and I have tried to collect the rents.

29,002. I don't know if it is the case here, but in other parts of Sutherlandshire notices have been posted up announcing rent collections, and these have afterwards been postponed, thus giving rise to some doubt; that also might have been an element in the case?—Yes.

29,003. The Chairman.—Perhaps I may be allowed to interpose a question here. Since the rents were fixed by the Crofters Commission, until the Duke's death, have you any reason to suppose that there was any deliberate withholding of rents?—From the fact that only 22 tenants out of 751 are at the present moment clear of arrears, it looks distinctly as if that were so; but I cannot say what was in the people's minds.

29,004. Do you mean clear up to date?—Clear of the rents due up to November of last year.

29,005. Mr Gordon.—Take it to Whitsunday was a year; how did matters stand then?—I cannot say offhand, but I could find out.

29,006. At the rent collection immediately previous to the Duke's death how did the matter stand?—It was a very poor collection indeed. I have been told once or twice, officially indeed, by some of the crofters who received extensions of holdings from the Commission, of which you, my lord, were president, that they are not to pay. That is a deliberate withholding, I suppose. I understand they have some grievances as to pasture.

29,007. Mr Sutherland.—You refer, I have no doubt, to the Bettyhill crofters?—I do.

29,008. And they state that they are paying 1s. 1½d. per acre for the same measurement, for which farmers pay much less?—They make their measurements very much as the other measurements were made here to-day,—without taking into account the due proportion of the arable land to pasture. In that extension made by the Crofters Commission there is a very large area of green ground.

29,009. More than in the farm of Skelpick?—A great deal more.

29,010. Perhaps that may account for the fact you stated, that there was only one per cent. of old arable land in the whole area of the district?—Yes.

29,011. We have seen it and are able to judge for ourselves if your percentage is correct.—I do not say that it is the same all over.

29,012. I am referring to a part which we have deliberately and carefully looked over. We cannot walk over the whole of the ground in your management with the same deliberation and care, but we are able to judge of the one from the other?—Well, you can see so much from the road.

29,013. Is there more than one per cent. of old arable in the extension given to the Bettyhill crofters?—Yes.

29,014. It is the exception then to the general rule—In all cases where you take the low land off a farm you naturally have more green ground than where you take the upper end.

29,015. Do you mean to tell me that there is more green land down at the low end of the river Naver in proportion than in the farm of Skelpick?—Yes, there is hardly any green land in the upper part of Skelpick.

29,016. You stated that altogether there was something over 2000 acres of this green land?—Yes.

29,017. Now, we had it from a statement that was referred to that in former times the land in cultivation in Strathnaver alone was 1606 Scots acres?—Yes.

29,018. That would bring it up to your number in Strathnaver alone?—Yes, but will you kindly allow me to see that list? [Captain Henderson's report handed to witness]. Part of the lands which I see mentioned here are in the crofters' own hands; so that must be taken off.

29,019. Which?—Clerkhill and Swordley, Kirtomy, Farr, Newland, Dalcharn, and Achina.

29,020. How much is there?—I cannot say, but there are at least 80 acres.

29,021. Well, take off the 80 acres; that leaves 1526 acres in Strathnaver alone?—Yes.

29,022. Now, don't you think the balance is too small for the rest?—No, I do not think so. However, I have only given an estimate, though I have done it as fairly as I could; and I have put down the old arable on Syre farm at 350 acres; Rhifail, 260 acres; Clibrick, 235 acres; Achnaburin, 150 acres; and Skelpick, 130 acres. I am not far short there, I think, of what you have.

29,023. No, but you have Armadale and all the other places included besides?—Yes, they are not Strathnaver.

29,024. No doubt the difference may be due to what a man considers old arable. You allow as a natural thing that a great deal of the land that was old arable may now be unrecognisable?—It would want a careful survey to come to any accurate result.

29,025. Then, with regard to the comparative rentals of small holdings and large holdings, which is a material element in our inquiry, you are inclined to think that small holders do not pay as much as large holders; but I don't suppose you lay much stress on that argument?—No, either on one side or the other.

29,026. Will you be inclined to think that the balance is in favour of the small holder, taking all the circumstances into account?—It depends very much on the quantity of arable land; when there is a much larger proportion of arable land in the one case than in the other you cannot make a fair comparison.

29,027. Do not the small holders make a much larger proportion of arable land than the large holders?—Quite so, but I am not going now into the question of who made the land arable.

29,028. It is very important in our inquiry to know whether the arable land capable of wintering stock will be likely to increase instead of decrease, and I have no doubt you will admit its importance from your point of view?—Oh, it will increase, no doubt, slightly.

Tongue, Sutherlandshire.

John Box.

29,029. I have already quoted from Mr Barclay whom I have no doubt you will admit to have been an authority?—Mr Barclay was purely theoretical in his views.

29,030. A gentleman who had thirty years' experience in a factor's office,—you do not call that a theoretical man?—He was intensely theoretical. I believe he made a sort of calendar that would tell you the day of the week and the day of the month for the next five hundred years.

29,031. That is a high testimony to his ability as a calculator?—Yes.

29,032. Would you be inclined to agree with him in regard to small holders in this neighbourhood? He said:—'This result,' referring to the improvements in the immediate neighbourhood of Tongue, 'taking every 'circumstance into account, exhibits an effort by a 'people that I humbly believe has no parallel in the 'agricultural annals of Scotland.' Would you be inclined to agree with that?—I am not in a position to agree with Mr Barclay's statement, which must have been made a very long time ago when the work was going on.

29,033. Perhaps, in my desire to save you trouble, I did not make the matter clear enough: but he is commenting upon a statement made by Mr Macdonald who read a paper upon the agriculture of Sutherland. Mr Barclay agrees with him to a certain extent, but he contrasts the use to which the land is put as sheep grazing, with the manner in which it could be used to the advantage of the proprietor as smaller holdings where the people could reclaim it. He has stated a most remarkable result, and that is the general remark he makes upon it. You, I suppose, would be quite prepared to admit that the industry exhibited by the people in improving land in this quarter has been very great?—In past years it must have been so.

29,034. I suppose, you will admit too that there is a very great discrepancy between the 1¼d. per acre at which the farm of Melness is held, and the 8d. and 9d. and 10½d. that the crofters pay?—I think you will admit that there is a very large area of land on Melness farm which the crofters would not take at 1¼d. the acre.

29,035. That may be so, but then compare it with the land they have themselves, is it not just as good?—No.

29,036. Did they not get a general slice of the same sort of land to begin with?—Oh, yes, but they don't go in for the enormous amount of floe ground that is on Melness farm.

29,037. Well, they have applied for it, and have not got it; that showed their desire to have it?—You will find that it was offered in more ways than one. The whole farm was offered.

29,038. That is not my remembrance.—No, but it may be the Chairman's.

29,039. You will admit, taking the figures that we have got and the rentals divided by the acreages as I have them before me, the discrepancy is so great that surely you think encouragement ought to be given to these people to improve the land?—I have not the slightest objection to encouragement being given.

29,040. But, as a matter of fact, with these huge holdings on the one side and these restricted holdings on the other, where is the encouragement?—The encouragement is in the appointment of the Royal Commission.

29,041. Where?—To meet the case.

29,042. But it is at present in the hands of people who have full control over the land to deal with it: that is the point. Do you not think that we are justified in asking questions at least with regard to the discrepancies that exists?—Oh, certainly, any questions you may like to ask.

29,043. Well, I would not like to end the examination with any impression that I have been asking improper questions; but I wish to say with regard to these people at South Halladale that you state there is a tendency on their part to squat about their homes?—Did I say so?

Tongue, Sutherlandshire.

John Box.

29,044. I took a note to that effect. Did you not say that the holdings are insufficient when the sons all stay about the holdings?—Not at all. The question was asked of me whether these holdings were self-supporting, and I said I believe that with an ordinary family they were, but if there was a large family they could not be self-supporting.

29,045. Where was the necessity to make that statement in explanation?—Because I was answering a question that the Chairman asked me.

29,046. But did you imply in any way that there was a tendency so to do?—Not at all: I simply implied that if a crofter were to keep his family, say several grown-up sons at home, there would not be enough to keep them all at work.

29,047. Then you heard what was said as to the prosecution of the fishing?—Yes.

29,048. Have you any opinion with regard to the advisability of having a fisherman and a cultivator of the land combined?—My opinion on that point is very much the same as Mr James Morrison's,—that there should be accommodation for the fishermen near the places where harbours are to be constructed.

29,049. Then, it would be a good thing perhaps, would it not, for fishermen to have small holdings as well?—If they had enough to grow a little potatoes that is all they would care to have.

29,050. You know the holdings about Golspie?—Yes.

29,051. How do they do there?—They have their houses on lease there; they have built houses and have a small piece of ground behind, some of them, others have none. At Embo it is the same; very small patches.

29,052. But are the people engaged in the fishing industry here not much more comfortable upon the whole than the Golspie fishermen even with all their advantages?—The Golspie fishermen should be pretty well off, but they have not nearly so good a fishing ground.

29,053. It is a better coast?—The coast is not so rough.

29,054. Could you then, Mr Box, assist us in any way in showing us such land as we are trying to discover?—I am afraid I cannot show you any more land than you have seen yourselves.

29,055. Mr Gordon.—I want to know about these Strath Halladale crofters. Can you tell me without much trouble what rent the 51 crofters in Strath Halladale pay?—I don't know, but I could tell you in five minutes.

29,056. Do you happen to know what is the present rent of Bighouse?—£700 I think.

29,057. Does that include the shooting rent?—Oh, no.

29,058. How would the area under crofters there and the area of Bighouse compare?—There is the same difficulty in comparing the two.

29,059. Take it as it stands arable and pasture land together, would the crofters occupy more than four-elevenths of the whole Strath?—No, I don't think they would; I don't think they occupy so much as that.

29,060. Assume that the farm of Bighouse could be occupied by a set of crofters as successful and well doing as are at present in Strath Halladale. Would you admit that it could be so occupied without loss to the proprietor?—Yes, I would like to see it.

29,061. That is a very strong position for you to admit?—I would be very willing to see more crofters in the same position as those in Strath Halladale are now.

29,062. The occupation of these Strath Halladale crofters meets the difficulty to which you made pointed reference that if they took the low ground they would have to take also the high?—Yes.

29,063. In each case they would go to the backbone or the watershed?—Yes, on both sides.

29,064. And consequently if it was possible to plant crofters on each side of Melness farm, that is along the Kyle of Tongue on the one side and Loch Hope on the other side,—if they came to the centre of ground then your difficulty as to the bad ground being left would be removed?—Yes.

29,065–66. Now, I was going to ask you a few questions about Melness, but you can answer the questions or not as you please. Can you tell me first what was the former rent of the farm?—How far back do you want to go?

29,067. Five years, or last year, or two years ago?—It was £600 I think.

29,068. That makes £1200. The new rent of the farm is, you say, £280, and the shooting rent is?—£1000.

29,069. Making together £1280, so that you have improved your position to the extent of £80?—More than that, because the shooting tenant pays both keepers' wages and his own taxes, which we had to pay before.

29,070. Then, you have made a distinct profit by the arrangement?—Yes.

29,071. Do you happen to remember how many sheep you took over from Mr Mackay?—No, I don't.

29,072. Would I be right in saying it was about 7000?—Yes.

29,073. And you sold a number of the sheep at Lairg?—Yes.

29,074. Do you happen to recollect what the loss was per head upon the sheep?—No, I don't.

29,075. Possibly, it is not a question that you wish to go into?—I don't recollect.

29,076. Do you see that in such large farms as Melness and others in this country, where a tenant says at the end of his lease 'I don't wish to continue 'the farm,' the proprietor is subjected to the risk of very serious loss?—The proprietor has to take over the sheep stock at valuation.

29,077. And in this case that was done at a very serious loss to the proprietor?—By the valuation prices being extremely high.

29,078. They were considerably over the market prices. If my information is correct, the interest at 5 per cent. on the loss the late Duke sustained by the realisation of the sheep stock would amount to a sum equal to the rent now paid for the remainder of the lease?—No; nothing like it.

29,079. Well, I do not wish you to answer the questions unless you choose, but that was the information I received. The loss does not then amount to as much as that?—Oh, no, I hope not.

29,080. It would be a very serious thing if it were. But in the event of these bigger farms being broken up and smaller holdings substituted, there would be less risk of many of these farms being left in the proprietor's hands?—Yes.

29,081. And for that reason, and that reason alone, it would be an improvement in the position of the estate if the farms were made of a more lettable size?—Yes.

29,082. The Chairman.—Was the land given in enlargement of crofters' holdings from Skelpick in the main green ground?—No, there were both kinds.

29,083. Was there a considerable proportion of it green ground?—Yes, there was.

29,084. Was it one of the best parts of the farm?—So the farmers maintain.

29,085. Is the land left on Skelpick to a considerable extent rough ground of less value per acre?—There is some green ground left on Skelpick; they have still got the upper part towards Rhifail.

29,086. What character has the land there?—I cannot speak of it personally as I do not know it; I have never been quite up to the top there.

29,087. But is there a larger proportion of rough ground to green ground left on Skelpick than of rough ground to green ground in the enlargement?—If a larger proportion of green ground has been taken away by the enlargement it naturally follows that a smaller proportion of green ground is left to the farmers. I cannot go into the details offhand.

29,088. In comparing the rent per acre of the Skelpick enlargement with the rate per acre of the Skelpick farm, is it necessary to keep in view that in what is left of Skelpick farm there is a very considerable proportion of rough ground?—I think so.

29,089. It would necessarily be at lower rate per acre if valued by itself than the green ground taken from the enlargement?—I suppose so; I suppose that would be in the minds of the Commissioners when they valued it.

29,090. Is it correct to say that the tenant of Skelpick has got a very considerable reduction of rent since the enlargement was granted?—Yes.

29,091. Very material?—Very material.

29,092. Hingeing mainly upon the loss of ground from the enlargement?—Yes.

29,093. Mr Gordon.—Is the reduction greater than the amount payable for the enlargement?—Oh, yes, very much.

29,094. What is the difference?—£350 – £85 = £265; £265 – £170 = £95.

29,095. Mr Sutherland.—Was it a section of the farm of Skelpick from the watershed down to the river that the crofters got?—It was a section of the farm from the loch down to the river.

29,096. It would naturally from the configuration of the country be a representive portion of the whole?—Oh, yes, a portion of it would. (Explains on map). I am not in a position to make an exact statement as to the area in either case.

29,096*a*. Is there anything to justify the discrepancy between 1s. 1½d. and 4½d.?—No, I don't think there is, except that we may have let the farm too cheap; we may have been too liberal to the farming tenant.

29,097. Or the Crofters Commission may have fixed the rent too high?—The one or the other.

29,098. Mr Macaulay, Solicitor, Golspie.—In using the word 'congested' with reference to the north coast here, I presume you do not hold that this district is more congested than crofter districts ordinarily?—I suppose it is well known that there is nothing in Sutherland so bad as in some other places. I said already that the word 'congestion' must be looked upon as a comparative term.

29,099. In your opinion, is there such a quantity of this available arable land and otherwise in this district as would appreciably relieve what has been termed the congestion in the north?—It depends upon what is looked upon as available land. The arable land that we know of will not do it, so far as we know it, unless, indeed, the whole of it was taken away, and the sheep farms left without any.

29,100. Then, with regard to the middleclass holdings to which reference has been made, in your opinion, would the crofters here be likely to be able to take these places and stock them without assistance?—Not if two-thirds of the present crofters are to be planted there at once, they certainly could not do it. Two-thirds of the crofters in this district would not be in a position to undertake that at once.

29,101. But would two-thirds of the crofters, if removed, not more than exhaust any amount of available land you possibly could have in this district?—I have already stated that they would exhaust much more than all the arable land I know of.

29,102. The whole of the crofters' rents in this district were fixed by the Crofters Commission, were they not?—Yes.

29,103. And I think you told us in your statement that there has been a very small increase in crofters' rents during the last forty or fifty years?—During the last twenty years at any rate.

29,104. Is it not the fact that the rents of sheep farmers went considerably up about fifteen years ago?—Yes, very considerably; they reached a very high figure.

29,105. And it is also the fact that they have come down relatively more than the crofters' rents?—Yes.

29,106. But to compare the decrease during the last ten years, say, with the decrease that the Crofters Commission gave, is not a fair comparison?—I think not, because farm rents went down from a position that crofters' rents never reached.

Tongue, Sutherlandshire.

John Box.

29,107. The crofters' rents practically never went up?—No, they never went up much.

29,108. So they had not to come down?—No.

29,109. Now, with regard to this piece of forest that was cleared by Mr Sellar I think it was. Is it not the fact that this ground was cleared practically because it could not be made to pay for purposes of sheep?—That is the reason why he did it.

29,110. And the tenant by selling his sheep must have sacrificed some money as compared with the valuation prices?—I don't know anything at all about that. I don't know what he got for his sheep when he sold them.

29,111. Is it not usual that the valuation prices are higher than the market prices?—There were no valuation prices in that case, they were his own sheep.

29,112. But is it not ordinarily the case that the sum paid to an outgoing tenant for his sheep is higher than would be got for them in the open market?—Yes.

29,113. So that Mr Sellar must have dropped a good deal of money by putting his sheep into the open market rather than by getting them taken over by the landlord?—There was not a large number of sheep.

29,114. Then, with regard to the percentage of arable land that you named, in speaking of that you took in the whole of your district, including mountains and everything, in fixing the arable rate at the percentage you did?—Yes.

[ADJOURNED.]

TWENTY-NINTH SITTING.

Durness, Sutherlandshire.

DURNESS, SUTHERLANDSHIRE,

October 16, 1893.

Present:—

DAVID BRAND, Esq., Advocate, Sheriff of Ayr, and Chairman of the Crofters Commission, Chairman.
ANGUS SUTHERLAND, Esq., M.P.
JAMES NOEL MULLER FORSYTH, Esq.
GEORGE GORDON, Esq.
WILLIAM MACKENZIE, Esq., Secretary.

Donald Whyte.

DONALD WHYTE, Crofter, Durine (52)—examined.

29,115. The Chairman.—Are you the tenant of 31 Durine?—Yes.

29,116. I see your area is 4 acres 1 rood 38 poles arable, 1 acre 2 roods 1 pole outrun, and a share of 3200 acres. Old rent, £1, 8s.; fixed rent, £1, 15s. Are you to give your evidence orally, or have you a written statement?—I have a written statement.

29,117. Read it, if you please.—As one of the delegates appointed to appear before your Royal Commission, I have to represent that the general complaint in Durness is that the holdings are too small. For this reason the land cannot be properly cultivated in shifts, but is ploughed yearly, and in process of time has become so weak as to yield nothing but the poorest of crops. To remedy this there is abundance of land on the two neighbouring sheep farms, which, added to the present crofts, would enable the crofters to obtain better returns with less labour than at present: so what is really required is the gradual extension of the present holdings by adding to them the neighbouring arable and pastoral land from Far-out Head to the Big Bridge. The crofters might not be able to stock all this at once, but it may be mentioned that Rispond Farm, acquired only three years ago, is already fully stocked, if not overstocked. The improving of houses, fencing, and general improvements in the circumstances of the people, are sufficient evidence of what may be accomplished by the inherent energy of the people, when they are encouraged by the laws of the country. We would not recommend additional holdings to be formed in this district, because the district between Far-out Head and the Big Bridge was formerly occupied by crofters. New holdings could be formed on the east side of Loch Eriboll, all along both sides of Loch Hope and Strathmore, and in several townships on the Eriboll sheep farm from which crofters were removed to make room for sheep.

Durness, Sutherlandshire. Donald Whyte.

29,118. Is that the whole of it?—That is the whole.

29,119. Were you appointed at a public meeting?—Yes.

29,120. As a delegate to represent the crofters of this district?—Yes.

29,121. And were David Mackenzie and George Campbell appointed along with you?—No, not at the same meeting.

29,122. But were they appointed at other meetings?—I was not present at the meeting.

29,123. I think you have represented in your statement that the holdings of the crofters whom you represent are too small?—Yes.

29,124. You mean by that, that it is impossible for the occupant of a holding to earn his living by his croft?—That is it.

29,125. Then, is it the fact that no crofter here of those whom you represent earns his living by the croft?—It is a fact that they do not.

29,126. How do they earn their living?—Some go to the fishing, and others have friends in the south, and some have children in the south.

29,127. They get assistance in that way?—Yes, and a few get employment.

29,128. Do a few get employment in the locality?—And some are roadmen; very few get employment on the farms.

29,129. But do the whole of them have to eke out their living by wages obtained from labour outside the holding?—Yes, that is so.

29,130. Or by fishing?—Or by fishing; there is not a crofter in Durness that can live on his croft.

29,131. Then you say in your statement there is abundance of land which might be made available, and you refer specially to two farms?—Yes.

29,132. What are the names of these farms?—Keoldale and Balnakill.

29,133. Do these farms march with crofters' lands?—Yes, both of them.

29,134. Now when you say there is land available, to what kind of land do you particularly refer?—Pastoral land, and arable as well.

29,135. Land that has been for a length of time under sheep?—Yes.

29,136. When you say 'arable,' do you mean old arable or land under rotation?—Old arable I mean.

29,137. You don't include in your statement land under rotation?—No.

29,138. And when you distinguish between old arable and land under sheep, do you mean by land under sheep, ground which could easily be tilled?—Yes, I mean by that, land that was formerly in the occupation of crofters.

29,139. And is it land which, in your opinion, could again be profitably occupied by crofters?—I think so.

29,140. Either for grazing purposes, or for cultivation?—Both.

29,141. Then, do the crofters whom you represent mainly desire an extension of holdings?—Yes.

29,142. That is their main object?—Yes, they have lodged applications to the Crofters Commission.

29,143. Which have not been dealt with, I suppose?—No.

29,144. How many applications?—There are three applications from the parish.

29,145. And are all these applications directed to lands belonging to these two farms?—Two of them.

29,146. To what farm?—To Keoldale and Balnakill, and one to Eriboll farm.

29,147. You mentioned Rispond; Rispond was formerly a farm in the hands of a lessee, I suppose, but is now in possession of the crofters?—Yes.

29,148. It was granted by the proprietor as an extension of grazing some years ago?—Yes.

29,149. And is the whole of the farm in the occupation of crofters, or only a part of it?—The whole of it, with the exception of a small bit down at Rispond.

29,150. I see there is an application from six crofters of Durine and Sangomore for a part of the farm of Keoldale, and an application from five of the crofters of Laid for a part of the farm of Eriboll, and a third from five of the crofters of Sangomore for a part of the farm of Balnakill. These seem to be the applications to which you refer?—Yes, that is meant for the whole of the townships, for the townships between Sangobeg and Smoo.

29,151. We cannot go into the work of the Crofters Commission here; but it is right perhaps to tell you that there may be a difficulty about that. Is it part of your proposal that crofters should be taken out of their holdings and settled in new holdings, or simply that the present holdings be extended?—That the present holdings be extended in this district; and there may be room for new holdings.

29,152. On the lands to which you refer?—I don't think there is, unless you begin at the end of the Kyle at Grudaidh and go along to Kilbreck.

29,153. Was that matter considered, or was it rather extension you had in view?—It was extension we had in view, and they generally spoke about removing too.

29,154. To whom did these suggestions of removal refer?—To the cottars; and some crofters would remove too.

29,155. Was it mainly cottars?—Cottars and crofters, but they don't approve of being under the Small Holdings Act.

29,156. Are there many cottars among your townships?—Not very many.

29,157. How many?—Only half a dozen, I suppose, or not so many.

29,158. Do these cottars pay rent?—I think they do pay 10s.

29,159. You mentioned the east side of Eriboll, and both sides of Loch Hope?—Yes.

29,160. The west side of Eriboll is where the township of Laid is?—The west side.

29,161. To what purpose do you think the east side of Loch Eriboll is suited?—It would suit the Laid crofters, who have a miserable place to live in.

29,162. Do you mean for settlement or for extension?—For settlement.

29,163. Do you think the land there is better than the land on the side they occupy?—Oh, much.

29,164. You said the place occupied by the Laid crofters is miserable; do you mean that the land is very poor?—Very poor: any person could see that.

29,165. It consists of moss and stone?—Moss and stone, nothing else.

29,166. Mr Sutherland.—What is the extent, do you know, of the land held in large farms; do you know the areas of the farms?—I am not sure, I heard 20,000 or 25,000 acres for Balnakill.

29,167. And what do you think is the area of Keoldale?—I cannot say.

29,168. What is the extent held by the crofters now?—I cannot tell you that either.

29,169. It is 3200 acres, and their arable won't be included in that I suppose. Would 4000 acres hold all the land in the occupation of the crofters?—I think so.

29,170. And what is the area of the parish, do you know?—I cannot exactly tell.

29,171. The area of the parish is 140,812 acres, and if you subtract the 4000 from that it leaves 136,812 acres. How many people now possess these 136,812 acres?—I think there are 68 crofters.

29,172. I am talking of the remainder outside: if you subtract the crofters' area from the area of the parish you have left the area in the possession of the sheep farmers; how many sheep farmers occupy these 136,812 acres?—Three.

29,173. So three families have 136,812 acres, and 69 families have 4000 acres; is that the distribution of the land?—Yes, I don't know if that is the area of the land or not.

29,174. In your opinion is that a state of matters that cries for redress?—I should think so, but that does not include the Rispond farm; there is an acreage of 3200 in the old pasture.

29,175. But you have got the Rispond farm now, haven't you?—Yes.

29,176. And is it included in the 3200?—No, it is not.

29,177. Well, add it then to what the crofters have got and that will bring it up to 7000 acres?—Yes.

29,178. If you subtract 7000 instead of 4000 you leave still 135,000 acres in the possession of how many families?—Three.

29,179. And 7000 in the possession of the 69 families?—Yes.

29,180. That then is the distribution of the land at the present time?—That is so.

29,181. You mentioned places where it would be possible to form new holdings or extend the present holdings. The farms were?—Keoldale and Balnaaill.

29,182. And, in your opinion, would these form suitable extensions of holdings for the people of this district?—Oh, certainly.

29,183. Would you now, if you had the opportunity, take the whole of that as extension of grazings for the existing holdings? Would you take the whole of the parts you mentioned? Would it be necessary in order to form a proper extension of the holdings of the present tenants?—Oh, no, it would not.

29,184. Would there be some left for the forming of new holdings provided it were available?—Oh, yes.

29,185. Then, the first thing to face would be the erection of buildings and the stocking of the land, provided you got it?—Yes.

29,186. Have you any fear that that would not be met by the people?—I think it would. About new holdings I know they would require some help, but as for extensions they could stock them I know.

29,187. They could stock them easily enough?—Oh, easily enough.

29,188. And I think you adduced as an argument in favour of that, that they had no difficulty in putting stock on Rispond farm when they got it?—No.

29,189. When did you come into possession of Rispond farm?—Three years ago, or a few years ago.

29,190. How long were the people out of possession of it?—Fifty years ago, since the Ceann-na-Beinne evictions.

29,191. So they were out forty-eight years, and then they got back the land out of which they were cleared?—Yes.

29,192. Now, with regard to the population we see along here, where did the people of these districts come from?—From the farms of Balnakill and Keoldale. [The Chairman.—The date of the order is 17th September 1890.]

29,193. It was in 1890 you came into possession of the Rispond farm?—Yes.

29,194. Where did these families come from that we see now in Sangobeg and in Leirin-mhor?—A few of them that were living in Ceann-na-Beinne, and the islands, and these places.

29,195. Eilean Hoan?—Yes, and some were living on Keoldale and Balnakill farms.

29,196. They were cleared off these large areas and put in there?—Yes.

29,197. You mentioned another place regarding which I have no doubt we will have direct evidence, that is Laid, on Loch Eriboll?—Yes.

29,198. When was that settlement formed?—I cannot tell: about forty or fifty years ago.

29,199. Did any of them come from these places

Durness, Sutherlandshire.

Donald Whyte.

that were cleared at that time?—I cannot tell: I suppose so.

29,200. Do you know anything about Strathmore?—No, but only what I was hearing about it from people who were evicted.

29,201. But have you ever been there yourself?—Many a time.

29,202. Is it in your opinion a place suitable for putting people in?—Yes, the best place that could be.

29,203. And are you aware of the population it sustained before?—No.

29,204. But you know that all these townships were occupied?—I know that all these townships were occupied.

29,205. And, in your opinion, are they as good places as Durine or Sangobeg?—Yes, and Leirin is the most miserable of all.

29,206. Is it more miserable than Laid?—Well, no: it is second to Laid.

29,207. You have heard, I have no doubt, a great deal of solicitude expressed on behalf of crofters with regard to putting them into places where they were not likely to succeed?—Oh, yes.

29,208. You are glad to hear it, aren't you?—Oh, yes, as a crofter that is natural enough.

29,209. But do you think there is much reality in it when it is expressed in order to prevent the people being put back into these places? Would there be much danger of their not succeeding there when they have succeeded in Durine?—There would be no danger.

29,210. Do you suffer from frosts here?—No.

29,211. Nor floods, more than other places?—No.

29,212. But you are of opinion, are you, that if they got an opportunity of forming holdings there they would be in better circumstances to try it than where they are now?—Oh, yes, of course. How can they thrive in the present circumstances?

29,213. You could show us these places that, in your opinion and the opinion of those you represent, are fit for the extension of grazings or forming new holdings?—Yes.

29,214. Mr Gordon.—How many crofters are there in Durness?—There are 68 crofters in the townships of Sangobeg, Leirinmor, Sangomore, Durine, and Bailevollich, and I think 19 or 18 in Laid, Loch Eriboll.

29,215. Never mind the Eriboll people, how many are there between Durness and Rispond?—Sixty-eight.

29,216. Now, do all these people participate in the extension of Rispond?—Yes.

29,217. The whole of the Durness crofters?—The whole of the Durness crofters, with the exception of Laid, Loch Eriboll.

29,218. How do you use the farm, is it for pasture, or arable; is there any part cultivated just now by the Durness crofters?—I think the Sangobeg crofters have got 4 or 5 acres between 11 of them.

29,219. And the rest of the hill ground is grazed by the stock of the whole of the townships?—By the stock of the whole of the townships.

29,220. Can you give me any idea of the number of stock upon the place altogether?—Yes, I think about 1400.

29,221. How would that compare with the stock that was on it before, in Mr Swanson's time?—I mean the whole of the pasture.

29,222. There are 1400 sheep upon the 7000 acres of grazing, is that what you mean?—Yes, that is what I mean.

29,223. Now you told us that the meeting whom you represented preferred rather to have an extension of your arable holdings and pasture than township pasture, is that so?—Not the township pasture, I meant hill pasture for the different townships between Sangobeg and Bailevollich.

29,224. Any new pasture you wanted was for that purpose?—Yes.

29,225. You want in the first place an extension of your arable holdings, and you also wish to have your present hill pasture extended?—Yes.

29,226. You have presently 7000 acres; now how much more pasture do you think you could profitably occupy?—As much again whatever, and more.

29,227. You could take 14,000 acres?—Yes.

29,228. That would be sheep grazing?—Sheep and cattle and horses.

29,229. Have you any idea how many cattle and horses there are in your townships?—No, but we will soon know.

29,230. How many cattle do you have yourself?—I have two cows and a stirk.

29,231. Would each of the 90 crofters have three beasts or more?—Oh, yes, they would average that.

29,232. That is nearly 300 cattle you have upon this pasture?—Yes.

29,233. And how much do you allow for each beast?—Five sheep.

29,234. And how many horses would you have?—I have a horse, some have two.

29,235. Have you any law among yourselves regulating the number of cattle and horses that a man may keep?—Oh, yes, the Common Grazing Regulation Act from the Crofter Commission.

29,236. That is not the Munro-Ferguson Act, is it?—Yes, Novar's Act.

29,237. Is that kept in force with you?—Well, we are trying to do so.

29,238. How many acres of arable land would the man have who has two horses?—Four and five.

29,239. Well, if there were two good well-fed horses they would eat nearly the whole of that?—But they buy most of the provender.

29,240. Is there any man holding only 4 or 5 acres entitled under the Novar Act to have two horses?—Yes, if he reduces his other stock.

29,241. Do you know any man who has two horses?—Yes.

29,242. Have they their full number of cattle too?—Well, they may have that too.

29,243. Therefore, the Act is not obeyed?—Not as yet, we could not obey it.

29,244. You have, say at least, 100 horses; that would be, at 6 sheep to the horse, equivalent to 600 sheep; and you have about 300 cattle, which at 5 sheep would be 1500; that is, roughly, for the cattle and the horses, 2000 sheep, and you have 1400 sheep, that is in all 3400 sheep you have on the 7000 acres. Don't you think that an excessive stocking?—But some of the crofters have no horse at all.

29,245. Well, how many horses; you said there was an average of one or two?—I did not say an average, but I said that some had two.

29,246. That would be fully an average of one?—No, only two or three have got two, and the crofters in Sangobeg have no horses, nor in Leirin either.

29,247. Is it spade husbandry they have?—Yes.

29,248. But there is no arable land in the vicinity they could get to extend their holdings?—No.

29,249. Where are the men whom you think would be inclined to flit from their present holdings?—In the southern townships.

29,250. You would be inclined to go yourself?—Yes.

29,251. It would require to be a good croft that you would go to?—Yes, if I got the holding on reasonable terms.

29,252. You mentioned the side of Loch Eriboll; where is the land there that is not under cultivation that you think would be suitable for new holdings?—What I mentioned about Heilem.

29,253. How many people would you put in there?—I cannot say.

29,254. Do you know any other part of the east side of Loch Eriboll that would be fit for crofters except Heilem and the home farm?—Oh, yes, both sides of Loch Hope.

29,255. But in Eriboll. You mentioned Heilem, and I know that place; is there any other place along Loch Eriboll where you could put in crofters?—Yes, Freisgill and Badlehamhish.

29,256. Is it a good place down about Freisgill?—Not very good, but it is very good down about Badlehamhish.

Durness, Sutherlandshire.

Donald Whyte.

Durness, Sutherlandshire. Donald Whyte.

29,257. The Melness crofters declined to have anything to do with it, so perhaps you would not like it either. I am afraid you have run away a little too far as to the number of people you could put on to Loch Eriboll. There is a little bit on Heilem, but I don't know any other place till you go down to Freisgill? There is Achlochy.

29,258. How many people would you put in there?—I cannot say.

29,259. That is the difficulty you have in making a general statement. There is no room for crofters in Loch Eriboll except at that one place. Take Loch Hope; where is the land there?—Arnaboll and Badmheon; I don't know exactly the names of the other townships on the east side.

29,260. And Poll-Ath-roinn?—Yes.

29,261. The shepherd has the whole ground there in hand. I think he has the whole in cultivation that will cultivate. You have the green ground of Loch Hope, from Hope Lodge away upwards?—Yes.

29,262. Now, if you take that green ground off the farm of Melness what are you going to do with the back of it, the floe land in the centre?—Give that to the crofters as well.

29,263. Do you think they would manage to get people to go there and be able to occupy the whole of the farm of Melness?—About the farm of Melness I cannot say anything, because I am not acquainted there. Melness is not in our parish at all.

29,264. Neither is the east side of Loch Hope, but you mentioned it?—The east and west are in the parish of Durness.

29,265. I am afraid that all the ground that you mentioned as suitable for new holdings in that side of the country would be reduced to some half a dozen available places: now that would not go far to relieve a congested district. I merely wish to point that out to you?—I pointed out another place between the end of the Kyle there at Keoldale and up to Cambreck.

29,266. Mr Forsyth.—What size of holding would you contemplate as a desirable one in this district for the crofter, I mean as to arable land?—From 15 to 20 acres.

29,267. And a proper share of a hill?—Yes.

29,268. How many sheep would you like the man to have?—About 100.

29,269. As many as that. Would that be held as a club stock, or as individual sheep running on common pasture? Which system do you prefer?—Individual sheep running on hill pasture.

29,270. You have not tried the club farm system in this district at all?—No, never.

29,271. Have you considered it?—Oh, yes, we have considered it, but we think the other system would suit best.

29,272. You think the individual system is cheaper? Yes, I think so.

29,273. Do you find any trouble in managing your hill under this individual system?—No.

29,274. But supposing your grazings were very much extended, supposing that in place of the comparatively small acreage you have now, you had really a large hill to deal with, say 10,000, 12,000 or 14,000 acres, don't you think it would be more economical to work your sheep properly under a club system?—No, I don't think it.

29,275. You still would keep them under the individual system?—Yes.

29,276. Don't you think that under that system the individual lots would all come in to the nearer parts of the grazings, that the sheep would not be properly distributed over the hill, and that the nearer parts would thereby be overstocked?—We would have shepherds to do the work properly.

29,277. It would take probably more than one shepherd for such a large grazing?—Yes.

29,278. And still you would hold the individual system?—Yes.

29,279. You don't think you would sell your sheep better as in one lot off a club farm? Don't you think you would get better prices under a proper system of arrangement?—I don't think so.

29,280. Then, as to the arable land, say 15 to 20 acres, would you be able to cultivate that land with an average of one pony apiece?—Yes, I think we would; we could have it in shifts, and it would be much less labour than we have at present. Durness, Sutherlandshire. Donald Whyte.

29,281. Do you think you would be able to agree among each other so that one pony would do on the average, for say 20 acres of land? I am pointing out this, because I see the great number of horses that are kept everywhere?—We were ever agreed.

29,282. You have been able to agree in the past about ploughing together?—Yes.

29,283. Have you had any system of rotation of crop here in your small holdings?—Well, no, the holdings are so small, and if the crop failed there would be nothing for the cattle.

29,284. What has been the system in the past, has it been oats and potatoes alternately?—Yes.

29,285. Have you been sowing any grass seeds?—Some do so.

29,286. But no regular system?—No regular system.

29,287. Is it in your mind that if you had larger crofts you would take up a regular system and sow grass seeds?—Yes.

29,288. Then, as to your cattle, is it milk cows you keep only?—Yes.

29,289. Do you rear much young stock?—We do sometimes, but there is no price for them now.

29,290. Then, if you had larger crofts, would you increase your number of cattle, or would you keep mostly to the milk business?—We would increase our cattle as we have no milk at all. There is not much milk to be seen in Durness.

29,291. You mean that the milk now goes mostly to the calf?—Yes, there is no pasture for the cattle and they cannot have milk.

29,292. Then you are confident that the majority of the men here would work crofts properly if they had bigger ones?—Yes, there are no better farmers, I suppose, in Sutherlandshire than the Durness crofters.

29,293. The Chairman.—You said just now there was very little milk in Durness?—Yes.

29,294. What is done with the milk which the crofters use so far as they have any?—Done with it! I think it is little enough for their porridge.

29,295. But have the children milk?—Well, some.

29,296. Have some of the crofters in Durness no milk at all?—Yes, there are some of the crofters in Durness that never had much milk, they might have a little drop.

29,297. But the supply of milk is quite insufficient?—Quite insufficient.

29,298. Have any of the crofters a sufficient supply of milk?—I don't think so.

29,299. Then do those who have rather more than the others give assistance to those who have less?—Yes, they do, that is the case, I know, in many instances.

29,300. I suppose there is no use made of anything in lieu of milk, such as Swiss milk?—No.

29,301. I understand on the question of available land that your position is this, that you and those whom you represent are able to speak with confidence of the farms of Balnakill and Keoldale?—Yes.

29,302. These are lands immediately marching with your holdings and of which you have a considerable knowledge?—That is so.

29,303. But when you come to speak of the banks of Loch Hope or Loch Eriboll, while you gave us as much information as you had, I suppose, you do not feel yourself able to speak so confidently of that part of the country as of those two farms?—That is the case.

29,304. But you invite our attention to the banks of Loch Eriboll and Loch Hope for our consideration, without venturing upon a dogmatic opinion?—Yes, that is it.

29,305. Mr Sutherland.—I would like to ask you with regard to the questions Mr Forsyth put to you with the object of ascertaining about a club stock, have you any experience of holding stock in a club?—No, we never tried that system.

Durness, Sutherlandshire.

Donald Whyte.

29,306. So I presume you are not in a position to say that the club system is worse, or less adapted to your circumstances than the individual system?—Well, we had a talk over it many a time, but perhaps we don't understand the thing.

29,307. As a matter of fact, you had not practical experience of it?—No.

29,308. But you had of managing it on the individual system?—Yes.

29,309. May I ask you, with regard to this question of club stock, if you can think in your own mind of any reason why there has been no club stock in Sutherlandshire? Have you formed any opinion regarding it, that whereas it is somewhat common in other parts of the Highlands it is not in Sutherlandshire at all? Has any reason occurred to your mind why that should be so?—Not at present.

29,310. Does a club stock not depend upon the amount of grazing a man has?—Yes.

29,311. Do you think it would?—Yes.

29,312. If he has only a trifling area of grazing it would not be worth while forming a club system?—I think that is the reason.

29,313. And has the idea been mooted at all among you until you got the recent extension?—No.

29,314. Because there was no necessity for it, is that the reason?—Yes, that is the reason.

29,315. But you are not prepared to say upon the merits of the question that the individual system is better?—No, I don't say that; we never tried the system.

29,316. But you have considered the points that Mr Forsyth brought before you as to the advantage that might arise from managing it on a club system?—Yes.

29,317. Uniformity of stock would be much better than the way it is now?—Yes.

29,318. And one transaction instead of 100 transactions?—Yes.

29,319. You think that might be an advantage?—Yes.

29,320. Then, with regard to the amount of stock you have in the grazing, I think you have stated that you agreed among yourselves?—Yes, we agreed among ourselves.

29,321. And the Act of Parliament does not prescribe the number of stock you keep, does it?—Yes, the regulations we got.

29,322. But the Act of Parliament that you don't obey. Is the number of stock a man may keep laid down in the Act of Parliament?—No, I don't think so.

29,323. It simply gives you power to form committees in order to agree among yourselves and make regulations that would be sanctioned by the Crofters Commission?—Yes, and by the landlord as well.

29,324. But you would be quite prepared to admit, I suppose, that there is too much stock on your grazing?—Yes, I think so.

29,325. From the areas that have been stated to-day you say that you have already close upon 7000 acres (that is overstating it, I have no doubt), and that you have got 1400 sheep upon that?—Yes.

29,326. Exclusive of horses and cattle?—Yes.

29,327. Taking the sheep alone then you have only 5 acres for each of the sheep you have got?—Yes.

29,328. Is that not a very high stock?—Yes.

29,329. Do you know any large farmers that hold as much stock as that on their grazings?—I do not think so.

29,330. Do you know what the common rule is for that?—No.

29,331. You have not heard it?—No.

29,332. Would you be surprised to hear that they have 10 acres for every sheep they have?—I was not aware of that.

29,333. It has been stated before us several times. What then do you think is the fair deduction from that state of matters?—The fair deduction?

29,334. Don't you hear a great deal about the difficulty of putting stock upon the land if the crofters got it?—Yes.

29,335. Have you found any difficulty?—No.

29,336. You have put too much stock on it?—Yes, that is the case.

29,337. So you think that argument vanishes?—I think so.

29,338. Well, then, as to the capability of certain places for making new settlements, in your opinion, is that power determined by the number of green spots that you will find?—I don't think so.

29,339. When the people of Sangobeg and of Durine were placed down there, was there any green ground for them to settle on, do you know?—I don't think so.

29,340. You think that all the land you see hereabout was reclaimed out of the heather, is that your opinion?—Yes, that is my opinion; it is true enough.

29,341. You have seen it done yourself?—No, it was done before my time.

29,342. But have you seen no land reclaimed from the heather in this district?—Yes, a little.

29,343. And you think it would be much easier—you know some lands under heather that would be very much better subjects, do you, for reclaiming?—Yes, I do.

29,344. Mr Macaulay, Solicitor, Golspie, Agent for his Grace the Duke of Sutherland.—With regard to your applications for additional grazings, do these applications apply simply to the lower part of these farms of Keoldale and Balnakill?—To the adjoining portions.

29,345. But the fact is that these are the lower parts?—These are the lower parts.

29,346. Of the farms?—I suppose so.

29,347. And the remainder of the farm is very much higher than these parts in question?—No, the most of the farms are lower than that piece, that stretch that goes up to the Big Bridge for which we applied.

29,348. But your application does not apply to any of the hill ground proper, does it?—Yes.

29,349. To how much of it, a great proportion of it?—Well, say Sartle, that is considered a hirsel or a shepherd's herding for 800 or 900 sheep. There is one shepherd they have there, that is on the Balnakill farm.

29,350. But in your applications for land in this immediate district in the Keoldale farm, the lands referred to lie comparatively low, don't they?—Yes.

29,351. Are you aware that during lambing time sheep are brought down from the higher parts of Keoldale to these parts?—Not to these parts.

29,352. To that neighbourhood?—Not to that neighbourhood. Of course, the sheep on Sartle, I think, lamb there.

29,353. Well, what are you going to do with the remainder of the lands of Keoldale if you take away this portion?—I think they would have enough.
